The picture he secretly hid in the attic of his home. As the years rolled on he became more evil, but those who heard the stories about him could not believe them, for he always had the look of one who kept himself unspotted from the world. But there were moments of anguish of which no one knew, the times when he slinked up to his attic, drew aside the draperies that concealed a portrait, and saw for himself how his wickedness was indelibly stamped upon his picture. He would examine it with minute interest, and sometimes he would laugh when he realized that to the world he was still young and pure in appearance. One day he determined to get rid of this hateful reminder of his vices. He smiled as he picked up a knife, and smiled again as he sunk the knife into the breast of the horrible painting. There was a terrible cry, and when the servants broke in the door, they found hanging upon the wall a splendid portrait of their master, as they had last seen him, in all the wonder of his exquisite youth and beauty. Lying on the floor was a dead man, in evening dress, with a knife in his heart. He was with-

The Most Stupendous Dramatic offering in all the Annals

GLANCE over the history of the world's play-acting. There are but few milestones: the Passion Play at Oberammergau, the National Theatre of Bayreuth, the Rhine Plays of Wagner, Shakespeare.

To make the point, recall Oberammergau, for instance.

At Oberammergau, the Passion Play extends for a solid week, without intermission or cessation. The characters are played year after year by the same actors, whose lives are devoted to this alone, and whose very natures become that of their parts. Thus is the life of Jesus in all its beauty and realism presented to the pilgrims who visit Oberammergau for the play alone, and Jesus and his doctrines are made real to all believers.

The Passion Play has been the most comprehensive attempt to show a great figure in all the history of the world.

And now comes a more broad and far-reaching enactment—a dramatic presentation of Abraham Lincoln.

And with the idea appears the most impressive, the most vital motion picture classic of the epoch.

A Cycle of Photo-Dramas based on the life of Lincoln, authentic and true to the life of the Great Emancipator is in truth, the Epic of America, for Abraham Lincoln embodies the very spirit of the Republic. Because Lincoln rose from the lowest rank and reached the pinnacle of all the world; because Lincoln's every act was the reflection of our finest ideals; because Lincoln knew no master but Liberty—Lincoln is the typification of America and the noblest example for American manhood and womanhood.

In all the pages of history, no character so inspires all America, no character so touches the deepest recesses of our hearts.

The pages of story and history are dumb. Give America her Lincoln as he was! Show the rising generation what Lincoln did! See him as he really looked, acted, prayed, aided, led, wooed, fought, worked, studied, was born and died.

And you have t..e most popular motion picture character ever seen on the screen. There is no need to popularize a Lincoln picture. Every school, church, society, newspaper, magazine is making a moving picture Lincoln more needed and more craved for.

The Lincoln Sentiment

HIS life was a great adventure. No melodrama ever pictured could compare with the excitement, intrigue, romance of his brief years.

Born ugly, poor, out of sight of civilization, with his two hands he reared himself, paid to educate himself, rose, conquered, and then at the helm of the shattered Ship of State, he led America to the position from whence she rises to inspire all the world.

Hence Lincoln is the national character—the beacon light, the example par excellence for all America.

To concentrate all this national interest in a series of photoplays is the plan of the Charter Features Corporation.

A conservative, broad-visioned policy of giving America what she wants, is the intention of the Charter Features Corporation. Backing up the intention is the capital to buy all that is needed to impress the motion picture public with the fact that the Charter Features Corporation is to be the foremost producer of high-class features in series form.

Benjamin Chapin as LINCOLN

The foremost Lincoln Mover

WHEN the Charter Features Corporation decided on the Lincoln Idea for its initial bow to the public, there was only one man in all the country to lead and inspire the work.

Of the host of Lincoln workers, lecturers, actors, playwrights, essayists, impersonators, there has stood out head high and foremost for fifteen years—Benjamin Chapin. By physical appearance, manner, ideals—Lincoln. He has come to be known throughout America as "The Lincoln Man."

But if Chapin were merely the the actor in the Cycle, he would not have been sufficient. So we are fortunate in that Chapin means more, far more to the Lincoln movement. Chapin is the first and premier figure in all the Lincoln propaganda. Chapin is leading America to a better understanding of its noble President, believing in so doing he is spreading a gospel of true Americanism.

He has believed always in his mission. And in proof of it he has given his life to it.

Chapin has been honored by all who knew Lincoln. And the great public that flocked to him in vaudeville, and the legitimate stage, and that loved him on the Lyceum Circuit and the lecture platform, will follow him to the movie theatre.

Announces

Based on the Life of Lincoln

Under the direction of Benjamin Chapin, the foremost Lincoln Authority and Impersonator. 29 productions in all—each a 4 or 5 reeler.

Based on the life of Abraham Lincoln—each unit of the Cycle is a distinct entity, a drama of supreme force—and a feature of single-program intention—yet fitting into the progression of incidents that occupied the career of the Great Emancipator.

Not made to educate but to entertain. No picture more exciting or well made. Yet an education anyway.

Forces in Combine

Not only has the Cycle of Lincoln Plays the obvious inherent value and popularity due to its chief character, but allied already with Charter Features Corporation is a score of forces which must mean thousands of dollars worth of advertising to your theatre.

ASSOCIATIONS

The Lincoln Societies throughout the country are to back the Cycle. Leading Historical Societies will be in sympathy with the pictures as a big interest winning attraction for their own sakes.

Sociological Organizations, Literary Clubs, Writers' Associations, the Woman Suffrage Organizations, the Prohibition and Anti-Prohibition leaders—all of these and many more will be such boosters that if they were on the payroll they couldn't be more helpful.

PUBLICATIONS

Such of the organizations as are allied with the Charter Corporation which have their own official organs, will carry the stories which will send audiences to the theatres. In addition newspapers will carry the work as a feature. And in addition the most original step has been taken whereby national magazines will carry the work as a feature and an assistant to theatres. Religious, class, negro, farm, political publications all will be used to bring the pictures to the attention of as wide a portion of the country as it is possible to reach.

PUBLISHERS

Publishers of Lincoln books are also tying up with the movement and lending their advertising to the general end while availing themselves of their particular profits.

EDUCATIONAL BOARDS

Alliances all over the country are being made with the local Board of Education and a plan of assuring a certain attendance at all Lincoln pictures through this alliance will be one of the unique sidelights to a general merchandising plan.

RELIGIOUS AND ETHICAL ORGANIZATIONS

So, too, following the examples of the Educational Board will the religious and ethical organizations join on the same co-operative basis as noted above and will themselves form part of that guaranteed attendance which the Corporation will be able to assure its exhibitors. Curiously nearly every religious sect and faith claims Lincoln for its very own. (It should be noted here too, that the several hundred school and college papers throughout the country will be allied in spreading the stories of the Cycle production.)

ADVERTISING

But in addition to all of this publicity, the Charter Features Corporation has employed an advertising department of men of recognized ability who have prepared advertising, certainly the most unique ever seen in the memory of any moving picture man. But the particular point about the advertising that should interest any exhibitor is this

Instead of spending the appropriation nationally, over the whole country, it will be contributed individually to the exhibitors and spent in the immediate vicinity of them under their names and for them alone. In this way any exhibitor showing the Cycle knows that whatever advertising is done will not be bent to help any but him.

First Release

announced in forth-coming issue of the World

But no order will be received until the entire moving picture fraternity has had an opportunity to investigate all of the ramifications. The tendency is so generally to rush an exhibitor off his feet by the first flush of enthusiasm that this more conservative method will give all exhibitors ample time to see whether or not they want to join. Therefore, we appoint the

HIS I. O. U. (July 16).—The little newsgirl had never heard of widowed mothers' pensions and if anyone told her that the state should contribute to the support of the little family she would have been very much surprised. Ever since her father was killed in an accident she and her mother worked hard to provide food and shelter for themselves and the girl's little baby brother. A small boy in an orphan asylum concluded to run away. No one in the big institution cared about him and he determined to seek his fortune in the big world. He found the world altogether too big and unfeeling, but he found one sympathizer and friend, the little newsgirl. She listened with great interest to his story and then invested fifty cents of her well-earned money in newspapers for the waif. Under her guidance he started his career as a full-fledged seller of the daily news, but his vocation was short lived for an uncle, who had just learned of the death of the boy's parents appeared and took the youngster away to his handsome home. All the little girl had to remember her young friend by was an I. O. U. in boyish handwriting for the fifty cents she had advanced him. The boy had been so excited over his new prospects that he had forgotten to repay his debt.

The girl grew to womanhood and secured permission from the city to conduct a newsstand at a busy corner. A political hanger-on, envying the girl's success, induced the mayor to give him the newsstand privilege at that street corner, and the girl was dispossessed. She had no friends to turn to and only a peculiar discovery enabled her to triumph over her opponent. In a newspaper she read an account of the rise to power of a young state senator and recognized in the statesman the boy she befriended, when she called at his office he did not remember her name and refused to see her, so she literally took her life in her hands in a daring attempt to get to his office. She succeeded and presented the tattered I. O. U. to her acquaintance of years ago. The young senator recalled the debt and, after he listened to her story, called up the mayor on the phone and angrily ordered him to restore the newsstand privilege to the girl. The young man was a power in politics and the mayor meekly obeyed. So the childhood friendship of man and girl was renewed and in time it ripened into love. The little newspaper stand passed into other hands while its former owner presided over the senator's house. The senator and his wife are often asked by their children the meaning of the I. O. U. signed with the senator's name, but only tender smiles have rewarded their earnest questions.

TRACKED THROUGH THE SNOW (July 11).—A little girl was suddenly orphaned by the death of her parents and she was sent to her grandfather, an old miner, in the West. The old man was not popular with the other miners, for he was bad tempered and a gossip. The coming of the little child changed all this, for she was such a favorite that the rough miners could stand even the crusty old grandfather for her sake, while the crusty old man soon ceased to be grumpy and became a very agreeable old man. The old miner had very bad luck with his claim, but was too proud to ask the aid which the rough men around would gladly have given. Only his little granddaughter knew and she promised her grandfather never to tell. The young sheriff of the country was in pursuit of two dangerous outlaws for whose arrest $500 was to be awarded. He showed the notice to the old man, who reflected bitterly that if he could win the reward his financial troubles would be over. The little girl stood gravely by listening to the conversation. Several days later the sheriff and his posse were on the trail of the outlaws, but lost them in the mountains. Long search failed to reveal any trace of them, and the posse returned to town.

In the meantime the two fugitives, lost in the storm, found their way to the old miner's cabin. The old man and the child recognized the two outlaws from the circular the sheriff had given them, but were powerless to do anything. While the old miner, at the outlaw's command, provided them with food and drink, the child's alert brain was searching for some means to outwit the desperadoes and secure the reward. Finally inspiration came. A note in childish handwriting fastened under the dog's long hair and the child, watching her opportunity, opened the door and permitted the dog to escape. The bandits pulled the child back from the door, but did not worry about the loss of the dog, little dreaming of the note concealed on his body. The dog reached the sheriff's office in safety and the posse arrived in time to effect the capture of the outlaws. The reward was paid to the old miner and from that time on fortune smiled upon him and he was able to provide liberally for his little grandchild.

MERCY ON A CRUTCH (Two Parts—July 13).—Born in a prospector's camp, orphaned by a flood and taken care of by relatives to whom she was unwelcome, Mercy grew up dodging blows and curses with equal dexterity and indifferent success. Once while dodging she fell and was badly hurt. When she arose from her sick bed she had the choice of walking forever with a crutch or not walking at all. She chose the crutch. In the primitive society of Rhyolite, the mining camp town, where Mercy lived, there was no niche for a cripple. All girls of her own age shunned her. A stranger rode into Rhyolite one day—a man whom no one knew and who gave short replies to the inquisitive. Only once did he pay attention to anyone in town and that was when a lounger seized Mercy's crutch and tantalizingly held it beyond her reach, but the tormentor quickly surrendered it when the stern-faced stranger demanded its return. The stranger rode away and was not seen in town again. "Wiley shall be caught today," the sheriff declared to his posse several days later. The men exchanged significant glances, as one of their number uncoiled his lariat from the saddle bow. Mercy overheard the remark and was worried, for she felt that she knew who they meant. She had seen the stranger in the mountains hiding, and fancied she saw him creep into a deserted cave.

The ride that the little cripple made to save the fugitive is still talked of in the range country. She reached the cave in safety, and found there the stranger, wounded and alone. Escape was impossible for the sheriff's posse soon arrived and surrounded the cave, but Mercy, with leveled rifle, defied them to approach. Then the sheriff surprised them all. "Don't fire boys," he called to the posse, "This here is Ned Franey, the new marshall over at Vista." Half in a daze Mercy heard the stranger explain that he had trailed Wiley, the outlaw to the cave, and after a desperate fight, had overpowered him. The posse disappeared into the cave and came back, dragging a handcuffed prisoner. "But there's going to be no necktie social, boys," explained Franey. "He's my prisoner and he stands trial at the county seat." The posse reluctantly agreed and led the prisoner off. Franey turned to the girl, who looked away in confusion. "What's yer name," he inquired. Mercy, with, averted face, told him. Franey took her two hands in his and drew her to him. "Mercy Tanner," he repeated. "Ef that ain't the prettiest name!" And so happiness came to little Mercy, who had never known it before.

FALSTAFF.

MME. BLANCHE, BEAUTY DOCTOR (July 9).—A young college boy had been left a comfortable fortune by his father, but he had been a generous spender, and at last he was summoned home by his guardian, a wealthy merchant, and told that there was little left of his property. "You are an idler, and you couldn't earn a cent, if you tried," the keen old business man brutally told him. "But I will give you a chance to make good. Whatever you earn during the following week will be the salary I will pay you for the next three years."

The guardian was a very aggressive, unfeeling individual, and his clerks lived in daily terror of his wrath, but his clever little stenographer, who liked the boy, pointed out the merchant's vulnerable spot. "He is afraid of his wife," she said. "She distributes the coin. All he does is sign the checks." Then she told him that the wife took great pride in her personal appearance and suggested a plan by which he might best his guardian. When the merchant's wife saw everywhere advertisements telling of wonders accomplished by Madame Blanche, the famous beauty specialist, who made grandmothers look like debutantes, she determined to investigate. She did so, and walked into a carefully-prepared trap, for the college boy, in wig and gown, made a most impressive Madame Blanche, while the stenographer, carefully disguised in a gray wig and old-fashioned clothes, completely deceived her. She felt that a woman so old should realize that nothing could be done for her, but when the screen about the chair was thrown aside and she saw that the wrinkles in the patient's face had vanished, that she looked like a young girl, all her doubts vanished and she decided to engage Madame Blanche's services.

"My terms are $500 in advance," replied "Madame," but the merchant's wife paid, and, bearing that in mind the wonderful transformation she had just seen she always considered that the treatment made her, also, a creature beautiful to behold. When the merchant was called upon to live up to his promise, the prospect of paying $500 a week to a college boy for three years almost staggered him, but he was a man of his word and kept it. However, the boy soon showed such keen business ability that the merchant never regretted his bargain, although close observance gave the young man's little wife credit for much of his success. The old merchant's wife has searched the city vainly for Madame Blanche's beauty parlor, which closed soon after her visit there. "Madame Blanche" is wonderful, she said, to the junior partner's wife, "and my dear, one of her oldest customers resembles you greatly." But she did not notice the quiet smile on the younger woman's face.

DOT ON THE DAY LINE BOAT (July 16).—In Wall street the financier's name was spoken in whispers; in his own office his employees cringed before him, and it was tradition along newspaper row that no writer had ever obtained an interview with him. On one occasion it was particularly important to learn what the Great Man meant to do in a certain financial emergency. One reporter reached his august presence pretending that he came with a secret message from a brother financier. He saw the great man, confessed that he had gained admission by a trick, begged for a few crumbs of news, but the great man simply glared at him, pressed a button, which summoned a large, very strong man, indicated the reporter and the bouncer did the rest.

In the outer office were gathered a number of other reporters, and they trembled when the door of the private office opened and the large man emerged smiling and dragging the unhappy reporter after him. One of the reporters who did not wait to be thrown out was a pretty young girl, who wrote interestingly under the name of "Dorothy Dimples." She was engaged to the young man who had been evicted and she swore vengeance. She made it her business to keep an eye on the movements of the financier and when he took a boat trip to Albany, she was close on his trail. The financier, despite his gruffness in business, was a loving husband and a kind father. On the boat his attention was attracted to a pretty girl, who was weeping bitterly and he tried to comfort her. She told him how she was going back to boarding school. He talked soothingly to her and was delighted when he found that she dried her tears and told him confidingly that he was "a nice man just like Uncle Alfred." Then he told her his name and was pleased when he discovered that the little school girl heard of him. It was a thoroughly enjoyable trip to Albany. The girl was such an interested listener, and he took delight in discussing financial affairs with her. Then a young man with a kodak came along the deck, and the girl insisted that they have their picture taken together, telling him that when she grew up it would give her such pleasure to show the picture to her little girls and tell them how she had met the Great Man, and how he had made her forget her lonesomeness.

The Great Man was very happy, that is until the next day when he got the New York papers and saw the interview that "Dorothy Dimples" had landed with him. The "innocent school girl" did not know anything about financial affairs—Oh; no! her story created a sensation in Wall street. It was a blow to the financier and now he hates reporters more than ever. "Dorothy Dimples," however does not care; she landed "a scoop" which always brings joy to a good newspaper man or woman, and, incidentally she avenged the man she loved.

THE SILENT CO-ED (July 2).—The girls of Jones College had for years been accustomed to see their basketball team defeated by the strenuous young women who wore the Blue and Gold of Harford College, but when they received a challenge from the girls of a city settlement house, they anticipated an easy victory. The settlement girls knew absolutely nothing about Greek and Algebra, and four of them knew mighty little about basketball, but the fifth, the little, gum chewing captain, outplayed the entire college team and scored an easy victory for the settlement. The college girls knew a basketball player when they saw one, and after much persuasion induced the settlement girl to enter college and play on their team, the wealthy girls to pay all expenses. The new star of the five became known as the "Silent Co-ed" by the boys of Jones College, for she had been cautioned to be quiet in the presence of strangers, as her line of talk was some queer. The janitor of the settlement house, an earnest, hard-working young man, had long been an ardent suitor of the settlement girl, and when he received a letter from her, telling about a "Percy Boy" who brought her violets he determined that the time has come to end her college education.

The day arrived when the game with Harford College was to take place, and the Jones girls felt sure that with their new star they would score an easy victory, but just before the game started the janitor turned up at the college and demanded to see his sweetheart. He was a rough young man and refused to listen to the pleadings of the captain of the team, who saw all hope of victory fading away. Suddenly a bevy of pretty girls surrounded him and hurried him protesting into a nearby motor car. Before he could recover from his bewilderment the car was speeding off into the country. In spite of his protests his fair captors refused to stop the car, while in the college gymnasium the "Silent Co-Ed" performed prodigies of skill and brought victory to Jones College. Well, she didn't marry her "Percy Boy," for the janitor in his forceful way convinced her, and as she told Percy when he asked her for her answer as to whether she would be his: "I have spilled your words to my steady and he says it can't be did."

THE HIRED GIRL (Two Parts—July 6).—Sally Smith, a poor girl, hires out to the rich Widow Smith who is no relation of hers. Sally is forced to work very hard while Dora Smith, the widow's daughter, is always having a good time. Dora is invited to a party where Henry, the idol of the village, is to be present. Her mother orders that a beautiful frock which has just arrived in town, be sent to the house, as she intends to buy it for Dora to wear to the party. The package is delivered at the kitchen door. It is directed simply to Miss Smith. Sally receives it, thinking that some unknown fairy godmother has made it possible for her to go to the party. She is overcome with happiness. Because the dress does not arrive, Dora gives up attending the function. But Sally goes in the beautiful gown, and Henry immediately falls in love with her. The widow and daughter discover what has become of the dress. They go to the party to arrest Sally for stealing it. But Mr. Crocker, the store keeper, tells them that as the frock was not paid for, it is not their property, and that this makes the arrest illegal. He then gives the frock to Sally. Later, Henry marries his Cinderella.

A TEN-CENT ADVENTURE (July 13).—Bill, the biggest boy in the school, abuses one of the smaller pupils and then puts the blame on Joe, the son of a poor widow. Joe is punished by the teacher. But after school he calls the bully to account and worsts him in a fistic encounter. He also protects Dorothea, the pretty little daughter of the bank president, from the unwelcome attentions of the bully, and she rewards him by inviting him to her birthday party. But the poor boy has no money to buy Dorothea a present. He is a young man of advanced ideas, however, and so applies at the local bank for a loan of ten cents. The bank president issues the tiny loan with all formality, and the poor boy buys the present and goes to the party. A week later, Joe's loan falls due. He earns the money and hurries away to repay the bank. Arriving after closing hours, he enters a store next door, and finds himself among crooks, who are absorbed in breaking into the bank. Joe hides. Following the bandits into the bank, he manages to make his way into a private office where he calls up the bank president on the phone. The police arrive. In the gun fight, Joe is accidentally wounded. The bank president gives the boy's mother a substantial sum of money as a reward of her son's bravery. Dorothea and Joe pledge to be friends all their lives.

RELIANCE.

THE FORTIFICATION PLANS (July 7).—Lieutenants Lydell and Selbert are members of Major Steever's staff in the department of fortification construction. The young men are good friends, though both love Marcia, the daughter of their chief. Not until Lieutenant Lydell saves Marcia's baby sister from drowning, does the girl realize that it is Lydell whom she really loves. Selbert, quick to see that she has made up her mind, casts about for means to win Marcia for himself. He overhears Lydell indignantly refusing to sell certain newly completed plans to Paul Zare, who offers him a handsome bribe. Selbert is greatly in need of funds to cover his gambling debts. He steals the plans, barters them to the spy, and then sets about to fasten the crime upon his rival. This is nearly accomplished when, to the astonishment of both Lydell and Selbert, the "spy," Zare, appears, salutes the Major, and returns into his keeping the stolen papers. Zare is an employee in the secret service. The guilty officer is brought to justice, and Lydell is rewarded with promotion and the girl he loves.

THE HEADLINERS (Two Parts—July 10).—The manager of a vaudeville theater at Coney Island is advised that his headline act cannot go on the dates scheduled. In the emergency he engages Gabriel Castinara, the wonderful life guard swimmer, and advertises him in a sensational diving stunt. An Italian Strolling Players' troupe also is featured at the theater. It includes an old clown, Punelli, with his performing dog, and Punelli's beautiful daughter, Beatrice, who sings Sicilian songs to Michael Busoni's mandolin. When Gabriel and Beatrice meet, they discover in one another old sweethearts back in Italy. Suddenly Busoni flings himself upon the life-guard with murderous intent. The struggling men are separated. Then Gabriel tells the story of an ancient grudge which has to do with the killing of his father by the father of Busoni, and his own accidental killing of Busoni, the elder. He had promised Beatrice that he would not be avenged, but, meeting his father's murderer unexpectedly, they had been led to quarrel, and Busoni had dropped dead of heart failure. Gabriel had escaped the police and made his way to America, whither he learned Beatrice had gone. Michael Busoni plots Gabriel's death. But through his own carelessness, the theater catches fire. Gabriel braves smoke and flame to save the girl and her old father. Michael loses his life.

ROYAL.

THEY RAN FOR MAYOR (July 10).—The Schultz family and the Duffy family live in a two-family house. Father Schultz and father Duffy are both running for mayor against Levi, the independent candidate. Schultz's son, Frantz, is in love with Duffy's daughter, Maggie. Their parents are so bitter that they will not allow the young folks to speak. Duffy even puts up a spite fence in the yard. On election day, Schultz attempts to draw the crowd with a German band, while Duffy uses a phonograph. Both lose their constituents to Levi, who furnishes sandwiches and beer. Schultz and Duffy unite against a common enemy. They rain bricks against the Levi platform. But, in the end, Levi is elected—and the defeated families are left upon a friendly basis.

DOMINO.

THE FAILURE (Two Parts—July 1).—Jim Blake, a prospector, living near Bennett, a western mining town, is a failure. He works a worthless claim near his shack. At Lucky Strike Mine, a few miles away, everything is booming. Stine, the foreman, gets into trouble with the miners over the dismissal of one of their members, and the angry men send a delegation to the mine owner. They threaten to strike unless the drunken Stine is discharged. The foreman, questioned, becomes insulting to his employer, who discharges him. Jim Blake's six-year-old child is dangerously ill. The doctor has refused to make another call unless Blake pays at least a part of his bill. The grocer at Bennett also has cut off Blake's credit. Accidentally, the desperate prospector learns that the incoming Thursday night stage carries a big pay-roll for Lucky Strike Mine. He makes up his mind to rob the coach. Meanwhile, Stine has learned of the pay-roll and also plans to hold up the stage. The following night, Blake, shaven and disguised, arrives at the spot he has selected for the robbery, only to find that another desperado is before him. He watches the hold-up, sees Stine wounded, sees him, despite this, make off with the treasure, and the stage drive away like mad for the sheriff. Blake finds Stine lying unconscious from his wound. He helps himself to ninety dollars of the pay-roll, leaving the rest in the thief's possession. Blake pays his bill at the store with three twenty-dollar gold pieces. The storekeeper's suspicions are aroused and he informs the sheriff. The rest of the money Blake gives to the doctor, who goes home with him to his sick child. The following morning the sheriff arrives at Blake's shack. The prospector sees him coming and makes his getaway, the officer and posse in hot pursuit. Blake's horse is wounded and he falls. Handcuffed and helpless, he confesses to the sheriff all the details of the stage robbery and substantiates his story by leading the officer to the dead body of Stine and the booty, still lying undiscovered in the woods. On the way back to town, passing his cabin, Blake begs permission to see his sick child. The sheriff removes the handcuffs and permits the miner to enter his cottage. Through the window the officer watches the child die in its anglished father's arms. Blake comes out and gives himself up. But the sheriff tells him that he has been punished enough and states that he will make up the ninety dollars out of his own pocket. Blake stumbles back into the shack to comfort his heart-broken wife.

THE BURGLAR'S BABY (Two Parts—July 15).—Bill Slade, an ironworker, with a wife and child, loses his job when the mills shut down and tries all kinds of ways to keep his family fed and clothed. At last he applies to the charities. Red tape and delay are the sole result, and the desperate man decides to burglarize the house of Dr. King. The doctor sees Bill helping himself to the silver, and gets a good look at him before Slade can make his escape. Shortly afterward, the mills reopen and Bill goes back to his old job. The Slade baby is taken very ill. Unable to get the neighborhood physician, its anxious father begs the druggist to call a reliable doctor. Dr. King takes the case. On arriving at the home of the child, the physician recognizes in Slade the burglar, and Slade is overcome with terror at the idea of being given over to the police. He makes a confession to King, who is greatly moved by Slade's story. He promises to keep Bill's secret. Dr. King pulls the baby safely through and he and Slade become fast friends.

THE RUSE (Two Parts—July 14).—"Bat" Peters, reformed gun fighter, receives a letter from a Chicago firm to whom he has written in reference to selling his mine, stating that they think they will have no trouble in disposing of his property if he will come to Chicago, bringing samples of the ore. Peters arrives in Chicago and goes at once to the office of the firm where he interviews John Folsom, president of the company. He meets there May Dawson, Folsom's stenographer, and rents a room in May's home. Folsom and his confederates plan to put up a job on Peters and fleece him out of his mine.

May, returning to the office one evening for her handbag, which she has forgotten, overhears the plan, but she is discovered by Folsom, who forcibly places her in an attic chamber under the care of an old hag. Peters completes his deal with Folsom, and that night he is shown the "sights" by one of Folsom's confederates. After visiting a dance hall, they ask him to sit in a game of poker and take him to the same house in which May is a prisoner. There they try to put up a crooked game, but Peters is too wise for them and, drawing his guns, tells them that they can't shove any six-card draw on him. Covering the gang with his gun, he backs out of the room and locks the door on the astonished gangsters. He rushes up the stairs to the attic landing, putting up a good fight. He suddenly hears May scream and recognizes her voice. He sets a barrel of straw on fire and yells "Fire," which brings Folsom from May's room. Peters steps into the room and locks the door. It is battered in by the gangsters. The police, hearing the racket, come on and arrest the gangsters. Peters knocks Folsom out and all excepting Peters and May are taken away in the patrol wagon. Peters takes May home to her mother.

THE HAMMER (Two Parts—July 9).—Donald Barstow, an illustrator, lives in a rickety studio building and is interested in Mrs. Blakely, a married woman. She calls him up, inviting him to go to Philadelphia for the week end. He agrees. Old Simon Bassett is proprietor of the house and has a niece, Molly, whom he makes scrub the floors. Molly has come to love Donald, the illustrator. Simon comes in to collect his rents. Donald cannot pay him and a heated argument ensues. This is overheard by Gustave Schmitz, a chemist on the next floor, who is preparing to examine a vial of blood. His room is directly over that of Donald. Donald leaves the studio building and borrows one hundred dollars from a friend. He goes to his room to pack.

Meanwhile, there has been a sign tacked up by a stenographer on the third floor, who casually lays a hammer on the banister. An explosion occurs in the chemist shop, which dislodges the vial of blood. Same breaks and leaks through on Donald's office coat which he has thrown down upon leaving. The explosion dislodges the hammer and it falls on the head of old Simon, who is leaning over the balcony on the next floor. His pocketbook, which he is carrying and also the hammer fall beside a garbage can on the well at the bottom of the studio building. During the time Donald was in the studio we have shown him kill a rat with a gas pipe, which leaves the stained gas pipe on the floor. He has gone and thrown the rat in the garbage can after chatting with Molly, who is outside scrubbing and who has seen this action.

A web of evidence is thus built up around Donald. The hundred dollars is discovered on

THE SECRETARY OF FRIVOLOUS AFFAIRS (American—Four Parts—July 8).—Loulie, suddenly impoverished, becomes Mrs. Hazard's social secretary, her chief duties being to separate Mrs. Hazard's son and daughter from undesirable matrimonial choices they have made. Loulie pleases everyone, but several mysterious thefts cast suspicion on her. These thefts are finally traced to Winthrop, the young author engaged to Miss Hazard. He denies them, but is chased by the authorities in his motorboat. Meanwhile, Hap has transferred his affections from Natalie, who is older than he, to Loulie.

Loulie hears a noise at night and goes downstairs in her kimona. She surprises some picture thieves at work, is overpowered and kidnapped. Hap goes to her rescue, but is injured. The chase becomes very exciting. Loulie is locked in a deserted house, but shoots at the guard through the door and escapes only to faint on the beach, where Hap discovers and rescues her.

Back in the house Thomas, the new footman, discovers the Duc de Trouville and a gang of thieves at work cutting the paintings from their frames. The Duc and Thomas fight. The new footman, who turns out to be a detective, is saved by the party returning with Loulie. It is now made clear that Mrs. Cutler, a guest in the house, belongs to the gang and by a trick fastened guilt on Winthrop who is restored to favor. Loulie accepts Hap.

New York City. On the 250th anniversary of the installation of the first mayor of New York, this city is presented with an official flag by the city of Amsterdam, Holland. Sub-titles—Mayor Mitchel accepts the flag from A. Van de-Sands Bakhuyzen, Consul-General of the Netherlands. The flag is raised by Mrs. Maria Duane Bleecker Cox, great-great-granddaughter of James Duane, Mayor of the City in 1784 Governor Whitman is an interested spectator. The Old Guard takes part in the ceremonies. This is the flag. It combines the colors of the Dutch flag that floated over Manhattan Island before New Amsterdam became New York.

How the martial spirit that is gripping England finds expression in the activities of the people throughout the land. Sub-titles—The shirkers, the young men who have failed to hear their country's call for recruits, are everywhere reminded of their duty. Even on crowded Regent street they are exhorted to enlist by a singer of patriotic songs. A striking example to the shirkers is furnished when they witness a hero receiving his reward. A miner, who has won the Victoria Cross, is shown here being honored by his fellow-townsmen at Mansfield. David Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions, who is taking a leading part in fostering patriotism, enters his motor car after addressing the Dock Workers Battalion in Liverpool. The Dock Workers drilled with enthusiasm since being placed under military rule, and now are as expert in tactics as any body of men in the country. Meanwhile the training of troops continues everywhere. The wayside pond where the farmer used to halt now is used to water the horses of cavalrymen tired by a long practise march. The entry of Italy into the European war has increased the number of patriotic demonstrations. Every day crowds of Italian reservists leave from the Victoria Station, amidst enthusiastic scenes, to join their regiments.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 27—"The Vanishing Man"—Two Parts—Released Week June 28).—Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, searching for Craig Kennedy's lost torpedo, and posing to Elaine as an investigator in search of Kennedy, takes up his headquarters close to Elaine's summer home. Elaine, Jameson and Del Mar, while standing on the lawn of the Dodge summer home, are surprised to receive from a farmer Elaine's missing trunk. Elaine and Jameson thank the farmer very cordially and he throws Elaine an apple and departs. Elaine is dumbfounded to find a note cleverly concealed in the apple. It reads, "Be careful of Del Mar." She slowly tears it into small pieces and, thinking she is not observed, throws it away. But Del Mar has noticed, and recovering the torn parts pieces them together and reads. Elaine discovers the lost torpedo in the tray of her trunk and goes quickly to tell Jameson of it. While she is gone, one of Del Mar's men steals the torpedo and is making off with it when he is intercepted by the farmer who threw Elaine the apple containing the warning. They struggle, and in the fight the farmer manages to destroy the torpedo, much to the rage of Del Mar, who comes up just a moment too late to save it. Del Mar sends a note to his agents as follows: "Install submarine bell Am mining harbors and bridges as per instructions from government."

Great bridges and harbors are being secretly prepared for destruction by Del Mar and his assistants. Elaine and Jameson, out for an auto spin, are compelled to scramble down some huge boulders to the seashore to chase Jameson's hat, and Elaine comes accidentally upon evidence of the wreckers. She starts away quickly, and as she does so a heliograph signal is flashed to the bridge wreckers to blow up the first bridge she attempts to cross. The message is received, not only by the wreckers, but by the seemingly innocent farmer, who manages always to be near Elaine in times of her utmost peril. She and Jameson in her car start to cross the bridge. A description of the end fails its purpose, and the best way to get a knowledge of the closing episode is to see the picture.

TOMBOY (Two Parts—Released Week June 28).—Bob Seaton, paymaster of the Tomboy mine, is in love with Dot Cory, daughter of the owner. Buck, one of the foremen, admires Dot, but she repulses him. One Day Buck forces his unwelcome attentions on a miner's daughter and Bob gives him a sound thrashing for his effrontery. This angers Buck, and he and some of his accomplices plan revenge on Bob. Accordingly they hold up the paymaster and drag him to a deserted house in the woods, where he is securely bound and gagged. After a hot game of tennis with her brother Jim, Dot decides to don his riding outfit and take a spin in his roadster. While spinning over the mountains at a good clip, the car skids and is smashed, Dot being thrown out and rendered unconscious. Regaining her senses, she goes for help and while passing the apparently deserted house, hears voices within. She peers through a crack in the wall and sees her lover bound and gagged. She then rushes back to her car, but is unable to fix it.

The conspirators accost her in her plight and she is carried off on horseback to another deserted house and locked up. She finds herself a captive and learns, to her horror, that snakes infest her prison, and throws Jim's cigarette case, which she finds in the coat pocket, at the reptile. Later her captor comes back for her and is bitten on the leg, but fails to notice the wound. He is taking her to the prison where Bob is kept when the venom takes effect and he is thrown from his horse. Dot then wheels the mount and dashes for town where she telephones her brother of her plight and that of Bob. Jim jumps into the Cory touring car, in which his mother has just returned, and, gathering help, goes to Bob's assistance and releases the paymaster from his captors. The men at the mine become uneasy at the absence of their pay envelopes and Bob, Dot, and the rescuing party receive a hearty reception when they come into camp. Bob and Dot are married later, but she doffs her brother's riding suit and dons the "conventional white."

WHEN CHARLEY WAS A CHILD (Released Week June 28).—Charley is a kid. To be a movie actor, and emulate his film hero is his heart's desire.

He goes to bed, imagining himself doing valorous stunts in an unconcerned, heroic manner, and as he falls asleep his imagination takes definite form and lo!—he is a vest-pocket edition of his beloved hero. He sees a "chicken," and proceeds promptly to "knock her dead." She is ready to "fall" for him, when along comes his hated rival. The contesting lovers resort to a hundred comedy tricks to vanquish each other in the eyes of the fair one.

The final laurels fall to Charlie. But alas! he cannot enjoy the victor's spoils, for his damsel is captured by bloodthirsty redskins. Here Charlie out-Buffalo's Buffalo Bill, for, single-handed, he conquers the whole tribe and is just assuming a graceful pose, with his right foot on the chief's head, when he suddenly feels himself falling through space, and lands on his pillow! His mother doesn't fancy being made a footstool of, and tells him so in no uncertain words.

DANCES OF THE MALAYS (On the same reel as foregoing—Released Week June 28).—The Malay's conception of music is accentuated rhythm everlastingly repeated. Here is shown their curious orchestra and its strangely-shaped instruments. The Malay women consider it bad form to dance without their jewelry and accordingly bedeck themselves in all their finery, to "trip the light fantastic." A classic measure is shown here, wherein the feet play a minor part, the women's bodies moving from the waist up, in sinuous undulations, to the beat of the weird music. The native dance, more popular than the others, is performed in the traditional grotesque adornments peculiar to the tribe. A strikingly characteristic movement of the hands and arms is much in evidence in the dances of the Indo-China tribes.

THE RIM OF THE DESERT (Released Week June 28).—The Brute runs a liquor joint on the rim of the desert. He also runs everyone who enters there and abuses The Woman. One day, on his way across the desert, the Man happens in. He joins the crowd in a game of draw poker and cleans up. The Brute watches, and then sits in, hoping to frighten the Man into losing his nerve. But the Man's nerve is the product of many a year's tempering, and he sits tight. The Brute loses everything, when suddenly the Man catches sight of the Woman. He offers to stake his all on her and they play. The Man has four of a kind. The Brute has a gun. But he's not quick enough on the draw, and the Man "covers" him as he backs out with the Woman.

Out into the night they go on their way across the desert, the Woman trudging silently beside her new master. They pitch camp for the night. The Brute has followed, maddened to fury at having been beaten. He attacks the Man as the latter lies sleeping and only leaves off when he feels assured his score is settled. He wanders off in search of the Woman, but canot find her. On and on wanders the Brute, and when day breaks and the sun comes up in all its scorching white heat he knows he is lost in the desert. WHO PAYS? (Series No. 12 and Last—"Toil and Tyranny"—Released Week June 28).—David Powers, lumber king, treats his employees as inconsiderable details of his business, to be replaced without question at his pleasure. He is backed in his patrician contempt for labor by his legal adviser, Perry Travis. Both Powers and Travis love Powers' daughter Laura with a love that amounts fairly to worship. Laura has promised to marry Travis. Karl Hurd, his wife Mina, and their six-year-old daughter Betty form a pathetic example of struggling poverty. Hurd works as a stevedore for Powers. In a fight with his foreman, Hurd is beaten with a club and laid up for many months. His wife, slaving to support her family, contracts tuberculosis. When Hurd, still weak, again applies for work at the lumber yard, Powers drives him away.

Conditions become unbearable in Powers' plant and his workers decide to strike. Laura's pleas for the workmen are of no avail. Mina dies. On a mission of exploration to the workers' homes, Laura finds Hurd sitting beside the lifeless body of his wife. He is inconsolable, and Laura sees she can do naught to assuage his grief. She leaves her purse, and departs. The strikers decide to be revenged on Powers, and lie in wait for his automobile. Hurd, crazed with grief at the loss of his wife, and attributing all his troubles to Powers, takes a revolver from the strike leader's pocket and decides to do "the job" himself. He waits a block in advance of the mob of strikers.

Laura eludes her father and Travis, and entering Powers' limousine starts for the strikers' meeting, resolved to help them. Hurd empties his revolver into the automobile, and the chauffeur, fear-stricken, rushes home. When Powers and Travis open the car door, they find Laura dead within, and realize that her death is the result of their wilful blindness. Hurd learns too late of his terrible mistake, and will go through life ever as the self-accused murderer of his benefactress.

THEY NEARLY GOT THE MONEY (Released Week June 28).—Two tramps, broke, find a specimen copy of an accident insurance policy while en tour one day, and forthwith start out to get hurt in order to collect the $250 which they imagine will be their reward therefor. They attempt hazardous means to get on the hospital list, but things break in their favor (or against them), and they come out unscathed.

Tiring of the attempt to get injured by chance, one is selected to be the "goat" and they continue in their efforts to have him maimed. Fate rules against them in these praiseworthy efforts and they find it necessary to resort to fake injuries to get the money. Covered with yards of bandages, the "injured" one is brought to the office of the insurance company. Here they demand the $250, but are told that the policy is a specimen one and their injuries have been acquired all for naught. Ejection from the office follows quickly.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE, Episode No. 28 ("The Submarine Harbor"—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. July 5).—Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, posing to Elaine as an investigator in search of the lost Craig Kennedy, returns from a mysterious mission. He enters his rooms through a secret panel, a diver's helmet in his hands, and his clothes soaking wet. A message awaits him informing him that Elaine is in possession of incriminating evidence against the harbor miners. Del Mar visits Elaine and Jameson, and learns that Jameson is about to post the damaging information to the government. He quickly communicates with his men, who intercept Jameson, and steal the communication which is delivered to Del Mar. In the fields nearby, a busy naturalist in smoked glasses, covertly watches Del Mar as he receives the message from his subordinate. Del Mar starts in his motor boat, and when he has a few minutes' start, is followed by the naturalist, who suddenly becomes unnaturally spry as he jumps into another motor boat and starts to follow. Del Mar discovers he is followed, and quickly donning a diver's suit slips unobserved into the water. He enters his headquarters through an under water passage, and immediately joins, in a private chamber, a meeting of foreign secret service agents. Taking his place at the head of the table, he picks up a map, and pointing to a certain spot thereon speaks: "If we hold this section, we hold America!"

Elaine, out for a ride, sees evidences of Jameson's struggle, and tracking him to the bridge wrecker's cave, rescues him in a sensational manner. They are about to leave the cave, when out from behind a rock a man's head and shoulders rise cautiously and a man's arm, pointing a revolver, rises to a level with Elaine's heart. At the same moment, another man, a naturalist in smoked glasses, rises up behind the man with the levelled gun. The climax is tense and thrilling.

THE DOLLS OF INTRIGUE (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. July 5).—A band of foreign secret agents send two of their number, a girl and a man, to secure the plans of the Rolling Repeating Coast Defense Gun, which one of their number has located in America. The penalty for not accomplishing their purpose is death. Landed in America, they learn that the plans are in the possession of Lieut. Thomas Sheldon, and Simms, his aide. They proceed to encompass their ends by making the acquaintance of Simms, who is young and impressionable and spends much time in the girl's society. They play cards, and he loses vast sums to the girl's companion Simms gives his I. O. U., but cannot meet it, and is threatened with disgrace unless he pays or surrenders the Coast Defense Gun plans.

Lieut. Sheldon, on a slumming tour, becomes interested in a pretty child to whom he promises a doll. Simms agrees to surrender the plans, and Simms becomes enamored of the girl, and that night, at a given signal, passes them out of his window in the body of a doll. The secret agent is robbed of the package containing the doll by a professional pickpocket, who takes it for examination to the alley where Sheldon's little "doll girl" plays. As soon as he sees it is a doll, he discards it, and it is later picked up by the child. The secret agent and his girl assistant, realizing their loss, and what it means to them, and seeing Sheldon hurrying along with a doll for his young friend, immediately connect him with the frustration of their plans. They ask Sheldon for the doll, and their importunities arouse in him a deep feeling of suspicion. Upon his refusal, they give him until that night at eight o'clock to deliver the doll, under penalty of death for disobedience.

Sheldon's sweetheart, on a social welfare tour, discovers the doll containing the government plans, and takes them to the Lieutenant. He immediately sees the whole intrigue and prepares to round up the foreign agents that night. In his scoop he catches his assistant, Simms, who is disgraced for life. The two secret agents are deported, and know well the fate that awaits their unsuccess. Lieutenant Sheldon and his sweetheart keep the broken doll as a memento and a hope.

SMALL DENIZENS OF THE SEASHORE (Globe—Rel. Wk. July 5).—This is an interesting picture of small marine life. Pictured here are some of the best known species of sea creatures, showing their modes of propulsion, manner of eating, and other interesting phases of their daily life in the struggle for existence.

PARIS AND ITS PARKS (On the Same Reel As Foregoing (Rel. Wk. July 5).—The famous French capital, noted for its marvelous parks, is shown resplendent in all its verdant grandeur. We are taken through the best known and most beautiful of these breathing spots and see nature at her best; the many exquisite spots of rustic splendor give one the impression of a fabled land.

STRAWS IN THE WIND (Balboa—Three Parts—Rel. Wk. July 5).—The Nash and the Barnet families are neighbors in a little fishing village, John and Tom Nash supporting their widowed mother. Nell Barnet is a sweetheart of Tom Nash, but later looks more kindly on John. The latter, however, betrays her and old Barnet demands that he marry the girl. The rascal consents to this, but later elopes with Nora Mathews, a well-known character of the village. Old Man Barnet learns on the following day of John's treachery, and soon the disappearance of the two is neighborhood gossip. The elopers go to the city, where John's money soon is exhausted and he falls in with a gang of burglars. In the little village, Nell is an object of scorn and is despised by everyone. So great is the disgrace that she runs away herself and drifts to the city.

John is successful in his new line of endeavor, and is able to supply Nora's every want, but after a run of hard luck he is short of funds and she leaves him for a more affluent admirer. An unseen hand guides Nell to meet one of John's companions in crime in her search for friends and money, and he brings her to the den where the thieves spend their spare time. She is thrown into a dark room, where John discovers her, and, with the last spark of decency and manhood in him, attempts to secure her freedom. In the fight that follows, John is overcome and rendered unconscious, but not before he has incurred the enmity of one of his brethren. Back in the little village, Tom worries about Nellie's safety and induces Barnet to accompany him on a search for her. They have no success, but by chance run across the man whom John has offended and he leads the way to Nell's prison. The girl is rescued, and Tom pays for his brother's crime by marrying his former sweetheart. John continues his career of crime until a police bullet lays him low as he tries to escape from a steamer which he has robbed.

SHE'S A PIPPIN (Starlight—Rel. Wk. July 5).—Carrying on a socialistic discussion between themselves, Heinie and Louie arrive at the conclusion that the world ows them a living. But a passing sprinkling cart causes a sudden cessation of the conversation. However, out of the mire, Louie rises to meet "a millionaire's daughter." All this excites the envy of Heinie and he sheds tears. He who laughs last laughs best, however, and the next day the inconsolable one dons his best and sallies forth in pursuit of the fair lady. He captures her, and she is apparently so smitten with him that she forgets Heinie. The latter then announces to her his intentions of committing suicide, and she urges him to make a good job of it. He tries the drowning route with rocks tied to his neck, but some men on the dock prevent him. He then hires a desperado to kill him at midnight, but Louie is in the bed alone and receives the murderer's knife—on a loaf of bread he had taken for safe-keeping. They make up later and celebrate it with a dinner, but at the restaurant they meet their lady, who introduces them to her husband! They then gently sink their heads beneath the waves.

THE WILD OLIVE (Bosworth—Morosco—June 24).—On the circumstantial evidence of the bloody dagger having been found in his bedroom, young Norrie Ford is indicted on the terrible charge of murdering his uncle, a boss and bully in an Alleghany lumber camp, and is sentenced to death. Breaking away from his guards, Norrie escapes into the mountains, where he is hidden from the pursuing posse in the cabin of a mysterious mountain girl of beauty and culture, who aids him to make his escape to Argentine, after they have vowed their love for each other.

Growing a beard and changing his name, Norrie Ford soon becomes a favorite in the best circles of gay Buenos Ayres. Sending letter after letter to the mountain girl, whom he knows only as "The Wild Olive," the letters are all returned marked "No Such Name." In his endeavors to forget her he becomes engaged to a New York girl and shortly after is transferred to New York by his firm. Venturing back to the States he finds "The Wild Olive" again, only to learn that she is the girl chum of his betrothed. Meanwhile he has been seen by a detective who was one of the deputies during his trial for murder. The clash between Norrie's fiancee and "The Wild Olive" and the latter's noble sacrifice not only to the fiancee, but also to an attorney suitor on condition that he clear Norrie of the murder charge, culminate in a dramatic courtroom scene where the identity of the real murderer is discovered and Norrie is acquitted.

CHIMMIE FADDEN (Lasky—Five Parts—June 28).—Chimmie Fadden, a good-natured Bowery boy, lives in the New York slums with his mother and his brother, a dissipated young crook. The honest Irishwoman has no idea that Larry is a second-story man and the tool of a French thief, Antoine, who is acting as valet for millionaire Van Cortlandt in order to locate the valuables in his luxurious Long Island estate and arrange for a robbery. Van Cortlandt's daughter, Fanny, is a slum worker, and pays her visits to the Bowery accompanied by Hortense, her French maid. One day Chimmie gets into a fight, defending a small newsboy from a "tough," and, after he is arrested, Fanny, who has witnessed the affair, goes to the Police Court and gets the magistrate to release him. Chimmie then becomes Fanny's knight and falls in love with the maid, whom he dubs "The Duchess."

Shortly after this Chimmie saves Fanny from the insults of a Bowery "masher," and accepts the offer of the position of footman in the Van Cortlandt household, doing this largely to be near "The Duchess." He immediately finds that the butler is his rival for the affections of the French girl. Chimmie does many laughable things in his new surroundings in his capacity as footman and, later, when pressed into emergency service as butler. By this time Antoine, the French valet-crook, and Larry, Chimmie's brother, have completed their plans for robbing the mansion. Chimmie is just about to lock up for the night when he hears noises and interrupts the two crooks as they are preparing for their getaway. He is horrified to find that his brother is mixed up in this affair, and a fight ensues. Chimmie, seeking to save Larry, tells him to hide in the fireplace. He then knocks Antoine down. As Van Cortlandt enters he says, "Frenchy said I was drunk and I soaked him one." As soon as quiet is restored, Larry sneaks off with the silver.

The next day Chimmie, though discharged, sets out to recover the valuables. He finally locates Antoine and Larry in a saloon and takes the suitcase full of silver from them. He is arrested on his way back to the Van Cortlandt estate, and the fact that the stolen goods are in his possession seems to leave no hope for him. It is old Mrs. Fadden who discovers the truth and forces Larry to confess his guilt. The police magistrate at once telephones the Van Cortlandt household, where all are overjoyed to learn of Chimmie's innocence. The only favor which Chimmie will ask from Van Cortlandt is that his brother shall not be prosecuted, and this is readily granted. Van Cortlandt tells Chimmie to come to his office at ten the next morning and that they will make a fresh start. The last scene shows Chimmie and the Duchess alone together.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter Nine "A Runaway Match"—Two Parts—June 28).—Blair Stanley with the diamond from the sky returns to Vivian Marston and promises her the jewel if she keeps her promise to marry him. Later, they arrive at the minister's, and, as the marriage is being performed, Detective Tom Blake and Abraham Bloom, head of the syndicate seeking recovery of the gem, accidentally learn of the visit of Blair and Vivian to the rectory, and force their way into the house. Blake quickly handcuffs Blair, who, unnoticed, had passed the diamond to Vivian. Blake charges him with the murder of Dr. Lee. As Blake turns to question Vivian, Blair raises his manacled hands and brings the heavy steel wristlets down on the head of the detective, knocking him unconscious. A kick puts Bloom down and out. Vivian stops to remove the keys to the handcuffs from Blake's pockets, then she and Blair rush to the waiting auto and speed off. They draw up at the pawnshop of Ike Bloom and enter. Blair, after a sharp tussle, binds and gags the broker. Vivian disguises herself in a suit of male clothing, while Blair hides his identity by means of a heavy pair of glasses. The two then hurry to the depot, where they board an outgoing express, and succeed in escaping.

Luke Lovell, under promise of dividing the wealth supposedly in the custody of Hagar Stanley, rouses the gypsies against her. Entering her caravan, he seizes a tin box, supposed to contain the treasure and returns to his companion. Opening it, he finds it contains a sealed envelope, which Esther Stanley quickly seizes. The angered gypsies drive Lovell from the camp and he falls in with a band of tramps. He leads them in an attack on the camp. Far up on the mountain, Quabba, the itinerant musician, is attracted by cries from the camp below and quickly learns that Hagar and Esther are being attacked. Quabba succeds in loosening a heavy boulder, which goes rolling down the mountain side, carrying tons of rock and earth with it. The avalanche strikes the camp, demolishing it and burying many, among them Hagar, Esther and Luke Lovell. Hagar and Esther make their way out of the debris, uninjured as Quabba rushes into the camp seeking them. Lovell, too, has been hurt, but not killed, as at first believed. He escapes.

In the Far West Arthur Stanley, known as John Powell, secures employment as a sheepherder and overhears a band of robbers planning the holdup of the fast express. They spy the gypsy youth and give chase. Arthur, reaching the railroad tracks, drives his mount alongside the train and leaping from his saddle grabs hold of a window sill and pulls himself through the window of the speeding train. The conductor, believing him a robber, refuses to listen to his story of the contemplated holdup and rushes him to the vestibule. A member of the train crew opens the door and Arthur is hurled from the train, his body striking the bank, skirting the track and turning over and over as it goes whirling down the bank.

THE PURSUING SHADOW.—At a dance given by Earl Dexter, his wife, for the gratification of a whim, wears a beautiful pearl necklace recently purchased by Viscount Acheson. Craig Dare, who is a gentleman thief, makes love to Earl Dexter's wife, and at the same time succeeds in stealing from her the pearl necklace and handing it out of the window of the house to Tony Oscaros, a chauffeur, who is none other than Dexter, who is leading a dual life.

The party ends in confusion at the announcement of the loss of the necklace. Craig Dare learns that Viscount Acheson, who carries with him a considerable sum of money, is going to be at an inn (owned by Dexter's father) in the neighborhood. Dare goes with Acheson to the inn and allows him to fall into the hands of Tony Oscaros and his gang. Shortly before this happened, Earl Dexter comes to the inn to see his father, who, however, is absent at the time. Dexter's father returns to his inn in time to find the murdered Acheson, and see Tony Oscaros dashing out of the house. By a peculiar coincidence, Oscaros looks so much like Earl Dexter that even his father is deceived by the resemblance. Later, Earl Dexter is accused and convicted of the murder of Acheson. At the last moment, Tony Oscaros' little boy recognizes the faot that Dexter is not his father, and so gives the clue to the guilt of Tony Oscaros. The police follow up the clue and after finally encounter and capture Tony Oscaros.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stero Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

A clear picture

is as essential as a good scenario. Because the basic product is right the clearest pictures are on Eastman Film. Identifiable by the stencil mark in the margin.

LET THE TWIN-ARCS DO THE WORK

One of the foremost helps to the imagination of scenario writers, directors and producers is the A. & H. perfected Twin Arc Lamp furnished by us.

These lamps, from any ordinary house circuit, A. C. or D. C., furnish sufficient illumination in sets of two or three to secure action of the swiftest description at any time and anywhere.

Being readily portable (one boy can carry two units furnishing 16,000 candle power) they can be used in hundreds of different scenes never before available to produce the realism demanded by the public at the present time.

We will cheerfully arrange a demonstration for you.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

COOL YOUR THEATRE ARTIFICIALLY

Would you like to make your theatre COOL and COMFORTABLE during the hot weather, at a cost of 50c. per day? Think what a drawing card this would be for your house.

The ARCO COOLER will accomplish this result at a small cost of installation. Two hundred pounds of ice per day placed in the COOLER, and air drawn over the ice, will cool from eight to ten degrees a theatre seating three hundred and fifty. Two COOLERS will cool a theatre seating seven hundred, etc.

Constructed of reinforced riveted steel plates, japanned and positively will not become musty, as does wood construction. Space required for installation—20"x 36"x 28".

Price—Each outfit, without fan, $18.00 f.o.b. Erie.
Sixteen-inch fan, D. C., $16.00; A. C. $18.00.

Owing to low cost and small margin of profit, all goods are shipped C. O. D., or cash with order. Department E

Make Your Theatre the Coolest Place in Town

Put G-E Six blade oscillating fans in your theatre—as they swing from side to side they search out the stuffy corners and keep the air in motion—fresh and cool. They run silently, without rustle, rattle or vibration—there is no distraction from the full enjoyment of the show.

A cool place inside is a good investment—which is realized in the box office at the end of the day. Insist on the

Six Blade Oscillating Fan

See that the G-E trade mark is on the center. Then you will be sure of getting the fan that is built especially for moving picture theatres; you can be sure also of your fans lasting season after season without the slightest trouble or attention beyond oiling once a year.

Those are the kind of fans to get—that will be just as good five or six years hence as they are today. Every G-E Fan is like that, because it has G-E quality and over twenty-five years' experience and knowledge in fan building behind it.

Write to us today; give dimensions, etc., of your theatre—our fan engineers will be glad to lay out your plan for "The Coolest Place in Town."

Easy Money for Theatres

Extra Profits You Are Not Now Getting

$360.45 the First Month from Butter-Kist Corn Popper

You have the ideal crowd to buy—you should be getting the profits. Scores of motion picture theatres are now reaping a year-'round harvest of spot-cash sales from BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn in addition to regular paid admissions.

Profits $25 to $60 weekly. One theatre took in $360.45 the first month. Smallest theatres selling $4 to $5 worth of BUTTER-KIST in the evenings alone. Remember that every dollar you take in is seventy cents profit.

BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper

This famous money-maker requires only 26 in. x 32 in. of space. You have plenty of room for it in lobby, foyer or down near stage.

Runs itself and turns out 1 bag in 48 seconds—$3.75 per hour!

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn with Butter-Kist Prizes

"Everybody's" asking for famous BUTTER-KIST—the big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling and clean—evenly buttered and piping hot—untouched by hands. The finest, flavory, savory treat that ever tantalized a mortal's palate—with a coaxing fragrance that makes people hungry for BUTTER-KIST.

Every bag bears the valuable BUTTER-KIST trademark and Kiddies that thousands are saving and sending to us for handsome prizes. Brings people back to your theatre. Records show big increase in attendance.

Pay From Your Sales

A small payment down brings you the BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper with all privileges included. Then it pays for itself in short order. Let us show you.

"The Little Gold Mine" FREE

Handsome new book, "The Little Gold Mine," gives facts, figures, proof of profits and photographs. Sent FREE. Write for it at once—you lose $4 to $16 in sales every day you delay.

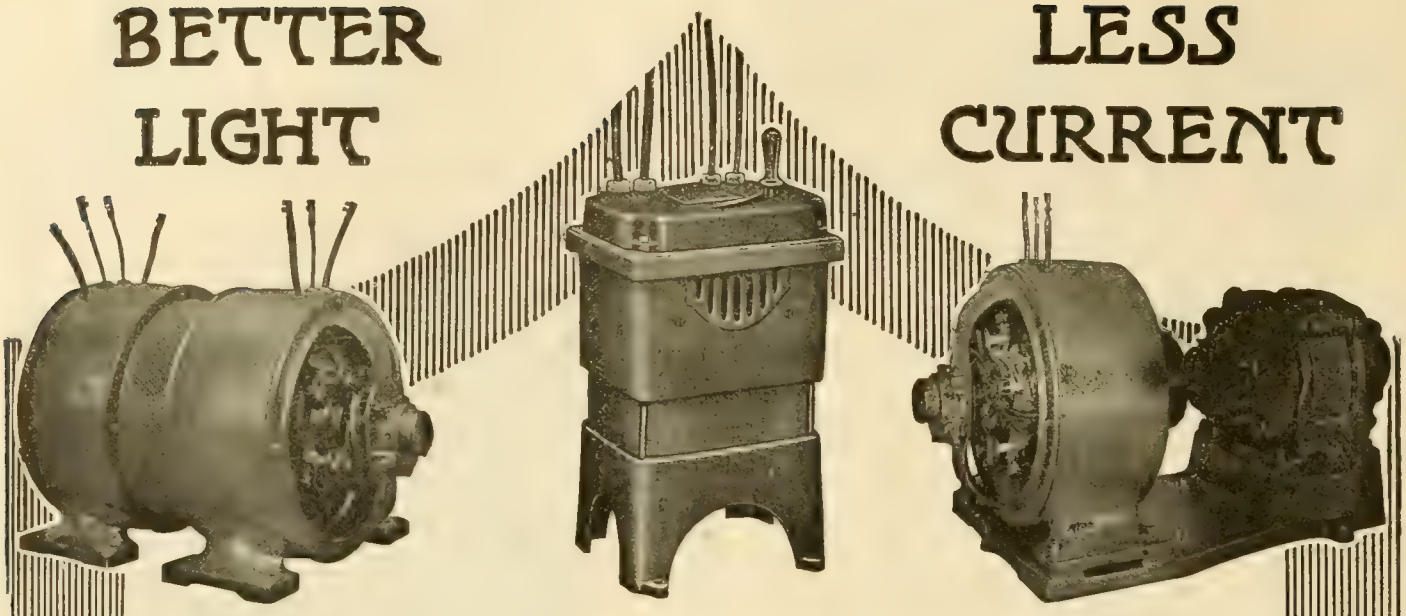
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

TERRIFIC!

POWER! FORCE! VITALITY!

That's the life of YOUR theatre. Your audience is critical! You've got to keep up a standard. If you do it, your patrons say "You're consistent"—and they flock to you. If you don't, they keep too far from your theatre for you to know what they say.

That's the value of consistency!

Every ounce of mental and physical energy, all the stamina of a great organization under a terrific pull is bent toward CONSISTENCY! THANHOUSER PRODUCTIONS and FALSTAFF COMEDIES are CONSISTENTLY GOOD! They don't charm you one time and then disappoint you the next. There's a standard! CONSISTENCY is the bull's-eye for Thanhouser and Falstaff brands. With unerring aim and consistent regularity every release bangs the target squarely; it rings the bell that calls your attention to CONSISTENCY—that's what keeps patrons coming to you.

ASK to SEE THANHOUSER PRODUCTIONS and FALSTAFF COMEDIES—learn what it means to be CONSISTENT! The mark "sterling" stamped on silver is a guarantee of consistency—THANHOUSER PRODUCTIONS and FALSTAFF COMEDIES are the consistent "sterling" marks of the film business.

Get them stamped into your show—"There is a standard."

Edwin Thanhouser

In presenting the following productions for the week, Edwin Thanhouser offers a pretty variety:

Two Reels—Tuesday, July 13th

"Mercy on a Crutch"

A unique character is the little girl Mercy, who is dropped as from Heaven into a frontier town where a kind work is most rare. It makes a gentle little soul a veritable spit-fire, and also gives play for some thrilling action.

One Reel—Friday, July 16th

"His I. O. U."

Showing how the simple little things of life mean so much in the years to come. A newsboy becomes Senator and grasps the opportunity to return the bread that had been cast upon the waters when he was a homeless waif. The pretty way that this story is worked out brings new charm to a human theme.

One Reel—Sunday July 18th

"Old Jane of the Gaiety"

The most lowly of stage-folk has been brought into the limelight. Ethyle Cooke is the regular good-souled old theatrical wardrobe woman, and Grace De Carlton is a new little chorus girl in the company. The kindness of the experienced wardrobe woman saves the little tendril from the usual fate that goes with the cold bottle and the bird. The warmth and sympathy of this production make it a certain winner.

Edwin Thanhouser offers for release on Friday, July 16th, the Falstaff Comedy with Mignon Anderson, Morris Foster and Arthur Bauer. It is a newspaper story with the joke turned on a dignified old financier. But the little girl who knows, proves that the bigger they are the harder they fall, and this old millionaire falls hard. It not only wins the reporter his story but knocks one of the props from under the argument that a woman's sphere is the home.

"Dot on the Day Line Boat"

SMASHED

--All Booking Records Busted--

AGAIN—ONCE MORE, the mighty Universal has smashed all records for bookings on serials with the avalanche of bookings of "THE BROKEN COIN."

AGAIN we have proved to Exhibitors the world over that when the UNIVERSAL says a serial is a money getter—it IS absolutely—positively—unequivocally.

Here's a serial of 30 intensely gripping reels, with 15 consecutive weeks of wonderful photoplay entertainment, the kind that ties your audience solid.

It's a strange, fascinating story of a lost coin—the thrilling search for it by a young lady newspaper reporter—Kitty Gray. Its recovery and—wealth.

It's the kind of a smashing serial that holds your audience spellbound for 15 straight weeks—incident after incident. Crammed chock full of punches.

"THE BROKEN COIN" will prove a whale of a money getter for your house. It will pack 'em in week after week. It will satisfy the most critical.

We have prepared a wonderful advertising campaign book that tells you the complete story—describes the author—the producing company—the leading stars.

It shows pictures of Francis Ford, Grace Cunard, Emerson Hough—all the actors—this book describes and shows you all the big advertising punches, posters, etc.

Send for this big Ad book to your nearest Universal Exchange and BOOK this wonderful serial right NOW. The money is in sight for you. Reach out and grab.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

CARL LAEMMLE, President

"The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"

1600 BROADWAY NEW YORK

The first serious attempt ever made to picturize the most beloved figure in all American history, whose life typified America, America's ideals, America's ambitions, America's opportunities, America's very history.

The most stupendous motion picture production ever attempted in point of size, length, breadth, purpose, authenticity, vital meanings, popular-appeal, size of cast, direction, advertising, backing.

CYCLE OF PHOTODRAMAS

Based on the Adventures of

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

It is without precedent in pictures, in dramatic history. Its action covers 150 years, the time of its exhibition to the public is three years—one release every 6 weeks, a distinct feature, of from 4 to 9 reels, a complete play equal in point of appeal to anything ever launched. Each production stands independent, yet fits into the progression of the entire Cycle. Thus for the exhibitor is gained the value of the pulling power of a series, without the defects of an incomplete individual performance.

A series of features—the epic of America—one shortly to be released after almost three years' preparation in producing.

With Benjamin Chapin, the most noted Lincoln Authority, Lecturer, Impersonator, Actor, Dramatist—Vaudeville Headliner, at the helm of activities—the most perfect and interesting pictures have been completed.

Requests for releases, state rights, exchange rights, are coming daily. The universality of appeal in a popular Lincoln play is readily realized, and comments of motion picture authorities, competent to judge declare the Lincoln Cycle is the big event of the year.

Informative Literature

sent on request—and all inquiries on any subject answered at once.

First Order Day August 1st

No orders accepted beforehand, in order to allow entire field opportunity to gain an insight before exclusive arrangements are made.

Release Date

will be announced in the next issue of Moving Picture World.

First Production of the Cycle treats of the pioneer days of America, and shows Lincoln's grandfather, in an exciting adventure on the frontier. It is entitled

"Old Abe"

The Pioneer Adventures of Grandfather Lincoln

and shows the President himself, relating the story of Daniel Boone and his friend Abe Lincoln, Sr. The play is complete in 4 reels, and is played by a splendid cast headed by Benjamin Chapin.

Watch for release dates and space for your territory.

The New York dailies said:

Evening Mail: "Caught the attention of Broadway. 'An Alien' is very much worth while."

Evening World: "Makes a strong appeal."

The Journal: "Huge success."

New York Times: "Lifts you out of the seat."

The Evening Sun: "From end to end 'An Alien' is ALL REAL. The film story has been produced with such care and ability that it stands alongside the spoken drama as a compeller of tears and laughter."

The Herald: "If there was a dry eye in the theatre it must have been a glass one."

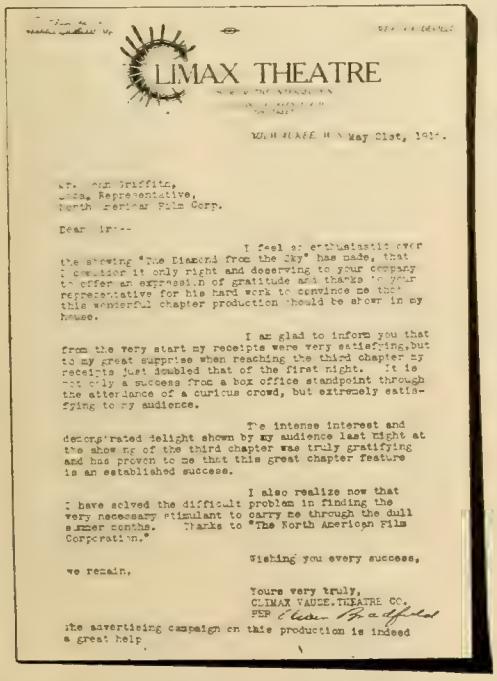
THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel
By Roy L. McCardell

Read Actual Experiences of Live Exhibitors Everywhere With This Wonderful Success

Moving picture theatre owners and managers are making money, hand over fist, with "The Diamond from the Sky"—the original continued photo play in chapters. Testimonials from every section of the country tell of the great sustained drawing power of this wonderful $800,000 "Flying A" production, with its widely discussed offer of



CLIMAX THEATRE

May 21st, 1915.

Mr. [illegible] Griffith,
[illegible], Representative,
North American Film Corp.

Dear Sir:--

I feel so enthusiastic over the showing "The Diamond from the Sky" has made, that I consider it only right and deserving to your company to offer an expression of gratitude and thanks to your representative for his hard work to convince me that this wonderful chapter production should be shown in my house.

I am glad to inform you that from the very start my receipts were very satisfying, but to my great surprise when reaching the third chapter my receipts just doubled that of the first night. It is not only a success from a box office standpoint through the attendance of a curious crowd, but extremely satisfying to my audience.

The intense interest and demonstrated delight shown by my audience last night at the showing of the third chapter was truly gratifying and has proven to me that this great chapter feature is an established success.

I also realize now that I have solved the difficult problem in finding the very necessary stimulant to carry me through the dull summer months. Thanks to "The North American Film Corporation."

Wishing you every success,

We remain,

Yours very truly,

Gentlemen:

Photoplays: I wish to state a few words in regard to continued having finished the last one, I threw up both hands and said never again.

Then along came some advance advertising on "The Diamond From The Sky" the picturized novel. I gave it the once over and cast it in the waste basket. Finally that advertising came so fast both from the North American Company and your exchange that I had to hire a small boy to The Sky" at nearly every mail. believe me, we sent "The Diamond to build a bon-fire and

One day while driving around town in my auto I discovered twenty-four sheet stands in all parts of the city of "The Diamond From The Sky". I ducked at every one. In the papers I saw half page advertisements of "The Diamond From The Sky," Now to top it off, one of my patrons walked into my office with a mirror on one side and "The Diamond From The Sky" printed on the other with a large glass brilliant representing a diamond in the middle.

Please be advised that we have run two chapters of this picture. The first chapter we were a little in doubt about as we thought it would be like all others, so charged a 5-cent admission, but after running same found it to be so much better that we have changed the admission price to 10 cents and can't take care of the people.

The writer must say that the American Film Mfg. Co. deserves credit as the picture so far as we can see is far better than any one we have ever run and we have used very near every one put out by the different companies.

Will say that any exhibitor wanting to book a continued photoplay that will make the people come back again will not go wrong in booking "The Diamond From The Sky," but by all means to raise the price of his admission.

"The Diamond From The Sky" is the "best ever." Heretofore, Mondays and Tuesdays of each week have been our big days at the Boulevard, but since we have been showing "The Diamond From The Sky," greater days have dawned for us and now the big, big days of each week are Wednesday and Thursday. "The Diamond From The Sky" is the best ever. That is what our patrons say at the Boulevard.

It is the truth that during the showing of the third chapter, in the thrilling scene where the automobile, by a hair's breadth, slips by the express train, the people arose from their seats, it was so real. Talk about thrills! It surely excels them all. I feel free to say if "The Diamond From The Sky" continues as it has begun, with its fine scenes and clever work, etc., it surely will prove a "world beater."

Our patrons know a good thing when they see it and they are looking forward to being beautifully entertained at the "Boulevard" Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

"The Diamond From The Sky" has simply overwhelmed us and as a business-getter it exceeds anything that has come within my extensive career in picture theatre operations.

I am sure it will be a pleasure to you to know that in the trail of the "Diamond" there is a jingle that rings merrily in the box-office coffers. We have to call out the police department on "Diamond" nights. The jams got so great there had to be some direction, as our otherwise efficient attendants proved quite unequal to the ordeal. The house filled to the brim and the waiting ones thronged out to the rail—and then the motor man had to worry.

I consider the Palace theatre was specially favored by the opportunity to show exclusively in Santa Barbara, the home of the production, "The Diamond From The Sky." This continued photoplay is great in every respect and among our most interested patrons are strangers to the city who will go away and talk about it.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

THE HIRED GIRL (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, July 6. A pleasing rural drama featuring Teddy Sampson, with Joseph Belmont, Cora Drew and a full cast of Majestic players. The abused servant girl, like Cinderella, comes into her own.

THE MOUNTAIN GIRL (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, July 11. An unusual drama featuring Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis, in which the aged grandfather's youthful strength returns in time to enable him to protect the honor of his granddaughter from the gambler.

BEPPO THE BARBER (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, July 11. Beppo, the barber, poses as an Italian Count and gets himself into trouble.

A TEN CENT ADVENTURE (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, July 13. A child story with melodramatic finish, played by the Majestic Juveniles and other regular Majestic players. Georgie Stone negotiates a loan in the bank, with the result that he becomes the instrument by which three bank burglars are captured.

THE MYSTIC JEWEL (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, July 18. Featuring Signe Auen, Lucille Younge, Charles West and Spottiswoode Aitken. The mysterious death of one of two brothers is solved by the deductions of the scientific detective.

A CHASE BY MOONLIGHT (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, July 18. Featuring Fay Tincher. An amusing story in which Miss Tincher gets herself into a strange predicament while hurrying after the police.

After Months of Search —We Found It!

For months we left no stone unturned, spared no effort, in our quest for a Master Idea upon which we could base something NEW—something EXTRAORDINARY—in Series Features.

At last we found it!

Then followed months in which we directed all our energies towards converting the Promise contained in this Master Idea, into Reality. Officials of such representative hotels as the McAlpin and Buckingham, of New York City; Auditorium Hotel, Chicago; Hotel Jefferson, St. Louis; Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco; Hotel Savoy, Kansas City; Hotel Mason, Jacksonville, and others of equal prominence, were consulted by us and from the wealth of material thus obtained we produced

THE MYSTERIES OF THE GRAND HOTEL

Think of a Series containing all the sensational action of our "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series," plus the wonderful dramatic qualities which have characterized the best Kalem productions! Here, in a few words, is a description of "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel."

It is the costliest Series ever produced. One of the stage settings, designed by Edward Siedle, Technical Director for the Metropolitan Opera Company, cost upwards of $5,000, while the sum we paid Mr. Siedle for his design was almost as much as is spent upon the average single-reel production.

But of supreme interest to you, Mr. Exhibitor, is the fact that this great series comes to you in REGULAR SERVICE! We predict a tremendous demand for it. Lest your competitors secure the bookings YOU want, arrange NOW for the

"ON DANGEROUS PATHS"

Refreshing as a fresh cool breeze from the country fields on a hot day comes this genuinely wholesome feature of country life in these days of artificial "thrillers." The sweet and simple theme of a country girl adrift on treacherous currents in city life is eminently suited to the charming unaffectedness and brilliantly winning impersonations of the little Star, Viola Dana. As in "The Stoning" she is again the petite, self-willed little girl of the country side—the girl genius whom Exhibitors have clamored for since she stirred the country with her wonderful emotion painting in "The Stoning." Directed by John Collins whose skill gives Miss Dana her best opportunities. Friday, July 23.

A bunch of comedians in the comedy of mix-ups, "A Change for the Better." Direction Will Louis. 1000 feet. Wednesday, July 21st.

Sally Crute in the one-act melodrama, "The Secret of the Cellar." Direction J. W. Castle. Saturday, July 24.

W. LAWSON BUTT

IN A FOUR-ACT PRODUCTION OF THE FAMOUS ROMANTIC DRAMA

DON CAESAR DE BAZAN

A "BROADWAY FAVORITES" FEATURE

Mr. Butt's wonderful portrayal in the title role of this production is due to the fact he has played Don Caesar upwards of three hundred times upon the legitimate stage. This sterling performer came to Kalem straight from his success in "The Lie," presented at the Harris Theatre. Mr. Butt also scored in "The Garden of Allah," at the Century Theatre; opposite Grace George in "The Earth," and "Much Ado About Nothing," and in character leads opposite Robert Mantell.

Released Monday, July 26th. Special 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color Lithographs.

A "HAM" COMEDY

THE TOILERS

Featuring "HAM" and "BUD"

For the love of beauteous Marion Morton, Ham and Bud enter her home disguised as statues. The trouble they create makes this the funniest "HAM" Comedy released in a long time.

Released Tuesday, July 27th. 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color Lithographs for all "HAM" Comedies.

The Disappearing Necklace

The Second of the Twelve Weekly Two-Act

Mysteries of the Grand Hotel

Although "Dude" Duncan is caught with the stolen necklace in his hand, it disappears an instant later. There's a remarkable story in the manner in which the mystery is finally solved. Are you booked for this Series?

Released Wednesday, July 28th. Unusually striking 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color Lithographs.

AN ALICE JOYCE RE-ISSUE

A BUSINESS BUCCANEER

A girl's wit, plus a dictating phonograph and a dog, frustrate the business buccaneers who seek to steal their rival's secret formula.

Facts and Comments

ONE of the difficulties the exhibitor has to contend with is the unbusinesslike method in booking which seems to characterize so many exchanges and producers. An old friend and reader owning a model theater in a small city in Pennsylvania made a contract with a feature film company to use a certain feature on a certain day. The managers of the theater relying upon their contract, immediately began advertising the film in the press when, just a day or two before the date agreed upon for showing, a letter came from the film concern to the effect that they could not spare the film on that particular day. The exhibitors sent the film concern a bill for twenty-five dollars' damages, to which they have so far received no reply. There can be no doubt whatever that they can collect for breach of contract and that the jury will fix the measure of damages much higher than twenty-five dollars.

HOW the evils of censorship impress an operator may be gathered from a letter we received recently from the man who runs the booth in a theater in Ohio. "I am," he writes, "an operator in the —— theater and I take notice that wherever a cut is made by the censors it is always a very poorly made splice, which either pulls apart or causes the film to climb off the sprockets. Now, if they want laws establishing censors, they should compel them to at least made decent splices. My plan is to have short pieces of film inserted where the censors have made cuts and put in the words: "Cut by the —— Board of Censors." I think the public themselves would help to fight this great evil when they know how much damage is done to their favorite amusement." A most excellent suggestion.

OFFICIAL censors everywhere are developing a habit of putting "condemned" pieces of film together and using these strips of objectionable film as a means of pro-censorship propaganda. Could anything be more unfair and more contemptible? How easy it would be to make up a page of objectionable things from sacred literature? Tear certain passages from their context and string them along with other passages similarly torn from their proper places and it is very easy to present a twisted version. Is agitation of this kind really much better than a resort to forgery and falsification? One local censor on the Pacific coast has now collected about a reel of this sort of garbage and is anxious to show it to "invited guests."

EXHIBITORS in Tennessee are threatened with excessive, one might almost say with confiscatory, taxation. The motion picture interests in the state are thoroughly aroused and all exhibitors have been notified to exert their power and influence at a hearing which is to take place before the governor of the state. We hope success will attend this effort and we also hope that in any event there will soon be a powerful and representative exhibitors' organization in the state, which will make any further attempts at confiscatory legislation impossible or abortive.

YONKERS may be but a small city and its organized exhibitors may be but few, but they certainly are a brave and intelligent body of men. They have resolved to fight the new ordinance for Sunday closing to the finish and to defy the arbitrary action of the Board of Aldermen, on the theory that such action is in law tantamount to oppression and makes the police liable to criminal prosecution. The courts have defined the law beyond the power of the Board of Aldermen to alter and amend. We congratulate the Yonkers exhibitors on their loyalty to principle and conviction and we entertain not the slightest doubt of their ultimate victory.

OUR old friend Wilbur F Crafts is at it again. Speaking in Freeport, Ill., he now advocates the restriction of motion pictures to one show per week. The manager of a big theater in Freeport sends us a report of Crafts' "lecture," with the request to answer "this narrow stuff." Dr. Crafts is wilfully ignorant and answering doesn't help.

He stated some time ago that he had to take cowboy pictures for his motion picture show because educational pictures could not be secured. The writer told the doctor publicly how ill informed he was, but it made little or no impression.

Issues of Today*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS QUITE natural for us to draw inspiration from classical antiquity, especially where it lays emphasis on the aesthetic side of life, where visible things have been transmuted into forms artistic to the delight of whatever is fine in our sensibilities. Through centuries of elimination, through the constant exercise of selective taste, the world's whole product in times gone by has been reduced to a few splendid examples of all that was best in arts of expression. One effect of this accumulation on certain placid natures is that of turning the head half way round so that eyes which should be occupied in looking forward are almost entirely absorbed in contemplation of the path traversed. Such natures may be highly appreciative of work done by men who were always looking ahead in the march of progress, and such natures operate as a centripetal force on creative genius, restraining and often regulating its erratic tendencies.

In opposition to this conservatism is the very genius it so much admires. The intellectual idealist of determination, good sense and high aspirations does not confuse change with progress, nor does he disregard the lessons of antiquity, but he is often regarded as impracticable because he strains with all his eager strength to overcome ignorance and its prejudices, ever pushing forward toward finer spirituality and happiness. He is impracticable only in setting his own standards beyond the immediate possibility of individual achievement. No greater mistake could be made than that of supposing a man to be incapable of accomplishment because he is imbued with new spirit, ardent in aspiration and seemingly indifferent to material results. It is in the essence of true genius to consider what bearing events easily foreseen, are to have on vital issues.

What are the issues of largest interest to English-speaking people of the present time? War looms up with overshadowing importance. What effect will it have upon the social fabric? What economic changes will result. News columns are filled with accounts of profits it has brought to a small body of manufacturers and traders, while little is said about that finer profit to the whole universe of imposing a check upon autocratic militarism, even upon despotic forms of government, capable at any time of destroying splendid international relations for mean and selfish purposes. We may be on our way to achievements which will put to shame all that we have hitherto accomplished, but will this prevent our being regarded with eyes envious and covetous by those gangs of men organized to rule by force, especially should their survival depend upon our downfall?

It is not at all impossible that we may be deeply humiliated at the end of this war by well-armed forces ready to use any pretext to collect from us enough to pay their bills. Preparation for such an emergency is coming to be regarded as a live issue, but there is a more far-seeing preparation for all such emergencies to be considered. Our general efficiency as educated and intelligent men of athletic training, our specializing in all departments of engineering and science, our elimination of half-decayed human garbage, our protection of women, homes and children from the evil influences of men who mistake license for freedom, the cultivation of social muscle through the cultivation of all that is fine in human nature, all these are vital themes. It is within the province of this new art to make felt the power of right.

Those who clamor for peace because they do not understand that war may be waged for a principle, may find vent for their surplus energy in fostering another kind of peace, that between employers and workpeople. Stories bearing on the regulation of what are often regarded as conflicts of interest, which should be matters of common concern, are bound to attract the enormous number of people who work for wages. Correlative themes relating to the health and happiness of workpeople, suitable homes for their families and schools for their children, quite as well as factory inspection and hygiene comprehend issues that are far from dead, though many of them have already engaged the attention of motion picture producers. Big subject, especially in this country, where working people have reached a high degree of self-reliance, is that involving the principle of industrial co-operation.

What of the workman's child? Every splendid child would pay the country high interest on its careful nurture and education. Shall it be sent to earn a pitiful wage in the factory? Shall it be sent out into the street to peddle? Shall it, in this great country of equal rights, be given an even chance to live, achieve and enjoy? How can we even consider a future that shall make this continent one of sunshine, an example to the world, unless we value childhood and youth? We are doing more and more to give them strong bodies and clean minds, but the concern shown in them is so often lacking in ordinary common sense that it would seem as though the parents must be educated as such or the children pass into the care of the public so far as system in training is concerned. Fond mothers make playthings of the human doll. They might be enlightened as to their complete misssion and all womankind accorded opportunity for development equal of that of man.

Tell of the man who lost touch with his kind through devotion to selfish aims and found it when a moment of poverty placed him in contact with a nobler soul. Tell of the woman raised in the luxury of dependence who found her way out of sensuous self-indulgence by the well-worn route of adversity. Picture the meeting of two such disillusioned creatures, the comedies and tragedies of their joint efforts to conduct a servantless household. Send the peace egoist to the trenches, cause him to realize that noble men are making sacrifices there for all humanity. Have the young wife who elopes because she has to perform a few domestic duties cast on a desert island where she cannot overeat or obtain stimulants and has to do real work before she returns home made over, a fine specimen of the new woman. There are plenty of ways of wrapping a story around a live issue for those who know how.

The depressing effect of imitation and repetition is largely due to a chronic inability of former stage directors to recognize a live issue when it is thrust under their noses. The European war will bring a flood of battle scenes, each strongly resembling all the others, with really nothing at stake of vital importance when the smoke is blown away. "What of it?" the intuitive critic says. Better than spectacular massed action, which is less impressive on the screen than on the stage, are picturesque incidents bringing out character and bearing directly upon the main line of interest. That line is easily broken by massed action and the issue so submerged that suspense is scattered to the four winds. It is quite possible that the greatest military play will open war's back door.

Abate this Nuisance

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE steady growth of new and large motion picture theaters has resulted in a greater power for the exhibitor. I do not say that the exhibitor has attained the maximum of his power and I surely cannot say in view of the facts that he has as much power as for the good of the industry he ought to have. It is clear, however, that the old days are over and that no haughty exchangemen backed by autocratic producers will again offer the exhibitor his can of films with the curt comment: "Here's your show, take it or leave it."

Now with the growing power of the exhibitor there has come a greater responsibility. The object of these lines today is to ask the exhibitor in aiding in the extermination of a great evil. The exhibitor has it in his power to drive the self-advertising director and his much exaggerated ego from the screen, thereby rendering a service of no little value to the entire industry. I know that the exhibitor is far more responsive to public sentiment and to the demands of his patrons than either the exchangeman or the producer. He hears daily a chorus of critics from among his own audience. Let it be said right here that the plain every day motion picture "fan" often sees faults which the professional reviewers, the writer included, sometimes overlook. Speaking of an ambitious production released some time last fall by one of the great producers, a friend of the paper says:

"Any man who is brilliant enough to lay scenes of an immigrant train in the prehistoric days of California in a town in Colorado with cement sidewalks and with paved streets, then take them out through the Garden of the Gods and call it Grass Valley, Cal. (and there is such a town), who will surround his prairies with barbed wire fences before there were even wire factories in the United States, who will use repeating rifles when there were just flints coming into vogue, who will, simply for padding, repeat a whole reel of what was very interesting stuff in its proper place and who will unnecessarily murder a woman character whom he has been endearing to the audience simply for a 'plant' and use a sixteen-year-old girl for a boy of the same age; such a man is far too brilliant to leave at the mere art of producing pictures, he should be in the advertising department reading copy, where his noble face won't show its illuminative characterizations of fiendish jealousy and hatred, for of all the stagey, melodramatic and artificial acting we all claim that his work in this picture is just about the limit."

There's excoriation for you. We may be quite sure that some of this hearty indignation, untouched by parliamentary forms and possibly flavored by profanity, found its way directly to the ears of the exhibitor who showed the picture. Of course the exhibitor is used to "knocks" and Heaven only knows how often the sins of the studio are visited upon his head.

Why doesn't he strike back? He owes it both to himself and to his public. He can make a good beginning by a vigorous protest against the self-advertising director, whose mania for notoriety makes him blind to every human consideration. I am not speaking of the director who insists on getting credit where credit is due. I am speaking of the men who want to be their own actors, directors and publicity agents. There may be directors who are capable of being principals of the cast and who are equally good as directors and as actors. If there are any such the annals of dramatic kinematography bear no record of them. The director who insists on getting his poses and attitudes on the screen may be fired by ambition rather than by vanity, but it is hard to believe it. I ask my readers to examine their memories and if any of them recollect the name of a director who acted the principal part in his own play and made a success of it I would be grateful for the information. The greatest of all directors, the man who founded a new school in screen plays and who has been the most successful, D. W. Griffith, has never attempted it. He may on rare occasions have played a subordinate part. Perhaps I ought to make an exception in the case of comedies, for in this field one man at least has shown simultaneous cleverness in the two fields.

There is altogether too much personal vanity in these actor-director films and "features." The man who has chosen himself as the central figure in the performance cannot either control or conceal his admiration for himself and his exceeding cleverness. He knows fifty-seven or more varieties of flirting with the camera and he is practising them constantly, pushing out of the way anything and everything that might tend to obscure him, regardless of all consequences. It is hard to resist the conclusion that the public wearies of this sort of thing and that in consequence the exhibitor suffers. To quote again from one of many letters that have reached me on this subject:

"If a director thinks so much of his face that he must have it in the picture at the cost of his properly directing the picture, he had better get another director. He should learn the one thing that all the big successful directors in the business are learning, and that is that directing is a business in itself and that no director can afford to try to direct himself in a picture and much less when he has such a face."

I would like to quote the rest of my friend's letter if considerations of space did not forbid. All these actor-directors are bold and persistent and I might add unscrupulous seekers after publicity, and we newspapermen are often too careless and too complacent to do our duty and summarily suppress the reams of stuff that are sent out by these men to create an artificial interest in and demand for their productions. We make it easy for them to break into print.

In the meantime we renew our advice to the exhibitor who is threatened with these films by the actor-director "genius" to resist them. If enough exhibitors suffering from this affliction get together and make the proper representations to the producers, it is highly probable that the nuisance will be stopped. Actor-directors are often something of a nuisance even to the producer. Like all pests they are persistent and adepts in blowing their horns. The result is that they are too often taken at their own valuation. The exhibitors have it in their power to puncture this bubble.

From the number of letters and oral protests we have had on this subject it would seem as if there were enough exhibitors affected by this nuisance to make it worth their while to act. Let them voice their protests direct to the producers and they will get the redress to which they and their patrons are so richly entitled.

Books and Plays in Pictures

UNDER the above title is published elsewhere in this issue a list of authors and the names of the books or plays they have written which have been adapted to pictures by various producing companies. As no tangible record of this information existed when the task of compiling the list was undertaken THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been at no little trouble and expense to make it as complete as possible. It is quite probable that it may contain errors of commission as well as of omission, but it was worth the effort, for the demand for the information it gives is great. The reader's kind indulgence is asked in the event of errors and his assistance that a correction may be made is greatly to be desired. The list, you see, is so important that it may, a little later, be printed in pamphlet form, in which case it should be free from mistakes. Producers are requested to drop us a line when they discover an error.

Our Apologies to Col. W. N. Selig

LIKE the proverbial fly in the ointment, a most disturbing error occurred in the otherwise irreproachable issue of the Moving Picture World of July 10—the Pacific Coast Number. The error is too apparent to blame it upon the office cat, the printer or any of those overworked agencies upon whose shoulders it has been, since time began, the prerogative of editors to lay the responsibility for their otherwise unaccountable mistakes. In this case it is plainly up to "us" and "we" bravely accept the blame.

The error in question appears in all its distressing proportions on pages 218 and 219 of the big issue and consists in the labeling of the panoramic view which stretches across these pages as a view of Universal City when it should have read a view of the famous Selig Zoo. We will not attempt to take refuge behind the fact that the original photograph came to us without proper captions or other marks to indicate that it was the Selig Zoo and not the Universal City. The fact remains that it was the Selig Zoo, which is quite different from the Universal City. As such it should have been properly captioned.

In an effort to mitigate our error and to offer something in the way of an apology to our good friend Colonel Selig, we reprint the cuts in question in this issue of the Moving Picture World with the proper caption and request our readers to make due note of the correction that justice may be done to all concerned. None can regret the occurrence more than ourselves, for which reason we give due prominence to the correction and we trust that we may be spared from anything of a similar nature in future.

Big Time at San Francisco

Indications That the League Convention Will Be a Record Breaker—Large Attendance in Sight and Many Manufacturers Represented.

ALL news from San Francisco indicates that the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, which is scheduled to convene in that city on Tuesday, July 13, will break all previous records for National League Conventions. The committee in charge of the arrangements, headed by M. E. Cory, has been untiring in its efforts to secure attractions and to frame up an interesting program for the entertainment of visiting exhibitors. According to latest reports their efforts had been most successful and many features had been secured. The convention will open formally at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning and listen to an address of welcome by Governor Johnson of California. President Pearce of the League will respond, after which the standing committees of the convention will be appointed.

MARION S. PEARCE,
President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Regular business sessions of the convention will commence on Wednesday at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue at stated times until the conclusion of the convention on Friday. During this time there are many special events scheduled. W. W. Hodkinson of the Paramount will address the delegates on Wednesday; D. W. Griffith of the Reliance-Majestic will give a talk on "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and

Panoramic View of the Famous Selig Zoo

NOTE.—This cut appeared in the Pacific Coast Issue on pages 218 and 219 with an improper caption.

Personal Liberty in America," on Thursday; W. N. Selig and P. A. Powers will address the convention on Friday. Other speakers will be heard at the several open sessions of the convention from time to time.

There will be a reception of picture players on Friday at which it is announced there will be many screen favorites present, including Miss Geraldine Farrar, the grand opera star, who is working in a picture at the Lasky studio in Los Angeles.

In some way or other almost every motion picture company and every manufacturer of motion picture accessories will be represented. All the space in the exposition hall has been sold and the displays made by the several exhibitors will be equal to the occasion.

All through the convention, events calculated to interest visitors and to show them the sights of the city will occur. There will be trips to every point of interest as well as to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. There will be luncheons and automobile parties galore, so that those not engaged in the business of the League will be kept too busy to note the passing of the hours.

The grand finale to this event will be the grand ball to be held Friday evening. It is announced that Governor Johnson will lead the grand march with Geraldine Farrar and that numerous other notables of San Francisco and motion picture circles will participate.

A complete story of the convention and events surrounding it will be told in a subsequent issue of the Moving Picture World which will be represented on that occasion by George Blaisdell, G. P. vonHarleman, Clarke Irvine and T. A. Church.

MARYLAND EXHIBITORS RE-ELECT PEARCE.

At a convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Maryland, held at Baltimore on Friday, June 25, officers of that organization were elected to serve for the coming year as folows: President, M. S. Pearce; first vice-president, William Kalb; second vice-president, Thomas J. Bohannan; national vice-president, J. Howard Bennett; secretary, Frank H. Durkee; treasurer, Guy L. Wonders. The meeting was held at Bay Shore and a shore dinner followed the business meeting.

Berst vs. Griffith

General Manager of the Selig Company Objects to Discrimination Against the Small Theater.

J. A. BERST, vice president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, differs with D. W. Griffith, who is quoted in a Chicago newspaper as stating that pictureplays appearing in the better houses should be given the same freedom that is accorded to legitimate productions, and that the smaller houses should be the only subjects of censorship.

"This latest idea," said Mr. Berst, in a recent interview, "is but another method of discrimination. Film productions should be as freely shown in smaller theaters as well as the larger. If the discrimination as above outlined should be carried out, the enterprising manager of the smaller theater would be barred from presenting high class films.

"The film shown today in the large theater will have to be shown later in the smaller theater and how are price limits to be drawn? There is the large theater in the small town and at the same time this large theater might not be able to ask large prices.

"Take the Selig production of 'The Spoilers' for example. This is, in the opinon of film critics, the greatest motion picture of true American life. Released over a year ago, this production is going right along crowding the theaters. There are but few motion picture productions that can prove the same successful record. If the film production were confined exclusively to high priced theaters, many intelligent and refined people, unable to afford to pay $2 for a seat, would never have enjoyed the film. 'The Spoilers' has been shown and is yet showing in both the large and small theaters with admission prices graded according to the judgment of the various exhibitors. In this manner all the exhibitors and all the people profit.

"If Mr. Griffith is correctly quoted in making distinctions between censoring of pictureplays appearing in the larger and the smaller theaters he will probably say certain persons should be permitted to view only censored pictures and others be permitted to see uncensored pictures. In other words, we should have class legislation.

"I repeat that the play that is decent should be shown to everybody and if it is not decent it should not be shown to anybody."

Biograph Players Return

Seven Producing Companies Back at the Biograph Studios After a Successful Period at Los Angeles.

AFTER an absence of six months from the New York studios, during which time the Biograph Studios have undergone a complete renovation, the Biograph Players, seven producing companies in all, arrived in New York on the Biograph Special last Monday. If we may take the players' word for it, they surely are glad to get back to the model of all studios, the Biograph Studios in the Bronx.

The Biograph Special, composed of twelve cars, including five Pullmans, buffet, parlor car, special car for editorial conferences and rehearsals en route, and four baggage cars, left Los Angeles Monday, June 28, arriving at San Francisco Tuesday, June 29, at which place the entire company toured the Panama Exposition for two days as the guests of the Biograph Company. While at the Exposition they were offered the liberty of the Press Club rooms at the Fair grounds for their resting place. The trip from San Francisco was made in better than schedule time, the Special arriving in New York seven hours before it was due.

Perhaps the most noteworthy of all pictures produced on the coast was "Under Two Flags," the three-reel production of Ouida's celebrated novel, in which almost the entire Biograph stock company had parts.

The Biograph studios in the Bronx will again be active and several big productions are promised for the early fall months.

FIGHTING TENNESSEE LAW.

R. M. Shaw Company of Knoxville, Tenn., has addressed the following letter to all exhibitors of that state on the subject of the law imposing a tax on motion picture theaters:

Gentlemen.—The new Tennessee law of course has not a single legitimate reason to support it. An increase of two hundred and fifty per cent in taxation in one year, even though the present tax were not in itself excessive, as it is, cannot receive the support of any thinking man, in our opinion. Therefore it is right now and immediately up to the exhibitors to demand a hearing from the Governor and to make him see that common honesty and decency, which can be exacted of a state as well as of an individual, requires the repeal of this unfortunate legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Now it is up to the exhibitors to unite in an effort to repeal this bill. It is our aim to serve you in every possible way. We suggest that you direct us a communication protesting against the injustice of the new taxation and we will file your letter in the office of a State Senator, whom we have interested in our behalf.

Trusting that you will give this your immediate attention, we are,
Yours very truly. R. M. SHAW COMPANY.

Working Off a Grouch

Blais Loses His Goat to the Los Angeles Weather Bunk-Artist and Takes a Vacation.

Los Angeles, California.

WHAT a really amusing thing is Bunk, to be sure! Here is the local Examiner of this morning—and the date is June 24—under the eighteen point caption "Touch of Winter Is Felt in New York," setting forth, following a new York date line that "At one time during the day the thermometer touched 56 degrees." Let's see; that's twenty-four degrees above the freezing point, isn' it? Very well. By the side of the main title of the newspaper referred to and in a little box we find under "Coast Temperatures:" "Los Angeles, 66." On page 8 of section II there are recorded the official observations of the local weather bureau. The maximum temperature for the preceding twenty-four hours was 75 degrees. The minimum was identically that of the touch of winter that was felt in New York, 50 degrees. This is a sample of what may be observed by a visitor in Los Angeles. The singular part of it is, too, that you will find transplanted and transformed Easterners defending it. One of them today insisted with almost a touch of indignation that 56 degrees in Los Angeles was warmer than 56 degrees in New York and in the same breath declared that 85 degrees in Los Angeles was cooler than 85 degrees in New York. No names are going to be mentioned; but wait a couple of weeks. You will see a comeback, signed by a man well known in the film world, who will prove to his own satisfaction and maybe to yours that what he is charged with saying is nothing but the plain truth. This same chap has a mighty keen pen.

Possibly some of the other figures may be of interest—as Los Angeles is the big picture-making town. The humidity at 5 a. m. was 91 degrees and at 5 p. m. 64. The highest temperature for the month of June in 38 years was 105 degrees; the lowest 46. The rainfall for the season was 17.05 inches; for last season for the period to date in question, 23.65. So we see the producers have been better off this year than last by a lesser rainfall of over six and a half inches.

Talking the other day of the Bunk question with a man who has been in business here a year he remarked very seriously and in a low voice: "You know anyone who tries to take any of the Bunk out of Los Angeles can't stay in the town." That is probably an extreme statement. There is enough in Southern California that is great, that is wonderful, that is marvelously beautiful to make the plain unadorned truth sufficiently strong. There are few who can live for a couple of months without the lure and the charm of the country getting into the system, without there being stored away in the back of the head pictures the beauty of which will never fade.

There is a window sign on Figueroa street which says: "Restaurant: Eat it here or take it home." At least the sign was there a few weeks ago. Possibly in the meantime someone may have taken the proprietor at his word.

On Main street between Fifth and Sixth streets is to be seen on a window in large lettering: "Royal Gorge Cafe." What's the idea—food fit for a king?

Theres' a lot of fun to be had in this town. And no one place is more prolific of that somewhat rare article than the monkey cages at the Selig Zoo at feeding time. Out there this afternoon there was more laugh stuff on tap for fifteen minutes than could be extracted from a rattling good comedy. The elephant colony has been increased by the addition of the four big fellows of Superintendent Robinson, who—or which if you insist—have just finished their engagements on the "road" and will until September entertain visitors at the Zoo. Every afternoon around 3 o'clock they are out on the big lot being put through their paces. Mr. Robinson has brought home all the animals that have been attending the big Exposition up north. This, of course, was done so that the guests of the Selig Special might see the Zoo at its best. Already there are more big cats at the Zoo than can be accommodated in the enormous pavilion. Today there were about a dozen of the lions and tigers in cages at the rear of the lot. They were working in pictures, and were left there for convenience. The big stage back of the older one is finished. It is about 165 by 50. It is covered by a steel structure in canvas—sides as well as top—in the event of unfavorable weather.

There is something rarer than a day in June. It is an evening in June—an early evening, an early evening of a full moon and a clear sky—with that marvelous blue of the south that marks the passing of a perfect day, a pretty one, they call it out here. One need not have been in Southern Europe to take a chance on gambling the equivalent of that welcome bit of paper that comes in from home every week or two that the Italian blue has nothing on it.

"The Next Night." You've seen that before on the screen, of course, but this time the three words state a fact. You see, the rule of the house is that pianos choke off at 10:30, and so at that hour last night we strangled the faithful old mill on which for the last month or more we have spattered a few near thoughts. It's really sad, too, because last evening we had on our chest several matters urgently pressing for utterance, unimportant of course, but tonight they have gone where the woodbine twineth.

We heard a woman the other day make the statement that she had several times crossed the Atlantic, but had never found old Neptune so unkind as he is in the twenty-five-mile strip separating San Pedro from Santa Catalina. The remark sounded interesting; we took the trip today. There were many of the unnoble six hundred aboard the Cabrillo who looked and behaved as if Balaklava at its worst contained some elements they gladly would have confronted. The sea was smooth; but the swell—it was swell all right.

Saw Carl Laemmle down town the other evening. He was garbed in a cream white suit and the well known smile.

Had a chat out at the Lasky studio the other day with Fanny Ward ("Madame President"). She's a chockablock with the California stuff—you know, the buy a home kind and never, never, live any, anywhere else. Really, it's the worst case yet discovered, and apparently she thinks she means it. Not only is she founding a colony of Broadway Forgetters, but for the first summer in a long time she is passing up her two homes in England. In spite of the fact Miss Ward was talking at the end of a day in which she had played in thirty-nine scenes, which included a goodly number of changes in costume, her enthusiasm was undimmed. She is being starred in "The Marriage of Kitty." Miss Ward's first work before the camera was out in Busch's Gardens, the beauty spot in beautiful Pasadena. She naively suggested that she didn't know she had been working—she would have been amply satisfied had she been out there having a good time—and added that it seemed a shame on pay day to take such a lot of money. She said that working in pictures was so different from life on the stage; it was like beginning life all over again.

"It was, in a way, very difficult for the first few days," said Miss Ward. "I was nervous, of course, because I realized I knew nothing about picture work. All right now, though. Will you believe that I simply can't sleep after 7 o'clock in the morning—wide awake and just glad to get up. Twelve o'clock is my New York hour. I don't know when I have taken such a fancy to any place in my life. Anyone who doesn't like Los Angeles must have something wrong with them—there's a screw loose somewhere. Yes, I am willing to sell my English homes, and I don't care if I never see them or live in them again; yet heretofore it has been my rule just as soon as a season closed to hie me hence. When I have finished in the pictures in which I am to work I shall stay here the rest of the summer."

William E. Wing, the well-known film writer, who is getting better known all the time and who is also editor of the Script, while strolling through Bloom Center the other day called attention to something new. This remarkable community over in the corner of the big Selig Zoo has had its first burglary. The hotel, drug store and grocery of the village where Marshall Neilan is staging his comedies have been partially looted. The regularly labeled bottles and jars in the apothecary's shop and the type in the print shop of the Bugle escaped the marauders.

Laura Hope Crews is another of the stage stars now working at the Lasky plant. Among other plays in which she has appeared are "The Phantom Rival," in which she was featured by David Belasco; "Much Ado About Nothing," in support of John Drew, and "Blackbirds," in which she was starred at the Lyceum. It is a screen version of the latter subject Miss Crews is at present being starred under the direction of J. P. McGowan. She already has finished "The Fighting Hope," under the guidance of George Melford.

Laura Hope Crews in "The Fighting Hope."

Miss Crews will return to the New York stage in October, when she will appear under the direction of David Belasco in a play now being written for her. Talking of her new work the other day Miss Crews said she had found much that was as unusual as it was interesting. She expressed her gratitude to her directors for the help they had given her. Asked if she had noted any difficulty in putting herself into the mood of a story when playing in scenes that were not consecutive she smiled. "Yes," she replied, "I certainly did at first. I very suddenly found the difference between screen and stage when I walked into a set and was told by the director that my husband having died I was expected accordingly to throw a fit." Miss Crews and the company in her support went to San Francisco in the latter part of June for the taking of a number of scenes in "Blackbirds." On the day of our visit the player was working in an Algerian street scene that was strikingly effective. Mr. McGowan, who was a member of the Kalem company that made the trip to Africa and Jerusalem, said that an old Algerian merchant whose wares and presence were employed to add to the atmosphere had commented upon the remarkable duplication of the real thing.

Out at the L-KO studio the other afternoon Manager Victor Hermann showed a photograph vividly portraying the chances taken by screen players. It is a leap in an automobile taken from the bridge at Venice and will be seen in a subject as yet unnamed and in which Gertrude Selby, Hank Mann and Reggie Morris have the leads. Mr. Mann is driving and Mr. Morris is seen as one of the two in the air over the rear of the machine. The car smashed its way through the railing. It was, of course, one of the conditions prerequisite that the railing should be replaced and the car recovered. The machine was raised the following day and taken to the yard at the studio. Manager Herman said in spite of its battered appearance, the skill of the studio's drivers and $50 would fix it up for truck work.

By-by. We are off for Santa Catalina, after having taken unto ourselves a pair of water and dust-proof shoes—they'll be handy in snowstorms back home—a khaki suit, a bathing suit and—a regulation U. S. canteen. We are going to fish, or try to anyway, and swim, and climb the mountains of this desert island. One of the chief outdoor sports at Catalina is said to be the hunting of wild goats. But why should an inkslinger go gunning for goats with a real gun—especially when on vacation? There are fifty weeks in the year in which to pick off that particular animal—and without knowing anything about it until the mangled corpse is dragged in by its raging owner and slammed on his desk.

Again by-by! And thanks to the many fine fellows and equally fine girls for their open-handed courtesies to a pilgrim from the East. See you at the convention.

COMING VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS.

The Vitagraph Company, in a comprehensive search for the best in literature, adaptable to picturization for screen stories, has succeeded in securing a notable list of subjects by authors of international repute. Charles T. Dazey's "The Guilty Man," Archibald Clavering Gunter's "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," and Will M. Ritchey's "The Living Dead," are now ready for immediate production and when completed will be presented in five parts each and released as Blue Ribbon Features. Each picture will be enacted by a specially selected cast, composed of artists of recognized ability peculiarly adapted to the portrayal of the characters assigned them. Among the other popular books and plays that have been selected, out of a list of twenty-five of the most prominent may be mentioned, "Blue Ocean's Daughter," "My Lady's Slipper," "The Fetters of Freedom," and "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer," by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady; "Who's Who," by Richard Harding Davis; "Black Prince Carl," by Allan Campbell; "Glorious Betsy," by Rida Johnson Young; "The Money Mill," by Roy L. McCardell; "Tootles of Treasure Town," by Frederic Chapin, and many others.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FOR LONDON.

Tom E. Davies, who is one of the largest motion picture men in London, has reached America on a special mission to take D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" back to England. Mr. Davies saw the picture for the first time Monday night and is enthusiastic about it for English and foreign consumption. He predicts that it will more than duplicate its vogue in America when it reaches the other side. The present plan of Mr. Davies is to produce the picture in London at either the Alhambra or one of the more modern theaters there equally as well known. Following its establishment in the British metropolis other productions will be organized for a tour of the provinces simultaneous with the run in London. In this move it is said that Mr. Davies will have the encouragement of the British military authorities who are keen for the great spectacle because of its tremendous appeal to national pride and patriotism. While it will not be used in any sense as a propaganda the Englishmen who have seen the pictures say it will be extremely useful at this time in stirring up sentiment that will encourage enlistments in the cause.

Special Studio For Pavlowa

Universal Erects Motion Picture Stage at Sans Souci Park, Chicago, for Dancer.

FOR the first time Mme. Anna Pavlowa enjoyed the sensation of having a motion picture camera trained upon her, when the work on "The Dumb Girl of Portici," the massive production of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was begun early this week. A studio specially built for this picture only has been erected by the Universal adjoining the Midway Gardens, Chicago, Ill., where Pavlowa is booked for an engagement.

The famous dancer arrived in Chicago on a special train Saturday, July 3, accompanied by her big company of forty-five artists, and a retinue of servants of all variety. She immediately plunged into conference with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

The studio is situated in the Sans Souci, a large park, once one of the show places of Chicago, but which some time ago was partly destroyed by fire. Carpenters and scenic artists have been working like beavers at their respective tasks, turning out the interior "sets" required.

In the park are two very large stages admirably situated and suitable to motion picture uses. On their spacious boards can be put Pavlowa's entire company of forty-five dancers, including individual stars, such as Alexander Volinine, for five years director of ballet in the Imperial Opera Houses of Petrograd and Moscow, and for the past two years in entire charge of the ballet of the Paris Grand Opera. Also in the company, a star of first importance himself, is M. Ivan Clustine, Pavlowa's maitre de ballet and partner in many of her dancing duets. Clustine is choreographic director and maitre de ballet at the Imperial Opera Houses at Petrograd and Moscow and at the Paris Grand Opera House.

Bert Adler, of the Universal forces, is acting as business manager in Chicago, and is handling the huge appropriation needed for the production.

Lois Weber, who has been busy on the scenario of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," the grand opera production from the pen of Auber, known to the multitudes by his popular "Fra Diavolo," and other light works, has now whipped her script into shape and is ready for the task of her life—directing the picture. Phillips Smalley, her husband, and co-sharer of her triumphs in "Hypocrites" and "Scandal," will work shoulder to shoulder with his wife.

Inasmuch as Pavlowa will be busy with her month's engagement she will have to answer to the calls of the camera between performances. This will keep her working almost constantly. Although the work will be hard and long she is wonderfully strong and her stamia is superb.

Standard Will Release August 30

President Erb of the Combined Producers Pleased With the New Arrangement.

IT CAN scarcely be called a new combination that brings the Combined Photoplay Producers and the Standard Program together. Every one of the manufacturers releasing on the Standard Program are intimately and personally familiar with the men behind the Standard Program.

Ludwig G. B. Erb, president of the Combined Photoplay Producers, said: "I speak for all our companies when I say that in the light of our experience we have made a decided step forward in releasing through the Standard Program. As a combination of established manufacturers we had, of course, many attractive offers for our product, and a wide variety of choice was left us as to exactly how and through whom our pictures would be released. We went over the field carefully and selected the Standard Program because we knew that with a business management to take charge of the marketing end of the experience, facilities and reputation of our producing companies would be cashed in with a maximum profit.

"The Warners and Al. Lichtman are essentially business men, their marketing methods are those of business men. We are prepared to make for them any class of pictures which they may require. Men who are so constantly and closely in touch with the film industry as these men are, must respond with results embodying the exhibitor requirements. We will release our first weekly program of twelve reels on August 30, increasing our output on September 28 to eighteen reels weekly. This is not an estimate or a hope, these are actual definite dates and figures of what and when our companies will produce.

"At the present time we have six weeks supply of pictures in hand, yet future releases will only be made as fast as pictures are finished so that each release will be thoroughly edited and the producers can always maintain their lead of the release. We have been careful not to crowd the producing companies so that each picture can be prepared in the most careful painstaking manner and not slighted by undue haste. We are building for a permanent organization and nothing will be overlooked to accomplish this result."

Salisbury's Pictures at Sing Sing

DR. EDWARD A. SALISBURY, the pioneer naturalist who has taken remarkable motion pictures of wild life in the jungles and biological reserves of the United States Government for scientific research purposes, has just exhibited his motion pictures to the inmates at Sing Sing, having yielded to an invitation from Warden Osborne, who has been doing so much since his appointment to render the lives of the inmates of New York State's Penitentiary less dreary and barren.

Dr. E. A. Salisbury.

To say that the convicts enjoyed the Salisbury Wild Life Pictures is putting it mildly. Cheer upon cheer arose from the audience of 1,700 men as they gazed upon these photographs of the birds, flowers, fish and mountains to which, by reason of their forced imprisonment, many of them were forever barred.

The showing of the pictures was not without a moral touch which was brought out by Dr. Salisbury himself, who in lecturing in person upon the subject, said:

"It gives me pleasure to show these pictures to you not only because they are instructive but because I believe if men were better acquainted with the woods and out-of door life, there would be fewer inmates in our prisons. The normal, healthy love of the average man for so-called sports which draw him into closer communication with nature, lessens the temptations to which the average man is subjected in our great metropolitan centers like New York City."

At this there was a thunderous burst of applause, Dr. Salisbury seemingly having touched a note that appealed to every man present.

"I will go further than this and say that whereas many experiences have come into your lives that perhaps seem to be beyond your control," continued Dr. Salisbury, "it is not impossible that by familiarizing yourself somewhat with such subjects and by estalishing in your lives a healthy love of nature and her surroundings, the opportunities may come to all of you by which you may be able to reform your own past and sweeten the lives of others."

A standing vote was taken after the showing of the pictures, the unanimous opinion of the convicts being that the insight which Dr. Salisbury had given the audience into the lives of these wild animals and their haunts, was the most enjoyable entertainment which had ever been given at Sing Sing.

NORTHWEST STATES SOLD FOR "PROHIBITION."

A communication received from Robert T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corp., No. 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City, at the home offices announced the sale of the exhibition rights of the big anti-liquor feature photoplay, "Prohibition" for the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho on Monday, July 5. Mr. Kane is on a trip throughout the country undertaken some weeks ago for the purpose of closing a number of contracts on "Prohibition" which were tentatively made before the big feature had been completed.

As matters rest at the present time all of the New England states, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota have been definitely closed for, with a number of other important deals still pending.

"Prohibition" was installed as the special attraction at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, some days ago, and at once sprung into great popular favor.

Selig's Chicago Offices

New Suite in the Garland Building Admirably Adapted to the Conduct of Big Company's Affairs.

THE executive offices of the Selig Polyscope Company were recently moved from 20 East Randolph street, Chicago, Ill., to the new Garland block, corner Wabash avenue and Washington street, Chicago. The change was made in order to accommodate the rapidly increasing business affairs of the Selig Company. The twelfth floor of the new Garland skyscraper has been occupied by the Selig executive offices and every convenience is furnished in order to expedite the business affairs of one of the largest and most enterprising of the motion picture manufacturing companies.

The accompanying photographs will give you a good conception of the interior of the new Selig executive offices and are the more interesting to the public for the reason that while scenes of the motion picture studio interiors, pictures of actors and actresses, etc., frequently are published it is seldom that photographs of the executive offices of the greater film concerns, giving an idea of the far-reaching business organizations indispensible to the proper conduct of the motion picture industry, are presented.

The Selig executive offices in the Garland Building, Chicago, contain the private offices of William N. Selig, president, and of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager. Both of these offices are very commodious and face Lake Michigan on the east.

Adjacent to these offices is located the publicity department and to the west is the scenario editor's department. To the south is located the departments of the accountants, purchasing agents, cashiers and assistants, etc.

The shipping department is also on the twelfth floor and to the north of this department will be found the projecting parlors where Selig Red Seal Plays, Diamond Specials in three reels, and the regular releases are shown and revised. The new executive offices are said to be among the most commodious and best equipped in the Windy City.

WORLD FILM AT THE SAN FRANCISCO EXPOSITION.

World Film Corporation, at the Motion Picture Exposition and Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at San Francisco, will participate to the limit of its opportunities. W. W. Drum, the Western Division Manager of World Film, will have charge of the arrangements for assuring that all the branches in his division will be represented. These branches are San Francisco, of which R. H. Clark is manager; Los Angeles, of which C. L. Theuerkauf is manager; Seattle, George P. Endert; Denver, W. E. Knotts; Salt Lake City, Chas. R. Gilmour.

These live wire western film men will be at the convention and exposition, all the time, ready and prepared to extend a welcome to all motion picture exhibitors in general and those who show World Film in particular. At the World Film booth, Mr. Drum and his managers will have a line of paper of all the World Film releases as well as portraits, and other illustrations of the famous stars, who are seen in World Film pictures, such as Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Vivian Martin, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn and others. This gallery of beautiful pictures will, no doubt, constitute an attraction to those present at the convention. The booth will be decorated in the most artistic fashion and it will provide a rendezvous for all those exhibitors who may care to be present, and get acquainted with Mr. Drum and his managers.

GREGORY JOINS METRO.

Carl L. Gregory, the cameraman who has been connected with the Thanhouser Corporation for several years past, and who gained some distinction as the photographer with the Williamson submarine pictures, has left Thanhouser to join the forces of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

A New Kind of Weekly

Twenty-three Cities to Be Served with Pictures of Their Local News—World Film the Distributor.

By Lynde Denig.

HAVING signed contracts with newspapers in twenty-three of the cities in which the World Film Corporation operates exchanges and arranged with the World Film for the distribution of his product, H. P. Wayman, president of the National News Weekly and manager of the Triangle Theatre is Chicago, is ready for the launching of a motion picture news service unlike any at present on the market. Beginning August 2nd., the World Film will release each week in twenty-three cities, 1,000 feet of strictly news events, 500 feet of which will pertain to local happenings of particular moment to the communities served.

Mr. Wayman has based his plan on the accepted newspaper definition of news. It is generally conceded that events increase in importance as they approach the lives of those who read about them. The death of one man who jumps from the Brooklyn Bridge is more interesting to the thousands of people who cross the bridge every day, than is a catastrophe in South Africa, which causes five hundred deaths. The success of every newspaper, especially in a small town, is in the main, founded on its circulation of local happenings that would make dull reading where the names of the people and places were unknown. Mr. Wayman learned this at first hand, because he was a newspaper man before he became an exhibitor.

H. P. Wayman.

As the manager of the Triangle Theater, Mr. Wayman realized the value of striking the personal note, of appealing to the very human curiosity that craves information about immediate neighbors. Instead of publishing a conventional house organ, he issued, and still issues, a genuine small town newspaper giving the gossip of the neighborhood, supplied by ten reporters who are willing to furnish the items in return for free admission to the theatre. And carrying out this personal policy he looked for Chicago happenings in the news pictorials sent to his house, but they were all too rare. He figured that his patrons cared little about the usveiling of a monument in Kansas City, however interested they might become were the monument located on the next block. With this condition in mind, he approached the proprietor of the Chicago Herald on a proposition for the making of a news film of and for Chicago. The outcome was the "Chicago Herald Movies," which during the past year has been shown in approximately 200 theaters a week.

Not long ago Mr. Wayman tried another experience. He produced a four-reel "Neighborhood" comedy and during its run his theater was all to small to accommodate those who wanted to see themselves and their friends on the screen. With this and the success of the "Chicago Herald Movies" in mind, he planned a country-wide enlargement of his scheme and early in April he received the backing of the World Film Corporation.

In operation the system sounds simple enough. A camera man will be stationed in each of the twenty-three cities with instructions to take 500 feet of local happenings every week, the negative to be shipped to the National News Weekly laboratories in Chicago. Positive prints will be returned containing the 500 feet of subjects photographed in the city to be served, plus the pick of the events supplied by the other camera men, so that there will be a full reel equally divided between local happenings and those of national importance. Out of 11,500 feet of film it is figured that there will be no difficulty in preparing a live news issue for each city.

The contracts that Mr. Wayman has signed with the newspapers, call for a display advertisement every week and stipulate that the name of the paper shall be used on the film in conjunction with World Film. For example, the Kansas City issue will be called the Kansas City Star—World Film Weekly. Owing to experience as a newspaper man, an exhibitor and a producer, Mr. Wayman knows the business from all angles and he is making a point of getting camera men with the news instinct. It is claimed that his force will be larger than that if any other news service in this country and to make certain that the men understand the idea and realize the type of negative required, he spent last week conducting a camera men's school in Chicago.

The following incomplete list will give an idea of the quality of the publications lending their support to this interesting enterprise: Chicago Record-Herald, Minneapolis Journal, Kansas City Star, Milwaukee Journal, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Atlanta Constitution, Dallas News, Baltimore American, Pittsburgh Post-Dispatch, Portland Oregonian, Indianapolis Star, Detroit Times, Philadelphia Public Ledger, Cleveland Leader and Buffalo Enquirer. Of course there will be connections in Washington, San Francisco and other important centers.

Do Sermonizing Films Pay?

By Carl Horton Pierce.

THE question has frequently been raised in the motion picture industry as to whether films that sermonize and educate are suitable for the general run of photoplay houses. The answer to this question has been brought more forcibly to the industry through the recent successes that have been marked throughout the country of Bosworth's noted release, "Hypocrites."

When this film was placed upon the market some six months ago it was an open question of many as to whether the public would stand for having the given quality of hypocrisy flayed. Many of the wisest heads in the business stated that the public neither wished to be sermonized nor excoriated and yet there were others who recognized in this release many elements of educational merit which would be of lasting benefit to mankind provided the photoplay could be suitably launched so as to bring its merit to universal attention. Of the success of the release there can now be no question. Out of the Los Angeles Exchange alone, four prints are in constant use as against one print of each ordinary subject and the normal receipts of one Los Angeles house, Quinn's Superba, were quadrupled during the run of this picture.

In San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Denver, New Orleans, Atlanta, Athens, Ga., Knoxville, Tenn., and many others that could be mentioned, "Hypocrites" has earned more money than any other feature ever shown in these cities.

J. Eugene Pearce writing from the Tudor Theater in New Orleans, said: "We have run every big feature that has come to New Orleans, but it took 'Hypocites' to top them all."

J. H. Kunsky writing from the Washington Theater in Detroit, said: "'Hypocrites' has earned more money than has any other picture ever shown by me in Detroit, and I have run every big feature that has been shown in America."

The public at large has been practically unanimous in praise of this subject. Norman S. Jacoby for example, proprietor of the Princess Theater, Des Moines, has written: "My wife, Mary Norman, saw the masterpiece and was wonderfully impressed with the masterly treatment of the idea."

Henry S. Sheldon in the employ of the United States Government at Washington, wrote: "A quotation I made to my companion as we witnessed 'Hypocrites' sums up my feelings, 'Those who came to scoff remained to pray.' Could I conceive one such screen sermon I would feel like the inspired soul who penned, 'Let me but write a nation's songs and I care not who wins her battles.'"

Another letter received from Des Moines says: "I wonder if you realize that it is such things as this that will lift your theater above the others. Such pictures as this one teaches lessons and leads people in the right path."

Considering the educational and moral value of this film in addition to its remarkable earning capacity, many authorities in the industry are now asking themselves the question: Is it not possible to so combine the educational and uplifting value of the photoplay with its well recognized amusement value as to create a new era in the industry? Meanwhile it is the opinion of experts that it will be many a day before the like of "Hypocrites" will ever be seen upon the screen.

COL. JOE SMILEY WITH WORLD FILM.

Joseph Smiley has journeyed up from Philadelphia from the Lubin studio to join the World Film forces. He is another addition of whom the World Film Corporation may be proud, as he has a list of many excellent features to his credit. His first picture will be "The Renegade."

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Illinois State Censor Bill Will Be Vetoed.

THE LAST press news from Springfield concerning the state censorship bill—that was on Saturday, July 3—announced that the bill was farther away from approval than was believed when the legislature adjourned on Wednesday, June 30. It was also stated that a veto of the bill would not be surprising to those who were closely watching developments.

The down-state opponents of the bill are willing to let Chicago have its local censorship, as at present, but they demand a hands-off policy for down-state cities and villages.

In the expectation that Governor Dunne will sign the bill, there is already a big rush and much contention for the three positions that will be created by its passage. It appears that one senator, who voted for the bill, had one of these places promised for his wife: Now a prominent woman suffragist and wife of a representative, is urging on Secretary of State Stevenson that one of her friends be appointed as the woman member of the board, instead of the senator's wife.

Senator Olson, father of the bill, has been promised the naming of another member and there are already several hundred applicants for the third place.

Political pull, without regard to fitness, will be the guiding hand in composing the board, should the obnoxious bill become law.

Since the foregoing was written I have been advised by responsible authority that the bill will be vetoed by Governor Dunne. Although the city press has had no announcement to that effect, I can write confidently that the statement is reliable. Further particulars will be given in next week's letter.

One of the principal reasons for the vetoing of the bill is that Secretary of State Stevenson and his board of censors would find it impossible to censor all the moving pictures at the present time released in the state and also the new ones that are being placed on the market daily, without great injury to the trade.

Boomerangic Effect of Chicago Censorship.

Some time ago I referred in these columns to an evil to which several Chicago exhibitors were addicted, in connection with the censorship of films, in cases where the censor board had ruled that certain films should be exhibited to adults only. These exhibitors sought to make capital out of such rulings by placing in prominent public view, in front of their theaters, the prohibitive sign excluding minors in cases where the films screened at the time were open to adults and minors alike.

Major Funkhouser at the time threatened such offenders with a revocation of their licenses, where proofs could be obtained, on the ground that admissions were being sold under false pretenses. Now the Chicago Tribune has drawn attention to the continuance of the practice in the following editorial:

There is something too neat for explication in the fact that movie producers now use an edict of the board of censors to make a pretense of getting the worst effects from which censorship is supposed to protect us. When a movie advertisement reads that the "police positively prohibit the admission of anyone under 21" a situation is created which cannot be observed other than with chagrin by any one interested in perfecting the censorship system.

The fact that it is advertising intended to deceive and that the hopes aroused by it will be dissipated by the showing of the film does not change the other fact that the rules of the board of censors are being used as bait for persons who would like to take a surreptitious nibble at the salacious. They get cheated out of their taste of immorality, in most cases at least, but is it a good principle of censorship to permit the temptation to be offered?

Chicago Film Brevities.

At a recent meeting of the Photoplay Authors League, Inc., Los Angeles, arrangements were completed for entertaining the photoplay writers who will visit Los Angeles on the Selig Exposition Flyer, that will leave Chicago Thursday, July 8. Friday evening, July 16, has been fixed as the date for the reception that will be given by the Pacific Coast writers at the Selig Zoo. The reception will be given in the Amusement Building, where a banquet and ball will be held.

Max Hyman and Sam Katz, proprietors of the Avon theater, 3327 Fullerton Avenue, this city, paid us a visit last week and renewed subscriptions for the World. Messrs. Hyman and Katz have been partners in the Avon for about a year. At one time they were owners of the Hyman & Hirsch Candy Factory in Chicago, which was located at 404-06 W. North Avenue. They formerly owned the Janet, Barry, New Illinois, Strand and Wallace theaters, of which they now retain the Janet and the Wallace. The Avon was opened November, 1914, and has 1,000 seats. They report very satisfactory business since the opening. The Avon can boast of having one of the finest pipe organs on the Northwest side. Miss Hazel Spaulding, one of Chicago's popular organists, plays the instrument. Programs of six reels consisting of all the leading makes of films, are offered at the Avon for 10 cents.

Fred S. Kahn, who, with his brother Albert, owns and manages the Austin theater, West Madison and Fifty-sixth street, called one day last week. They purchased this house about two months ago and are much pleased with the business, which has been getting better every day since they took possession. The Austin seats 560 people, and programs of Licensed regular service and features of all makes, excepting the Paramount, are offered at 10 cents admission for adults and five cents for children. Six and seven reels are offered at these prices. Mr. Kahn stated that a new heating plant has been installed and that the ventilation at the Austin is perfect. Mr. Kahn prides himself on the fine projection of pictures at his house. Two Simplex machines are used. It is the intention of the Kahn brothers to branch out gradually in the exhibition field, and they are now considering the purchase of several houses, and are looking out for desirable sites. Mr. Kahn devoted his time, about a year previous to the purchase of the Austin, in attending to the bookings of "Dan," a Lew Dockstader feature, for which he owns the state rights to Indiana and Illinois. Mr. Kahn's father, Henry Kahn, is president of the Automatic Exposition Co., which controls the Bijou Dream, located next door to the popular Orpheum, on State street.

Alfred Hamburger, of the Hamburger theatrical enterprises, purchased the Panorama Theater from the Ascher brothers one day last week. This makes the fourteenth on the Hamburger circuit. The Panorama is practically a new theater, having been erected about a year and a half ago. It seats 900 people and has a fine pipe organ and a well selected orchestra. It is situated in a fine neighborhood, at Fifty-first Street and Prairie Avenue. Another important deal was concluded between Mr. Hamburger and Nathan Ascher, by which, through a co-partnership agreement, the Terminal theater, Lawrence and Spaulding Avenues, and the Ravenswood theater, Lawrence Avenue and Kedzie Street, now in course of construction, will be operated jointly. These houses will be ready for opening some time in August. Each will have a seating capacity of a thousand and a costly pipe organ.

Within a few weeks the Selig regular program will be increased by a Selig jungle zoo wild animal photoplay, two reels in length. These wild animal photoplays, it is expected, will be released at the rate of two a month.

Harry J. Cohen, who is well known in film circles here, stopped over Saturday, July 3, on his way to New York from Denver, where he opened an office for the Metro Pictures Corporation, for which Mr. Cohen is the supervisor of offices. A. S. Bailey has been appointed manager of the Denver office. Mr. Cohen, who visited Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver and this city during his trip, reported that business is very good for his company.

Clyde Martin, well known among exhibitors throughout the country as a clever adaptor and player of music for the accompaniment of moving pictures, was in the city last week. Mr. Martin stated that he returned from the Pacific Coast about three months ago and that on his return trip he had filled engagements throughout the South and in Kansas and Missouri, in which territory he found the moving picture business in good condition. Mr. Martin is now playing through Wisconsin and Illinois, which he expects to complete in about a month and a half, after which he intends returning to the Pacific Coast with a Griffith production, playing one night stands on the trip and on the Coast.

"The Fatal Tempter," the first Essanay photoplay in which Henry Walthall is featured, is said to give that clever actor fine scope for the display of his emotional powers.

Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Brothers, will construct a new moving picture theater at South Ashland Avenue and Sixty-third Street, shortly. The theater, combined with a store and office building, will cost about $80,000. Architect Henry L. Newhouse has already prepared the plans. The Ascher brothers now own the President, Cosmopolitan, Frolic, Lakeside and Drexel Square theaters.

I regret to announce the sad death by accident of Miss Dessa Rubens, sister of Julius Rubens, owner of the Fox theater in Aurora, and partner in the Rubens Bros. enterprises. Julius Rubens was extremely fond of his sister, who was crippled some time ago, and the last of his many gifts was a new five-passenger touring car. It was on the first trip of this car that Miss Rubens met her death. It was across country and she was accompanied by her cousin, Edgar Lewis, and other relatives, and finding the strain of driving too much for her strength, she surrendered the wheel to Mr. Lewis. Shortly afterward the machine skidded and turned turtle over an embankment. Miss Rubens was crushed under the back of the tonneau and immediately killed. The deep condolence of the Chicago office of the World is offered the stricken relatives.

"The Wizard of Oz" and "Sparrows" was the Saturday weekly offering made the young folks at Orchestra Hall, on the morning of July 3. These special programs for children, which were originated by Mr. Divine, president of the Strand Theater Co., now controlling Orchestra Hall, are creating much interest among parents of the young folks as well as contributing greatly to the amusement of the latter.

Selig's Red Seal feature, "The Rosary," opened at the Studebaker for an indefinite run Saturday, July 3. Already this fine photoplay has created wide interest among moving picture theater goers.

"The White Sister," in which Viola Allen has won an artistic triumph, has done so well at the Fine Arts theater during its first week's run, that Alfred Hamburger will continue it until July 17.

W. C. Hoffman, who has been steadily engaged for the past ten months in booking "The Spoilers" throughout the state of Illinois, exclusively, paid us a brief call last week. Mr. Hoffman considers that this makes a record for the booking of any single feature, as it supported him continuously throughout the period mentioned, it having been repeated as many as four and five times in several houses. In the near future Mr. Hoffman will also attend to the bookings of "Guarding Old Glory" in the state of Illinois, as well as attending to the bookings of "The Spoilers." Mr. Hoffman left Tuesday morning to arrange for return bookings throughout northern Illinois. He informed me that fully seventy-eight per cent of all the houses which showed "The Spoilers" have arranged for return dates.

The Celebrated Players Film Co. has purchased the rights for Illinois and Wisconsin to "The Melting Pot," the Cort Film Company's six-reel production. It will open a run of four weeks at the Fine Arts theater Saturday, July 17.

Arrangements have been made for a run of "The Birth of a Nation" in Milwaukee, where its exhibition is awaited with eager anticipation and curiosity. Tremendous crowds still throng the Illinois, in this city, twice daily.

The "Dictator" and "Guarding Old Glory" were the attractions at the Colonial on Independence Day and, as an additional mark of good measure, the Tribune's Animated Weekly with old Doc Yak and world's news events was added, all for 25c admission. Manager Field informed me that "Guarding Old Glory" especially took well with the large audiences.

Joe Bloom, formerly with the Celebrated Players Film Co., this city, has succeeded M. Winik as manager of the Apex Feature Service in Seattle, and is also sales agent for the Washington Film Corporation of that city. Mr. Bloom is about to put on the market a film bearing the title, the "Ski Man," which was taken in the Cascade Mountains near Hot Springs, in mid winter.

The Selig Exposition Flyer will leave the Northwestern station, this city, Thursday morning, July 8, with 180 tourists aboard. A train of ten cars, with a "double header" all the way, will rush the sightseers to the Coast and back.

E. Wertheimer of London

A Most Enterprising Film Man Who Favors the American Market Above Every Other.

E. WERTHEIMER is a man worth knowing. Like most men worth knowing he is not very anxious to parade in the lime light. He is therefore comparatively unknown to the rank and file of filmdom, though the people who have big features to sell or who are looking for a man to "swing big things" are fairly familiar with the name and fame of Wertheimer.

Mr. Wertheimer is an Englishman, a Londoner, who twice or three times a year slips very quietly into New York, does his buying for British and Colonial rights on big film and on big theatrical productions and then just as quietly sails back to his home. A representative of The Moving Picture World found Mr. Wertheimer at the Hotel Algonquin and had some trouble in convincing him that the readers of the paper would be interested both in his views and in his transactions. He was not averse to speaking of conditions in England.

E. Wertheimer.

"When it comes to telling what a fellow is doing it is doubtful wisdom in my judgment. The other fellow may learn too much of what you are doing. Conditions in England in the motion picture business are splendid. Strange as it may sound the war, instead of hurting business, has actually improved it. Two things have helped to bring about this seemingly anomalous state of affairs. In the first place, as you know from the papers, the streets of London are in utter darkness at night. Walking on the streets is no longer a pleasant way of passing the time. People must have something to occupy their minds and amuse themselves, hence the increase in the attendance at the motion picture theaters. Another reason is the great prosperity that has come to England. Everybody has employment and everybody has money to spend. I am taking with me to England a large number of film productions of the first order. Among these features is "The Fighting Chance," a splendid filmed version of the famous story by Robert W. Chambers. This feature, which is unsurpassed by the grandeur and lavishness of its settings and indeed of its whole plan, was produced by E. K. Lincoln, formerly of the Vitagraph. I have concluded contracts with Ethel Grandin and Ray Smallwood and am taking nine of their productions with me. I have contracted altogether for fifty-two. I have made arrangements with George Kleine for handling some of his finest productions and we hope the results will be mutually satisfactory. This is my second trip this year and I expect to be back in September.

"I will say that we in England do favor the American film product. I am personally glad to think that the American market is the gainer in England by the elimination of the German and Austrian films. There never were many Austrian films, but Germany flooded England with a lot of cheap stuff, some of which might justly have been described atrocious. The prospects for disposing of good American films in England are better today than ever before in the history of films."

Mr. Wertheimer sailed two days after the interview, that is to say, on July 3, on board an American steamer.

RICHARD CARLE IN HIS OWN PLAY FOR PATHE.

Pathe announces the acquisition of the picture rights to Richard Carle's big dramatic success, "Mary's Lamb," which enjoyed a run of three years upon the stage. Mr. Carle himself will play the lead in the Pathe picture. The famous player in his own famous play should prove to be a strong attraction.

Doings at Los Angeles

WHEN the National Editorial Association leaves California they will remember Inceville, where they were so royally entertained by the makers of the pictures. The pencilmen invaded the place in a long automobile train which was made up in Los Angeles and Santa Monica. They were shown around the big camp and then the barbecue was indulged in, after which the mayors of nearby cities spoke welcoming words, followed by singing by Truly Shattuck, one of Ince's stars, cartooning by Clyde Tracy, Inceville's artist, and a little talk by W. S. Hart, the famous Western character.

Hard luck has pounced upon husky Lloyd V. Hamilton who is featured in Kalem's Ham comedies with Bud Duncan. Fortunately there are quite a number of releases finished ahead, and while Ham is recovering from the effects of a bad fall down a hill, the Ham comedies will go on just the same as usual. Ham was working at the beach and had to roll down a hill, but when he fell ahead of time he suffered a compound fracture of his left leg. He was taken to a hospital at the beach where he has been in bed for a week. As soon as possible he will be taken to his Hollywood home. At the hospital Lloyd Hamilton said the picture he was working in was to have been called "The Experiment," but that he did not like the way the experiment came out on him. It should have been "The Accident."

Another comedy company has been added to the Essanay studio where Charles Chaplin works. It is headed by Albert W. Hale and he has as his leading players Marjorie Reiger and Leo White. They have completed their first picture which is called "Fudge and Petticoats." Chaplin has completed a multiple reel comedy called "The Woman."

Robert Levy and his people of the Eclair are waiting and watching for news from the East which will bid them resume production at the Hollywood studios. They have been idle for a week now, the stop having been caused by the change in the Features Ideal releasing program.

The Farrar company from Lasky's studio will soon go to San Francisco to film scenes for "Carmen," which has been started here by Cecil DeMille. The stadium will be used as the main setting for the scenes to be done there. Blanche Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell are working under Frank Reicher in "The Case of Becky." George Melford has started another picture which will feature Charlotte Walker.

Bosworth Inc., is producing "Home Politics" with Macklyn Arbuckle in the lead. The piece was written from "The Reform Candidate" which had been successful on the real stage. Myrtle Stedman will play opposite. The piece was written by Mr. Arbuckle and Edgar A. Guest.

Clarence G. Badger who for some time past has turned out most of the scenarios for Allen Curtis and his comedians, has taken charge of a company of players and is making comedies.

The Quality Pictures studio is nearing completion and the small army of workers are making the place look like new. Already the stages are laid and the diffusing system is being installed. The dressing room street and the other big buildings are soon to be finished. Francis X. Bushman and the company are busy producing.

The other night a sporting club in Venice gave a boxing fightfest which was featured with picture people. Roscoe Arbuckle was referee, and a good one. The main contestants were Frankie Dolan of the Essanay and Alen McNeil of the Universal. The place was crowded with picture folk.

H. Pathe Lehrman has gone to the mountains at Arrowhead where he will remain for two months with a company to complete at least five big pictures. He has with him Charlie Wininger, Ray Griffith, Gertrude Selby and a dozen other people. Eight more will go up during the period while the pictures are being made. The L-KO studio is quite a busy place these days, so many carpenters are working there. A new building for dressing rooms is being constructed and a big plunge is being put in for the swimmers and water scenes. A complete laboratory is also under course of construction.

Charles M. Peck has resigned as assistant manager of the Balboa company at Long Beach. As yet no successor has been named to take the place of Mr. Peck, but both the Horkheimer brothers will probably do the work. Will M. Ritchey who turned out the scenarios for the "Who Pays" series and from whose stories the newspapers wrote the serial, has been advanced from scenario editor to chief scenario editor in charge of the script department of the big plant. Six authors are now working for the Balboa under Mr. Ritchey.

"A Natural Man," a Vitagraph which is to be released as a special two part feature on the thirteenth, is apparently a very good picture. It was made here by Ulysses Davis with Otto Lederer, Alfred Vosburgh, Myrtle Gonzales and George Stanley. In this picture Otto Lederer is an old man and his makeup certainly shows what he can do in the art of disguising himself.

The bathing girl parade at Ocean Park this season drew out a number of beautiful picture maids as entrants. Last year the event was won by Margaret Gibson of the Vitagraph, but who is now with the Ince forces. She would have entered this year, but owing to work on Sundays could not get free. The winner was Miss Vivian Rice of the Universal, Marjorie Reiger of the Essanay was second, and Edna Purviance of the Chaplin players was third, so you can see that the picture girls had it all over the others. Jumping from third to sixth places, Velma Lefler, who works at Inceville, captured a trophy, and Rena Rogers was another cup winner, being with the National Company in Hollywood. The parade was shot by the Sunset and Pathe weeklies. Mr. Buffum, cameraman for Pathe, got some fine pictures for the Southern California section of the weekly.

The Kalem studio in Glendale has been gone over again with the result that a new stage was built and artificial lights installed. In the Girl Detective series this week's picture is "The Hotel Detective," and in it a big cast is used in the lobby scenes of the hostelry. Helen Holmes is doing "Helen's Vindication" under the direction of James Davis, who was formerly assistant to J. P. McGowan.

After being "killed" in the "Diamond" series and dropped out for several chapters, Eugenie Forde is back on the screen after an eight weeks vacation spent at San Francisco and Los Angeles. She returned to her mountain bungalow on the state highway, which is known as Forde's Everwelcome Bungalow, the scene of many merry social parties.

"Blackbirds" with Laura Hope Crews featured, has been started by J. P. McGowan at the Lasky studio. Thomas Meghan is also in the cast. Geraldine Farrar has received a message from the U. S. Custom authorities giving her permission to keep the costumes she imported from France under bond to return within a year, for another half year. The rich costumes will be used in "Carmen" now under production. Prof. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is visiting in the West, came to the Lasky studio to see the pictures made and to meet Geraldine Farrar. He saw her when she first sang in Berlin in opera, and now he has witnessed her first appearance on the screen in this country.

Sportsmen on the Pacific are eagerly watching for the palatial yacht "Vergona," the floating hotel which belongs to Captain Wilbert Melville of the Lubin Western forces. She left New York this week bound for the Pacific via the canal. The yacht was at one time the property of ex-Governor Flower of New York.

The Morosco studio has been enlarged to the extent of a new stage with roof and diffusing system sixty feet long, and about forty feet wide, to make plenty of room for the two producing companies which are busy now. When Herbert Standing was with the Criterion Theater in London he met Cyril Maude, then a promising young actor. That was many years ago, and recently when Mr. Maude arrived here to work in films he again met Mr. Standing, and the two former stage men had quite a talk of old times.

Julian Eltinge is said to have purchased an acre of land at Silverlake, near Los Angeles, where he will erect a handsome summer home for himself.

At the Lubin studio Leon D. Kent is putting on "Jealousy" with Dorothy Barrett, Melvin Mayall and Robert Gray starred. The studio is being prepared for the whirlwind razing which will soon take place preparatory to erecting the big concrete buildings. Captain Melville is busy looking after the construction of the new studio.

At Santa Barbara the American company, as usual supported by the citizens, was the biggest factor in the Fourth celebration this year. They staged a few scenes during the big day's events which represented the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Henry Otto, manager, came down to the city to procure the proper costumes for the event.

Watch for "Aloha," a release made at Inceville by Dick Stanton, having Willard Mack as its star. Some fine scenery is shown, and a few feet of really spectacular stuff.

Eddie Foy has been signed by Mack Sennett to work in Keystone comedies. He will arrive here in a few days to start work at once on a two reel special comedy. It is not stated whether all the little Foys will come to the studio with him or not.

Last week the Los Angeles Baseball Club held a benefit for the widow of "Hap" Hogan, who died here recently. The picture people gave their generous support, there being representatives from several companies to draw the crowds. Charlie Chaplin and some Essanayers were there, and Ford and Mabel, with Roscoe, frolicked around on the lawns. James Snyder, while taking part in the funny ball game, fell and broke his shoulder.

Tully Marshall, famous Broadway star, has arrived at the Mutual studios, and is appearing in "The Sable Lorcha," under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Mary Alden is the latest actress to go on a vacation, and according to one Benjamin Zeidman she has leased a big steam launch to take a water trip during the layoff.

Pathe's "Neil of the Navy" serial starts about the 28th of next month, according to B. E. Loper, manager of the local Pathe Exchange, at 114 East Seventh street. An installment of this great national interest serial will be put out every week. Another announcement is that the Pathe Company will release large features in five and six reels that are taken from popular plays and books. The first of these films, to be known as the "Gold Rooster" brand, will be "The Beloved Vagabond," by Edward J. Locke, directed by Edward Jose, and starring Edwin Arden. The prints on this subject were so beautiful that they were sent to Paris to be hand colored.

Directing in a bathing suit is what Dell Henderson of Keystone did this week. Having a lot of water close up scenes to do he decided to get into a suit himself, so that he could keep close to the players without getting wet. He was not in the picture either. CLARKE IRVINE

COLORED PICTURES IN BILBAO.

Consul Wilbur T. Gracey, at Seville, Spain, says that a press dispatch announces the first showing in Bilbao of moving pictures in their natural colors. It seems pertinent to suggest to manufacturers of projecting apparatus and films in the United States of the probable opportunity to introduce these goods here, especially now, at the beginning of summer, when the motion picture is practically the only amusement of the people. In all the principal plazas and gardens of Seville screens are erected and small tables and chairs set out, the exhibitors either making their profits from the drinks sold or by rental of chairs at 2 cents each. Thousands of people go nightly to the different plazas and gardens, and the entire life of the city for about four months centers around these moving picture shows. Anything in the nature of a novelty is sought, and the exhibition of pictures in their natural colors would undoubtedly attract the crowd, and manufacturers should therefore find a ready market. It is probable that credit arrangements would have to be made with the purchasers, as it is unusual to sell here for cash. Pathe Freres of Paris and the Gaumont Co. both have their agencies here, through whom most of the business of this city is carried on.

MOTION PICTURE THEATERS IN PERSIA.

The only picture theater in Teheran, Persia, has a seating capacity of 200, is open each day from 8 p. m. to 9.30 p. m., and is well patronized. Electric power is used. The program is changed every third day. There are no film agencies in Teheran and the theater obtains its films from dealers in Russia, all films being second hand. French, German and Russian pictures are being shown at present. The most popular pictures are comic, tragic, war, and chases with amusing falls. Explanations are generally printed in Persian and French, although English, German and Russian are sometimes used. Films are imported in tin boxes, the duty charged being 5 per cent.

T. N. Heffron With Selig

T. N. HEFFRON is another versatile director of motion picture productions who was recently captured by the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Heffron is engaged at the Chicago studios of the Selig Company in directing the production of Selig Red Seal Plays. His first production completed was "The House of a Thousand Candles," featuring Mr. Harry Mestayer, Miss Grace Marmond and an all-star cast. He is now engaged on his second production, "A Black Sheep," with Otis Harlan in the title role.

T. N. Heffron.

Before entering the motion picture field Mr. Heffron was an actor and was also stage director for Mrs. Fisk, John Mason, Charles Frohman, Al Woods, Cohan and Harris, William A. Brady, Kirke La Shelle, Augustus Thomas and others, and played leading heavies and produced in stock nearly every play available for stock purposes in the principal cities of America.

Mr. Heffron commenced producing feature pictures over three years ago and has been identified with many of the leading manufacturers of motion pictures. In motion pictures he has directed such stars as John Barrymore, May Irwin, Tyrone Power, Hazel Dawn, Paul McAllister, Edwin Ables, Marguerite Clark and David Higgins.

"TWILIGHT SLEEP" NEW OFFICES.

The Motherhood Educational Society, Inc., announce the removal of their offices from 140 West 42nd street, New York City, to 110 West 34th street. This is the organization which owns and controls the "Twilight Sleep" film and lecture and are now disposing of some of the states rights.

Considerable interest has been evinced in this feature on account of the strong opposition which it has encountered in some of the larger cities. The producers state that all the attacks have been directly traced to the medical societies, who naturally oppose the production because it is considered a breach of "medical ethics" for subjects of this nature, which have heretofore been religiously veiled with mystery, to be so lucidly explained to the lay public.

H. D. Ashton, the general manager, states that there is a great deal more interest shown in the proposition by the Western exhibitors than by those in the East, and that the inquiries from that source are coming in so fast that it keeps him busy signing for telegrams.

LOUISE GUNNING FOR THE SCREEN?

Since the announcement in the dramatic and musical papers that Miss Louise Gunning, the American prima donna, was now under the management of Philip Mindil, her new manager has received several tempting offers for this well-known singer to become a moving picture star. While Miss Gunning's popularity, beauty and acting ability fit her eminently for the screen, it is not probable that she will listen to the tempter's voice for more than one or two pictures at the most, as her superiority in stellar operatic roles has placed her in a position where she is in great demand. However, Mr. Mindil regarded the offers from filmdom as of sufficient importance to wire his star, asking her to come on as soon as possible from her western ranch, where she has been resting, for the purpose of giving them serious consideration. He stated that he expected her at an early date, when she would also decide which one of the several musical starring offers to accept.

BERT ENNIS REPRESENTING EASTERN FILM CO.

Bert Ennis, who has been identified for the last two years with the Eclair Company, has become publicity and manager of sales for the new Eastern Film Corporation located at Providence, R. I. This is a new organization with big plans, which Mr. Ennis promises to give us the details of later.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

SOLVING THE PROBLEM.

EDUCATIONAL pictures are not doing the work within their power. It has been said that, "theirs is an education that does not educate," doubtless, but then it is because of a lack of its application to the desired result. If the educational powers of kinematography are not producing results, it is surely because they are not being sufficiently applied to the purposes for which they are intended. From this condition springs the problem of:—

How to Make the Educational Picture Serviceable.

Enterprising and intelligent exhibitors have done much to encourage a place for the educational pictures in their regular programs; in many places they have been well received and have also been profitable. In New York City especially has it been proved that a daily program with educationals inserted, has in every way been successful. Only recently an exhibitor in a large town in an adjoining state wrote lamenting the fact that he could not raise the standard of his program because more people were not aware of the value of these better pictures. There is only one way to make these pictures serviceable, and that is by making them popular; it is safe to say that the more they are used, the more they will be called for. It should be distinctly remembered that there is a difference between the educational of today and the so-called educationals of a few years ago. Whereas formerly they were dry and monotonous, they are now full of life and interesting; thanks largely to the topicals which have blazed a way for them. Their former disjointed and disconnected appearance which created a yawning in the audience when they appeared on the screen, has been replaced by an awakening and an interest which is pleasing. Another means of making them serviceable is for the intended users of them to seek guidance from any of the several agencies which make the time and place for the proper use of educational pictures a specialty. These agencies have been instrumental in bringing the educational picture out of its chaotic condition, and by classification have made it serviceable for any class of entertainments as also for schools and churches.

Some Practical Ideas.

Among the many hindrances to the more general adoption of moving pictures in educational and religious centers, is the lack of practical adaptability. It is pleasing to note that all other difficulties seem to have passed away. The clergyman critic is now a rarity, and the scholastic questioner is no longer hindering with his queries; alone the difficulty of getting right down to work remains.

The installation of a plant is a most formidable subject to many, while others add the prospect of a difficulty in running the projectoscope, together with the limitations of laws of fire, insurance, etc. form a seeming insurmountable obstacle. In the first place it should be pointed out that all these difficulties have been handled by experts and authorities, therefore it only remains for anyone in trouble or doubt to avail himself of the ready to hand experience, and profit thereby. If no closer help is available the Moving Picture World is ready to help in any possible situation.

Unfortunately the majority of users of educational pictures only, such as schools and churches, not being directly connected with the trade may not be readers and users of the Moving Picture World, this is in itself a hindrance, making it all the more necessary for the readers of this article to pass it on to those whom they feel it may help, and so bring them in touch with the authorities and powers they so much need.

The cost of a thorough and suitable equipment varies from three hundred to five hundred dollars according to the need of electric wiring, for the latter amount one could depend upon an outfit of the best order thoroughly satisfying, with all insurance requirements, and capable of doing everything known and required in perfect kinematography.

For many churches this may seem a large sum, but if there is already an electric supply some reduction could be counted upon. To be fully protected with fireproof booth and all necessary safety protection even the largest amount seems small when the perfection and protection it brings is considered.

Operating the machine which at first seems formidable is soon made easy. When we remember that today the average youth can run and often adjust an automobile, a picture machine presents a less difficult problem. There is perhaps not a church or school without an intelligent person who could not only fulfil the requirements, but, if necessary in cities where the law requires, readily pass an examination for operator's license.

As an investment, experience proves that it is readily profitable, soon returning the original cost and thereafter becoming a source of profit while giving instructive entertainment.

Keeping Abreast of the Times.

It is rapidly becoming a question if the school or church which is not using the picture teacher can be said to be fulfilling its standard purpose. Schools recognizing this are almost universally adopting some even temporary means whereby they can secure the benefits obtainable, the primary fact having been established that the picture instructor is a necessity.

The constant complaint from the churches that their hold on the people seems less in proportion than is naturally expected, seems to find a ready solution in the picture work. Conspicuous instances in many centers of the country show how the adoption by the church of the picture aid, has proved overwhelmingly advantageous. The world's progress demands a keeping abreast of the times, those not marching to the advance tune will fall in the rear, with only themselves to blame; no longer can ignorance be an excuse when knowledge is so abundant; for all who will the way is open and ready.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

Complaints against the evils of the moving pictures seem now to be reduced to a minimum, never since their inception has there been so little to arouse even the most fastidious; as a consequence the demand for censorship is on the decline, thus proving two things:—First, that the development of the moving picture is a cultured one, which, in the second place, eradicates its own evils. Superior taste and talent in the studios and factories, growing moving picture culture with the public at large combined with educative interests have caused this most satisfactory progress. Every day records great changes in the centers of the moving picture trade, all of which are along continually advancing lines, proving that the pictures are one of the great powers of the day in the lives of the people, consequently their power for good is almost momentarily increasing.

Wisely selected films for general purposes are found listed monthly in the "Woman's Home Companion," also a question box which is of an interesting nature quite apart from what can be properly treated in a trade paper like the Moving Picture World.

It is both interesting and helpful to notice how standard magazines are lending themselves to the question of "better films" and "educational pictures." Too much good reading both descriptive and instructive cannot be given upon so great and popular a subject as the moving picture; it will surely be profitable for those interested in the educational uses of the pictures to follow these interesting articles, especially as these magazines are all to be found in the average American home, or more essentially so in the homes of ministers and teachers, to whom the information is of untold value, in all cases leading them to a closer knowledge of the "ways and means" in best-result moving pictures.

On leaving the Strand Theater, New York, Mr. Rothapfel has proved to the world that the educational picture has a place in the theater at once acceptable, entertaining, constant and permanent. Champions of the cause of the educational propaganda are much indebted to him for this successful proof.

The Strand Theater has made the reputation of the "model moving picture house," its perfect program, its music, its high moral tone, its educational influence together with its graded prices of admission, mark an epoch in high class exhibitions, always beyond criticism, always insuring commendation.

In his new venture we look for Mr. Rothapfel to exceed himself if possible, and because of what he has done in the past, the Moving Picture Educator is confident of another great advance in the best means and methods of perfect kinematography.

The June releases of educational films though small are of good quality. A series entitled "Japan" in six parts is announced by the United Photo Plays Co. which suggests something good. The Pathe Exchange, Inc. have an additional film on birds entitled "An Intimate Study." There is one feature about these films, in that they are indeed intimate, being photographed in patient detail at very close quarters. The sparrows and chaffinch are here depicted and described, together with a very special study in which young birds are being taught to fly by the mother birds, this is an unusual detail.

All topicals keep us posted in events at home and abroad especially in parts of the war where scenes of an instructive nature can be taken, and should be seen by all who desire an intelligent portrayal of these incidents.

NEW SCENIC EDUCATIONALS.

Essanay has entered a new field for that company in putting out scenic pictures. These scenes are being taken largely in the west. There are many views taken in Colorado and in states bordering on the Rocky Mountains. It is its intention, however, to take scenes of all the beauty spots in America, especially those not too much frequented by tourists. The idea is to find all the beauty spots not already thoroughly known to travelers. These will be interspersed, however, with well known scenes which the public enjoy seeing more than once. They are being released in connection with Essanay's animated cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson. The cartoons are 500 feet in length and the scenic the same, giving a diversity in pictures and not too much of one thing.

ARTISTIC SETTING FOR "THE WHITE SISTER."

The possibilities for brilliant exhibitions of feature picture plays was displayed on the occasion of the presentation of "The White Sister," at the Academy of Music in New York City on June 28, 29, and 30.

This famous show-house is part of the Fox chain of theaters and at the personal request of William Fox, S. L. Rothapfel arranged a special musical score and appropriate stage settings for an elaborate offering of Viola Allen's screen debut in the big V-L-S-E feature.

The stage was arranged much after the style that Mr. Rothapfel inaugurated at the Strand Theater, the orchestra of eighteen pieces being seated on the stage proper, surrounded by an embankment of flowers.

A curtain was arranged over the screen to be raised and lowered on the reflected play as it is on the speaking stage.

Just prior to the projection of "The White Sister" a solo was rendered, after which the picture was heralded by the sounding of chimes, and a few appropriate bars of music were played as the curtain was raised on the first scene introducing Miss Allen.

Throughout the entire presentation of the piece soft, harmonious music was played, continuously rising and falling like the sound waves from an organ, the rise and fall of the music being timed in close sympathy with the degrees of emotion expressed by the actress in her portrayal of the tragic love story.

At 7.30 in the evening on the opening night every seat in the immense orchestra was occupied; at 8 o'clock both balconies were filled.

CARL M. LE VINESS TO DIRECT SYDNEY AYRES.

Carl M. Le Viness, for two years director with the Eclair Company, has been employed by the Universal Film Mfg. Co. to direct Sydney Ayres and his company of Big U players including Doris Pawn, Val Paul and Rea Martin. His first production will be a two-reel story entitled "Around the Corner."

LUND FINISHED FIVE-REELER.

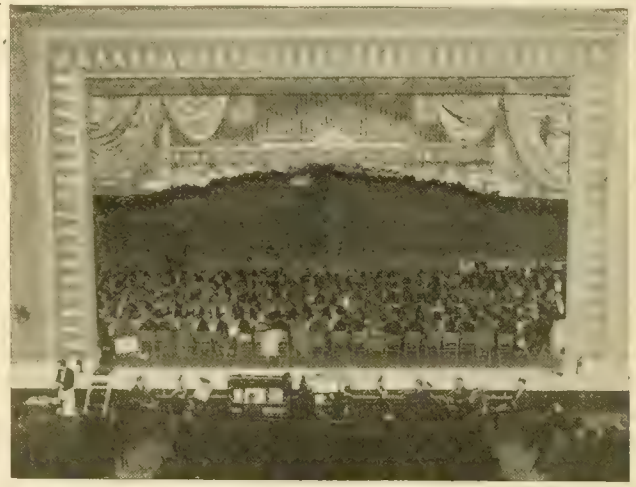
Oscar A. C. Lund and his company of feature players have finished their first big five-reel Universal production, "Just Jim," a sensational story of the real West.

settings and was made under the personal supervision of Forbes Robertson. In it he is supported by Gertrude Elliott and the entire Drury Lane Company. It will be the Knickerbocker release of July 7.

Picture Men Entertained.

Guests Meet Pseudo Charlie Chaplin, and Make Merry At Get-Together Gathering.

LARGE numbers of representatives from various branches of the moving picture industry were the guests of the Rochester Theater Company, owners and operators of the Victoria theater in Rochester, N. Y., at an entertainment and "Dutch lunch" given at midnight of Wednesday, June 9. The affair was held at the company's theater, and it was admirably handled by John J. Farren, secretary of the Rochester Theater Company and manager of the Victoria. He realized that a happy get-together gathering would be instrumental in establishing a closer bond of friendship between the different factions of the business, and the result was that many new friendships were engendered and old acquaintances were renewed. The spirit of good fellowship and harmony prevailed throughout the entire occasion, and everyone who participated voted the affair a big success.



Scene at the Dinner to Film Men by Rochester Theater Co

A conception of the crowd can be had from the accompanying illustration which was taken on the stage of the Victoria, showing the long tables filled with men who have the advancement of the moving picture business at heart. The assemblage was composed of exhibitors, picture theater managers, exchangemen, salesmen, operators, stage employees, and in fact anyone connected with the business who could possibly attend. The various numbers of the entertainment, of which boxing was one, were executed with precision, and the big "eats" agreed with the palates of those with epicurean tastes.

When Mr. Farren conceived the idea he consulted the heads of the different trade organizations who agreed with him and had tickets for the event distributed in this way. To add a little ginger to the occasion (and incidentally giving the guests a little exercise) the sponsors for the get-together movement had a local impersonator attired to represent the famous Essanay comedian, Charlie Chaplin, and had him "arrive" on the 11.20 p. m. train at the Buffalo station of the New York Central Railway where he was met by the guests. The impersonator's disguise was almost impenetrable, and many "fell" for the deception. "Charlie Chaplin" headed a fifteen piece band which was followed by all the participants and marched to the Victoria. The line of march was kept clear by a squad of "Keystone Cops," and the music was punctuated by ovations from the spectators. The assistance of the local police was asked so that the entrance to the Victoria might be kept clear of curious onlookers to permit the participants to get into the place.

Among those present were E. M. Saunders of the New York City branch of the Metro Film Corporation, C. A. Taylor of the Buffalo office of the Metro Film Corp., I. A. Shapiro, E. M. Robins of the Syracuse office of the Fox Film Corp., A. N. McGovern, special representative of the New York City office of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., A. Benedict and H. F. Brink of the Buffalo office of the General Film Company, A. R. Thomas of the Mutual Film Corp., Buffalo, and E. B. Shaw of the Albany and Buffalo offices of the North American Film Corp.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Llewllyn Has Wented.

JOHN W. LLEWLLYN has disappointed us. The inventor of the one-piece coat and skirt hanger, the inventor of the Chaplin jumble-card and a lot of other really original ideas has curled up. Same old disease; threatened opposition. The "ring," and we don't believe a place the size of West Point, Ga., can put up a decent sort of ring, boosted the license with the evident intention of getting him out of town. He went! He had five or six houses down there, but he kissed them all good-bye and went away when so clever an advertiser could have put the ring in the condition technically known as "on the flotz" in about three months. In that respect Mr. Llewllyn does not differ in the least from some of the big New York drama theater managers who went to the theatrical hades by the same route. If you are scared of the other fellow, he won't lick you. You'll beat him to it. Don't curl up. If the "ring" gets jealous of your success and ties the license fee to a sky rocket, blow out the match. If you are too late for that, hit the cyclone cellar until the stick comes down, then pick up the stick and club the hides off the ring. Tell the people you would give better shows, but the ring won't let you. Give facts and figures. Show the license prices in nearby towns. Compare them. Prove that the tax is clearly a hold up. If you'll only fight half as hard as you'll run you can form your own party and be the next mayor. All we started out to say was that Mr. Llewllyn has wented and for a time we can expect no good from the Vaudette at West Point, but we've seen the bogey Competition scare so many others that we hate to see a good man wear out sole leather running.

But one good thing Mr. Llewllyn did for those who come after him. He trained his patrons to say this or that film "did not appeal" to them. Time was then a terse "Rotten!" sufficed, but he argued with them that just because they did not like it it was no sign that an offering was bad and now all West Point classifies films into those that appeal and those that do not. They do not kill other chances with the direct disapproval. Think that over and see if you would not like to have your audiences go out without hammers. The man who likes his eggs fried has no reason to jeer at the man who prefers his poached. They merely do so appeal to him. It is the same way with the films.

Lucky.

Some people don't know when they are lucky. Allan F. Sparrow, of The Ideal, Springfield, Vt., writes that he has no curliques, as though he regretted it. He doesn't know that his throwaways are the better for their lack. He writes:

> I am enclosing samples of flyers for your criticism. As I have a limited supply of type, am not able always to get just the effect I would like, and having no curliques cannot attempt anything fancy. I get these out two or three times a week—sometimes with the program for two days, sometimes for three days. Do the printing myself on an old press built before the war—which war I don't know.
> The yellow flyer comes from a neighboring town—$100,000 house—where, of course, they are able to put out a much more elaborate job, if that is the correct term. This is not a puzzle—not intended for one, I mean—but quite a few people who are more or less familiar with the moving picture game have not been able to decide correctly just what it was all about. Can you?

Like many others, Mr. Sparrow tries to overwork a throwaway. He gets two days on one bill and uses so much large type that there is little room for explanation. Perhaps, too, the fact that he sets his own type leads him to use the larger and more easily handled faces. It is a mean job for the man who makes printing an avocation to get a lot of six or eight point and distribute it again, and yet it will be worth the time to work harder and give the bills real value. "Story of a mountain feud with a happy ending" is hardly pulling. Pique curiosity; rouse interest, and patrons will be gathered in. Merely telling what you have and what it is does not suffice.

As to the yellow bill, we know what it means, but we'll be darned if we think many non-professional readers would. In the top box, "Charles Kelem" is not Kalem but "Klein." But the gem is this, if the printer will kindly follow the spelling:

Wednesday
DANIEL V. ARTHUR PRESENTS
Lina Cavalieir
The most beautiful woman in the world in the high class production.
Marion Tescant
in 7 parts.

If You Enjoy The Best Dont Miss This Chance To See This Great Picture

There is some excuse in misspelling Miss Cavalieri's name, but "Marion Tescant" is a far cry from so well known a title as "Manon Lescaut." The use of the break rule still furtner complicates the matter. The trouble with the title was probably poor writing the "n" in Manon looking the more common "ri" and the "u" being formed like an "n," but even on a rush job there should have been some brief inspection.

The only safe way is to print all names and titles, each letter by itself. Then there can be no mistake, and with a little practice printing becomes as easy as writing. Where writing is used, it is customary to put a dash under the "u" and over the "n."

Vale?

C. H. Lynch, of the Palace, Spring Valley, Ill., sends in the fifth and final issue of the Palace News. There has been a shut down at the mines and they are retrenching. That is the best time to hustle harder than ever, as Mr. Lynch seems to know, but the man higher up called a halt. He writes that the News mention of a feature doubled the business, and the house organ will work as hard for any other good offering. Incidentally a piano house took ten thousand of the last issue for advertising work, because of an article on their player-piano, and ordered a set of advertising matter. That's the sort of stuff Mr. Lynch writes, and we hope that the News will resume in time. He writes his stuff instead of clipping, and gives a running comment on the coming program that can be read with interest. It is a gift to be able to state facts interestingly, but it can generally be partly acquired with practice.

Doubling Up.

The Third Street theater people work a scheme on the heralds sent out by the Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa. They double imprint the heralds with the two houses showing the picture on successive days. This not only makes one printing serve for both, but the houses are so close that a person who misses it the first day knows of the second showing. When the picture is of a sort that makes its own business, the second day will be better than the first. Here they can shift the film and still get the result.

Echo Answers "How?"

George Editor Carpenter prints in the anniversary number (congratulations!) of Real Reels, a picture of the stage of the Judith theater, Lewiston, Mont., dressed with a railroad set for Rule G. and prints a letter from Manager Heinecke in which the latter says that he generally dresses his stage to fit the feature and dresses his boy and girl ushers in harmony. This leads Carpenter to ask how they were dressed for "Hypocrites." We would like to know, too.

Saves on Composition.

D. W. Hook, of the Empire, Putnam, Conn., sends some one sheet programs which he says cost him but $1.50 a thousand as the matter is already set for a newspaper advertisement. He has 2,500 done, of which 1,500 are placed in the Sunday newspapers and the remainder given out at the theater Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Hook does not save when he gets free distribution through the Sunday papers. There is nothing more damnably irritating than to pick up a Sunday paper and shake out half a dozen circulars, like the little Fords that ran out from under the overturned car. If Mr. Hook cannot afford to have his advertisement printed in the Sunday papers—and we take it that he means the out of town papers, in which it would not pay to advertise, he should not try to hang on behind. Few persons, if any, read the junk that some misguided newsmen stuff the Sunday papers with, and most of the bills are a total loss. Many of them are not merely a negative loss but an actual irritant. The man will not go to a show that "sneaks up on him" in this fashion. It looks like a good scheme, but it most decidedly is not.

Getting down to the programs themselves, these are laid out for a newspaper advertisement and are carried in an ornate frame. This frame takes up nearly 16 inches of the 66 inch space paid for. It gives the advertisement as a whole a certain prominence, but it holds down the display of individual lines to eight point. Nine titles are advertised in a space one and three-quarter inches square, with the result that none of them can be emphasized. Save for a line here and there, it is merely an eight point list of the films. The back is filled in with cuts and any letter press that can be lifted out of the reading columns of the paper.

Mr. Hook has eight lines of display catchlines of the "We lead where others follow" variety. All save one of these should be thrown out to get lines for the films; lines that will help make business. This for the newspaper advertisement. For the program he should forget all about the saving on composition and get out a special program, three days to each side of the page, and then he will have room to properly announce his wares. This will cost more than $1.50 a thousand, but if he prepares his copy properly, it will bring him more than the difference in costs.

It is not what a piece of advertising costs that counts. It is what the advertising will bring in, and this bare yet crowded announcement will be read only by the most hardened fan, who would come anyway. If he will take three days to the page and pull up just a couple of the titles to talk about intcrestingly, he will get something for his money, but if this program pays, it is the exception to the rule.

We are sorry to see that Mr. Hook was among those who bolstered up "The Life of Our Savior" with a farce comedy.

Now It's "C. F."

Steve Farrar, of Eldorado, Ill., uses John W. Lewellyn's jumbled types to advertise Charles F. Chaplin, explaining that the F. stands for tummy. We don't know just what Steve means when he says "Dough and Dynamite" has been shown in every city in the world. Is Eldorado going to be the last in the line? In this connection he used the Stanton "autogobile" at last. Now he is ready to ship it on to the next man in a westerly direction who will pay the freight, the idea being to get it eventually to Mr. Chaplin, if it holds together that long. Write to him at the Casino.

To get them started on "The Black Box" Steve sold out the house to five merchants, who distributed the tickets. The latter are so well worded that it will pay to file for future reference.

Not in payment, but in appreciation of your patronage, you are cordially invited to be the guest of

CASINO THEATER
On Wednesday Evening, May 19, 1915

This ticket will admit one person free. Good this date only.
FOUR REELS OF SPECIAL PICTURES WILL BE SHOWN

Steve says:

I enclose a "stunt" that I am using to get them started on "The Black Box." I believe that it will work better than the free show, or in this way it does not look as though I was trying to force them to see this picture, and I also get a small amount out of each merchant. I gave each of them 500 of the tickets, so I look for a big house on the 19th.

I never did like the idea of giving the people something for nothing, for when you do that they decide that you are trying to slip one over on them, and it is never appreciated. If you use this idea pass it on for the benefit of those who find it hard to get a serial started.

He is right. The frankly free ticket is always a detriment. Give the stuff at least the appearance of value. If you can't sell the house, at least you can make them pay for a lot of their own advertising that also advertises you, and there is more than one installment of a serial remember. Make it easy for them to come the first time and they will follow it up, but if they stay from the first they'll mentally argue that there is no use coming in on the third or fourth week.

Steve is going on his vacation. Last year took a buggy ride as far as Chattanooga. This year he should hop on a train and come east.

He also sends in a four page folder for Mother's Day, gotten out by Joe Hewitt, for the sister house at Mt. Carmel. With "Mother" and "Motherhood" as the attractions, and poetry and Bible texts, the booklet is unusually apt.

Old Style.

The following advertisement is from Virginia City, Nevada. It is good for just once, but it is good for once.

Hark Ye!

Thou shouldst not marry until Thouhst seen ye great Picture Playe

"Ye Battle of Ye Sexes"

In Five Chapters at ye olde Piper's Opera House, Hamlet of Virginia, County of Storey.

Time of ye said Playe the Twentieth day of ye month of Maye at ye hour of ye Curfew.

Assessments two Shillings for ye grown-ups—15 cts ye olde Rustic benche for ye youngsters.

Tickets at ye olde Pioneer drug store.

It is the one instance we have yet found where the Old English seems to belong, the title being set in that face. It would be better, where they can be had, to use "superior letters" for the "e" in "ye" and for some of the other words as the "eth" in "twentieth." It is novel, but only for just once. In the original it is enclosed in a double border, taking seventeen ems of a twenty-six inch space. Superior letters, it might be explained, are letters but half the size of the body and rising to the top. There are also "inferior" letters with the letters or figures at the bottom of the space.

D. M. Bain sends in a set of four issues of the Photoplay Weekly, which he is getting out for the Bijou theater, Wilmington, N. C. We would have a lot more of respect for Mr. Bain's abilities if he hadn't sold his editorial page to a barber shop. He gets it back again in the last of the four issues, but even if we owed a barber for a haircut, we'd be dinged if we would let him have the most valuable page in the paper when there were fourteen out of the sixteen pages of smaller value.

To Mr. Bain and others it is suggested that if a manager could take each member of an audience into a corner and talk confidentially for five minutes it would be worth several hundred dollars. We do not know how much the barber paid. This is what a real Ed. page will do.

But perhaps it is merely that Mr. Bain does not want editorials, for the barber gets only half the page and number two of the second volume carries only these two important editorials:

Edna Maison is prettier than ever in "Courage," a Big U drama, in which she appears as a woodland nymph.

Short Eds.

"Mavis of the Glen" is a three-reel Laemmle brand drama featuring Ella Hall and Bob Leonard, of "Master Key" fame.

Then comes a cut of a child actor, a tailor's advertisement and a puff for Universal City. Perhaps Mr. Bain doesn't know how to write editorials. They are written, generally on a typewriter, with a full heart. They tell about the house and the pictures, they tell about past hits and future hopes. They tell what the manager would say to an intimate friend, but they do not chatter about woodland nymphs.

There is nothing more valuable than an editorial page of the right sort. The right sort of an editorial page NOW may kill a censorship a year from now and it will be making business in between times. To the tall timber with the wood nymphs! Take a whole page for editorials and write matter and not the sort of stuff they syringe into cream puffs and eclairs. Make that one page distinctive.

More Udells.

Here are a couple more Udell advertisements. The first carries the top line and the third in heavy type. The rest is lighter.

The name of the house follows and some more titles and then—"When you have seen all these you are entitled to your position." The second is somewhat like the first one shown, but with a sufficient difference to make it new. In this the only mention of the house is once in an eight point line. This is unusual, but in a small town they come to look for the Crystal advertising and to many not even a single mention would be necessary.

Down for Summer.

F. H. Mertens sends in some samples of his first airdome program for the Apollo, Jersey City, and wants suggestions.

The program is too large for a vest pocket and too small for a folder. With the copy he runs, he would do better to go to the vest pocket size. The stock is a hot yellow, by no means the thing for a summer announcement, but he writes that he is changing the stock. He would do well to change printers, too. This man is not working hard enough. He is setting the names of big starts in eight point Roman capitals. If he has no display faces, he should get some. If he has them, he should use them. The man might make a good truck driver, but as a printer he is a crime. He doesn't know how to set advertising and should be honest enough to confess the fact and refuse the job. Mr. Mertens should hunt up someone with some type in the cases and some idea of how to set it. Then he should insist upon names and titles in display. If he cannot mark sizes, he should indicate the relative values of the lines by underscore marks. If he wants the name of the star to be larger than the title, he should mark three lines under the title and four or five under that of the star or vice versa if the title is bigger than the player. He could do the same thing by writing "8 pt. Display," or ten or twelve point, for a program this size. We will be glad to see the new job.

Too Much!

The advertising manager of a daily paper eagerly insists that we make a reproduction of a full page advertisement and comment thereon. A house manager asks us to urge fellow exhibitors to make and run a free slide advertising a hair tonic he is promoting. We were born longer ago that that.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Lawyers.

PERHAPS you do not know what a script lawyer is. He is a man who studies the letter of the law but not its spirit. In the law courts he is the man who admits that his client has stolen $999, but gets him free because the indictment charges him with the theft of an even thousand. In photoplay writing he is the man who is so intent upon exactness that he cannot give thought to an idea. He knows precisely when a scene is a close-up and when it so close up that it becomes a bust. He never calls an insert out of its name and he invariably writes "Back to scene," after any insert. But sometimes he does not write plots. This is being written to save a young man from that awful fate

In Technique of the Photoplay there is a sample script, The Price of Pride. If you have a copy of the book you will find the start on page 39. If you have no copy, the story is a rather elemental one. The rich man wants his daughter to marry the inevitable count. Her own preference is for John, a young inventor. John remembers the count as a chaffeur. In scenes 14 to 16 we see him in the old man's library making a wax impression of the key to the safe. In 17 the same set is shown, but the scene opens with the Count and the girl, Nell, on the stage. Between these scenes there is a leader: "For her refusal to marry the count, Nell is sent to the country." The action runs down to No. 22, where John gets a note that reads:

> Because I would not marry the Count, father is sending me to Uncle George's place in the country, with the housekeeper for a watchman. I will write soon. Don't be discouraged. Nell.

Later the development shows that the Count plans to abduct the girl, John finds this out and with the father rushes to the rescue.

The inquirer points out that the leader and the letter tell practically the same thing and remarks that it seems to be one of the rules of technique that information shall not be repeated.

Now, strictly in the letter of the law, it is distinctly bad form to repeat information. Viewed with the eyes of the law, this repetition of fact is faulty and forbidden. The correspondent is correct insofar as he quotes the dictum of technique.

But let us examine the facts and apply the law with common sense. Scene 16 ends with the exit of the Count and the father. Scene 17 opens with the Count again on the stage talking to Nell, who has not figured in the previous scene. Some break leader is needed. It is best a fact leader. The leader quoted gives the facts of the scene. The girl refuses to marry the Count, there is a stormy scene and she leaves the room. Without a leader there is a bad jump. The leader not only breaks the two scenes, but it conveys information as to the sense of the latter scene. So far this is good.

Later John must know of this plan. He has not been present at the interview in scene 17. He has not seen the girl. For the sake of clearness it must be shown to the audience that he knows where she is and how she is circumstanced. The letter not only tells the man that she is to be sent to the country, but it gives the additional information as to the place to which she is to be sent and adds that the housekeeper is her sole protection. Now when we see that John discovers the Count's plot, we realize instantly how unprotected the girl is. Knowledge of this fact makes the situation more acute. The leading fact has been contained in the leader, but three additional facts are given in the letter. We are assured that John knows, are told that he knows where she is and has been informed as to the inadequate protection given her. The information as to her exile is not given to inform the audience again, but to inform them that John has come into possession of the facts. There is the further suggestion in the sending of the note that her loyalty to John has been unchanged.

Strictly speaking, the law of technique that prohibits the repetition of a statement of fact has been violated. Broadly speaking it has not. In a wider sense so much has been gained by the introduction of the letter that its use would be excusable, even were it an actual and not a theoretical violation.

It is well and necessary to thoroughly master the laws of technique of form, but it is even more important to learn to apply those laws in a liberal spirit that will permit the author to make the fullest use of them when they are to be used and to ignore them when greater good can come from their being broken.

Learn the laws, then learn how to apply them and then learn when it is better to ignore them. Don't become a lawyer. Do not work for the law, make the law work for you and help you to better things.

Continuity.

"Honestly, I don't see why so much of a fuss is made over what you call continuity," complains an author. "I don't see that it makes much difference whether I follow closely or jump from scene to scene. Suppose that Dan leaves the yard and goes into the house. He is going to get the dinner, but it is to be supposed that he washes his hands first and brushes his hair, he does many other things perhaps, but the thing I next want to show is that at the table he gets an important telegram. Why can't I show him enter the house and then at the table with the dinner eaten? That is the next important scene."

The answer is "because." A motion picture is supposed to preserve the sense of illusion. It cannot spare the film to follow the character closely through the hand-washing and hair-brushing processes, but it will not seem true to life to see him slide into the house and the sixteenth of a second later discover him with his dinner eaten and the dessert on the table. Something must be done to bridge the gap in time, either a break leader: "After dinner," some break scene, or the solid action of the dinner. The latter action is not feasible, since it will eat up footage, but there must be the preservation of continuity.

Jumpy and abrupt action will destroy almost completely the sense of illusion. It will all seem unreal and unconvincing. There will be no sustained interest without sustained action, so it follows that the continuity of the story must be preserved. Anyone can write a story in a succession of scenes, each of vital importance, but it takes a clever writer to preserve the continuity with the smallest percentage of non-essential scenes and break leaders. It is one of the points that marks the finished writer from the novice and gives effectiveness to the work.

Continuity is an interesting study. It is one that will repay the time spent on it. The person who makes the time-connection of scenes a habit will eventually write with an ease that the beginner cannot have. The continuity will presently look after itself. Writing in connected action will become a habit and all that is then necessary will be to get the major action laid out.

The good writer is one who, through habit, takes care of the little points unconsciously and so has time to spend on the greater points of the story. When he has John and Bess walk out of a scene he knows where they are going and why. He is ready either with a continuation of the action or a fresh development under cover of which his young people can get somewhere else. Don't neglect continuity for the more important scenes. To the contrary, at first make this a particular study to the end that presently it will care for itself and you will have more time for other matters.

Quantity and Quality.

Speaking of submissions, one correspondent writes that he sends out many, figuring that in thirty of forty scripts there cannot but be one that will please. Another writes that he sends out only his very best and is asked for more than he can write of this grade.

Of the two, we like the latter policy the better. The author writes many stories, but he sends out only the best. He does not sell all at the first point of submission, but he makes a generous average of sales in his first three times out. And editors ask for more. They note that he writes good stuff and so want to see his line. Presently he will be getting hints that perhaps a story for Miss Blank or something for Mr. Dash or a story that can be made aboard ship is wanted. If he makes good on these hints he will presently get more definite suggestions, then direct orders for stuff. He is known as a dependable writer.

The quantity man becomes known as an in and out writer. One story will be good and the next three or four will be poor. The average is too low. Editors will not feel that it will be worth while to offer him suggestions, since he cannot be depended upon to deliver the goods. If he does, it will be a fluke and not the result of directed effort.

You cannot afford to get a reputation as an uncertain writer. It would be better to make fewer sales and to make these sure fire. Write ten stories and send them all out if you can write good stories, but, if you feel yourself that no more than two may be good, and perhaps not that, don't send out until you are certain that the one or two are good, and send only those.

You would not buy meat from a butcher who sent you one good steak out of five. You would go where the meat was always tender and fresh, if you could find such a place. It is the same with scripts.

Starting the Story.

One writer complains of an inability to start her stories. Once the starting point has been determined there is no trouble in advancing the story, but the start is troublesome.

If the plot is stated properly there should be no such trouble. Given a well-defined plot, the starting point is obvious, but until it has been clearly decided just what the plot is to be, the point from which the story should start remains in doubt.

The best plan is to state the plot in the form of a question. If the story hinges on the time-worn theme of the husband whose engrossment in business threatens his domestic happiness, do not start it with the statement that John Holdomb marries a pretty society butterfly who cannot understand why he should neglect her pleasures for his business affairs. This is an indeterminate start. It might begin with the courtship, showing how devoted John is before marriage. It might start with the marriage, the end of the honeymoon or the commencement of the dissatisfaction. But examine the plot and make it into a question. The statement of the question is apt to be this:

> John's engrossment in business threatens his domestic happiness. What does he do to retrieve his error?

At once the story becomes clearly defined and the start is obvious. John's engrossment in his business threatens his domestic happiness. It will not presently threaten his happiness. It is threatening his happiness. Start then to demonstrate this fact and there is the proper start for the story. There can be no two commencements. The first point to be established that John is too busy to give the time to his wife she demands and that another man is willing to devote. From there on the progress is simple.

Take a recent Vitagraph, What's Ours. Burton Temper, a young millionaire, is in love with Sylvia Chase, a salesgirl in a department store. There can be no question as to this start. Burton is a millionaire. He is shown as the son of wealthy parents. He loves a salesgirl. It is shown that she is a salesgirl and then that Burton loves her. The story is started.

If the plot was that Burton turned from the empty-headed society girls to a woman of poorer finances but more brains, then the story would begin back of the present opening in consonance with the new development.

In the same way, take the comedy story that tells that Jim Smith, a henpecked husband, &c. Jim Smith is henpecked. He decides to throw of his fetters. How does he do it? The start of the picture shows him henpecked. The next development shows the determination to be free, and what follows comes as a matter of course. The middle action may vary with the intelligence and inventiveness of the author, but the start is pre-ordained.

State that proposition and the opening presents itself. It must, if the proposition is properly presented.

The Jam Is Broken.

Arthur Leeds, editor for the Edison company, announces that he has caught up with the back work and that the vexatious delays that for a time marked this company are at an end.

Now how about the company that keeps constantly on hand three to four hundred unbought scripts, some of them for from six to nine months?

Because.

Henry Albert Phillips has given to the Motion Picture Magazine a letter addressed to this department and which was refused publication here.

As we told Mr. Phillips at the time, we cannot print a half column advertisement of the school he conducts even when presented in the guise of a reply to an earlier paragraph.

Russell Smith Moves.

Russell E. Smith has severed his connection with the Reliance-Majestic script department to come back to that dear New York with the Famous Players, as editor. We welcome Mr. Smith and congratulate him on his advancement, but we regret that he will be so far from the editorial rooms of The Script. They need him.

Mr. Smith writes:

> For the benefit of your readers who are scenario writers, would like to give you an idea of our needs here.
> Would be pleased to have submitted to me detailed synopses of any ideas you may have that would make four or five reel photoplays.
> Am particularly looking for strong material suitable for Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn or John Barrymore, although anything else that is good will be gladly considered.
> Top prices will be paid for really big themes and plots, but they must be of the highest grade of originality, novelty and strength.
> Quick decisions will be given and payment made immediately on acceptance.

Now It's Cruze.

Now it is James Cruze who is fathering a script writing school along with his school of acting. It costs you all of two dollars to start in to learn to be an actor, but it's only a twenty-five cent ante to get into the writing school. Two dollars used to be the low-water mark for the schools, but now Cruze, Thomas and Smethport all put it at a quarter.

Positively NO.

A correspondent wants to know if he should have "Photoplaywright" on his letter heads. Most assuredly not. The editor will know if you are and will not be fooled if you are not. Printed stationery is business-like and effective, but let it be merely name, street address, city and state. Nothing else whatever.

Building Up.

Ever try writing your ideas on slips of paper or catalogue cards and carrying them about with you? When you get on the street car or have to wait to see a man, take the pack out and look them over. See if you cannot add some suggestion. Keep at it long enough and the right suggestion will come and you can make the idea into a play. One of the tricks of doing work is to keep at it. Of course methods of work differ, but as a rule it pays to have some ideas handy to work on when you have nothing else to do. For some weeks now we've been carrying a pack of cards around and they grew into a forty thousand-word manuscript.

Profit.

The script you cannot sell may mean a hundred dollars worth of experience. The script you do sell may mean twenty-five dollars in money and a big head that will set you back a year in time and several hundred dollars in spendable coin. Sometimes there is a golden lining to the seeming cloud.

Files Pictures.

Donald Porter Langdon goes further than most persons in filing not only ideas, but pictures. He writes:

> I have read with great interest the letter of S. Walter Bunting, concerning the filing of his notes, etc
> I agree that it is quite a helpful hint to the average "beginner;" more so to the professional writer. I go still further in my filing system, and cut out every film picture I observe in the various periodicals of the trade. These are filed under "Exteriors," "Interiors of Hotels," "Interiors of Homes," etc. These I sub-divide,—for instance—I divide "Exteriors" into "City," "Country," etc. I regard this scheme of picture filing as my greatest help. At times it enables me to study the expressions of the players at critical moments (as the pictures are mostly all taken from a critical time of the film). Likewise I can observe the setting in general, such as the furniture, etc. As all release pictures are of the same size, they are easily filed and occupy little space.

Practically all of the pictures are three and a quarter inches wide and can be classified to sugegst groupings and situations.

Finding Out.

Marc Edmund Jones reports progress, like a Congressional committee. The other day he started a melodrama but half way through found that it was getting out of focus because it wanted to be a comedy, so he let it have its own way and wrote a comedy. A year ago he would have written it as a drama in spite of its frantic struggles and it would have taken him two or three weeks to discover what the matter was. It has taken him about four years to get to that point of selection, and yet he has done some good work in those four years—also Runaway June in its first form. And yet the beginner knows it all as soon as he finishes his lesson papers. And he would keep that comedy a drama until he had worn out the scripts and the editors' patience.

Just Remember.

If an editor writes "excellent but not suited to us," do not blame another editor for not making the pruchase. One editor may like his coffee black and the other take it with milk and plenty of sugar. If an editor says he likes a story and buys it, then you may be sure he does. That pat on the back may be pleasing, but it is seldom profitable and sometimes is misleading.

Mr. Stillman Speaking.

This from a letter from Albert Stillman, originator of the metred leader, also the "Screen poem." Mr. Stillman is a business man and follows his profession, making photoplay writing an avocation, but he has found it possible to win success as witness this letter.

> It is now just about a year since I conceived the idea that I might write for the screen, and wrote you anent it. Like most of the others I got it in the upper vertebrae at first. Wanted to quit often—but when a plot gets into your system, it's farewell to sleep and peace of mind till the doggone thing gets on paper. I guess it's worse than the drink or drug habit that way.
> The schools never tempted me. Four editors have in this period taken the trouble to write me personal letters, in sending me back Mss, telling me just what the trouble was. The kindness and consideration shown in that way has been remarkable. Hence why the schools? The only real kick I have had has been the eternal holding of scripts—months at a time—by one or two companies—and that's not the fault of the editor.

The last paragraph is the essential one. He does not see the need of schools because Editors—four of them—took the trouble to put him on the right path. If you can write scripts, long before you reach the selling point this fact will be recognized and you will be given all the help you need. If you cannot write, not all of the schools that ever will be started can help you.

As to the holding of scripts, this is the fly in the photoplaywright's ointment. With some companies it is closely akin to theft of opportunity, but it must be put up with.

The New Lexicon.

Slapstick is merely humor with the intelligence omitted.

Sad Fact.

A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush and a check in the bank is worth two scripts "being held for consideration."

Advice.

Don't write "true" story. Truth is naked. Clothe it in fiction facts.

Question No. 93.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the optical effect of changing the distance between your condensing lenses? Of changing the distance from condenser to aperture? How can you tell whether your condensing lenses set square with each other or not?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 87.

The Roll of Honor on Question 87 is as follows: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; F. V. Poyser, Manitoba, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

The selection of the reply for publication to question 87 was difficult, as most of the Roll of Honor replies were essentially correct, but very few of them stuck to the text of the question. Almost everyone gave a more or less complete description of how carbons are made, whereas, the question did not ask anything of that kind. I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour for publication mainly because he replied to the question asked and to nothing else. The other Roll of Honor replies were as correct as was Larmour's, so far as concerned the points at issue.

Reply to Question No. 87.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

What is carbon made of? Tell us how you select carbons when you buy them. What do little globules of black matter which sometimes collect on the point of the lower carbon indicate?

The Answer:

Projection arc light carbons are composed of carbon of different grades, held together by a suitable binder, usually pitch or tar in some form, which is itself converted into carbon during the process of manufacture. In purchasing carbons I would ordinarily purchase only those which experience had taught were of even density throughout—that is to say, had no hard spots; those which have no cracks running around the circumference of the carbon, and which have a perfect core, also the carbons must be, to all intents and purposes, perfectly straight. Another important point is that they be hard enough to needle and soft enough not to flicker, flame and give an unsteady light. However, a part of these various points can only be settled by actual test, and presumably the brand which is found, through experience, to be correct as to these points will continue to be all right. Therefore the only things actually to look at in purchasing are the circumferential cracks, and the condition of the core—particularly the latter—since an imperfect core is a prolific source of poor light.

Globules of black matter forming on the tip of the lower carbon may be attributed to two entirely different causes: (a) when too short an arc is used there is not sufficient circulation of air through the arc to complete the votalization of all the particles of carbon deposited on the lower carbon tip, and they are changed into graphite, which has high resistance and consequently operates to diminish the current flow, hence diminish the screen illumination; (b) sometimes under normal condition glass-like beads will form on the lower carbon tip, and these beads are an indication of high-grade materials in the carbon.

Light Plant Trouble.

C. E. Quinn, Waverly, Minnesota, writes:

> I, like many others, must come to you for information. We have a Fairbank-Morse electric light outfit and it is a dandy. The engine is a 6 h. p., and the dynamo a 60 volt, 58 ampere (3½ K. W.) machine. We have never had the least trouble with this outfit since its installation eight months ago. But there is one thing I can never get through my dome, viz.: why we cannot pull a greater amperage at the arc than we do. We pull at the most 30 amperes, and some nights all I can get out of it is 20. Was thinking it might be in the rheostat. We had a Powers 110 volt, 40 ampere rheostat when we purchased this plant, and the electrician who installed it did not seem to know how to cut the rheostat down to 60 volts. The way he cut it down in the first place made the engine pull to beat the band, then he tried another method and the engine runs as though there was no load on it at all. Do any of the machine companies make 60 volt rheostats?

What you want, Brother Quinn, is a 60 volt rheostat having a capacity equal to the amperage you want to pull. I don't know whether or not any of the machine manufacturers make that kind of a rheostat, but almost any supply dealer can get one for you; also I presume the Fairbank-Morse Company can supply you. However, you can use your 40 ampere rheostat as follows: I presume you have an ammeter. The rheostat itself has approximately 1½ ohms resistance and you only need about ¼ of an ohm, therefore, if you attach one wire to one of the binding posts of the rheostat in the usual way and attach the other so that it will cut out a trifle more than three-fourths of the grids or coils, I think you will get about what you want. That is only a rough guess, made without doing any figuring. The thing to do is to make your connections so as to cut out all but about one-fourth of the grids or coils, start the outfit and see what the amperage is. If it is less than you want, why cut out a little more resistance; if it is more than you want, add a little. But you must remember that the engine has got to work when pulling its full load, so don't get scared if it acts like it was doing something.

From what you say I am led to believe there is something wrong with the engine; that is to say, it does not develop as high speed some nights as others. This probably is due to difference in lubrication, or, perhaps, you monkey with your carbureter and change the mixture (I assume it to be a gasoline engine). If you only get 20 amperes some nights and 30 others, it is pretty nearly a cinch there has been some change made at the engine which has altered its speed. Either that or you allow the dynamo brushes and commutator to get dirty, but it is hardly likely they would get so dirty as to make that amount of difference.

New Film Container.

B. Steinhauser, an operator, and incidentally a member of Local 373 I. A., Terre Haute, Indiana, is the inventor of a film container designed for operating room use. Brother Steinhauser has sent in a sample of the container, and we have given the device a careful examination. It is made somewhat on the order of a sectional book case, except that the sections set side by side instead of on top of each other. Each section contains one reel, and any number of sections may be used. The container or magazine has a handle at the top and two lugs, one at the top and one at the bottom, with a hole made in the shape of an inverted key hole, so that by placing two screws in the wall, the proper distance apart, the magazine is attached by simply hooking it to these screws. This has the advantage that in case of fire it is but the work of an instant to grab the container off its support and set it outside. This arrangement also has the further advantage of segregation of reels in groups if desired. That is to say, if the operator desires he can place a part of the containers near one machine and a part near the other and, thus have the reels always at hand near the machine they are to be used on; also it would, to some extent, lessen the possibility of the whole thing going up in smoke if one group caught fire.

The container is a little more than the thickness of a reel, and is not built square, but so that when it is hung to the wall the bottom slopes upward. The device looks somewhat like a Powers magazine, but the door is in the front end, held closed by a spring latch which is instantly opened by striking a plunger at the bottom of the container. When the door is unlatched it springs open and the reel rolls out of its own weight. The container is made of heavy metal, is well and substantially put together, without any solder, and at the bottom is a compartment one-half inch deep into which a moistened blotting paper may be shoved.

On the whole, the container is, it seems to me, a good one. Certainly it is entirely practical. It has, Brother Steinhauser tells me, been tested out in a great many operating rooms in and around Terre Haute, in all cases having been found entirely satisfactory. Incidentally, I might add that the slant at which it is built compels the keeping of the container door closed. Unless it is closed and latched the reels will promptly roll out. The finish is blued steel. On the front of the door is a clip designed to hold a card displaying the number and title of the reel. Just what the retail price of this device will be is not yet determined.

The container is to be known as the Superior Sectional Film Magazine.

The Matter of Speed.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, says:

I am sending answer to Question 87. You will notice it is written in pencil. The reason is I am making a carbon copy of my answer to the questions, so that when the answers appear in the department I will be able to make comparison, and thus see the weak spots in my own. By-the-way, since the subject of Question 87 is carbons, I wonder if you have ever seen the British carbon called Kinarko. It is a copper-coated cored carbon; the size that I am most familiar with is 10 mm. It is used as the lower carbon in D. C. projection. Its advantages are chiefly (a) an almost immediate burning on striking the arc without the usual hissing and sizzling; (b) the steady maintenance of a rich, soft light. One of the unfavorable features of this carbon which I have noted is the spattering of the back condenser with particles of molten copper. This I noticed in one case only; it was possibly due to a combination of condensers which required the arc to be brought closer than usual to the back condenser.

And now a few words on the subject of improvement in projection. The untiring efforts of the department in this direction have surely been measurably rewarded, but much still remains to be done, which will remain undone as long as the operator is operating mainly for his living and, incidentally, for results on the screen, and as long as there are managers who either have not sufficient capital or enough foresight to back up with the necessary moral and financial support the efforts of the operator to carry out the ideals of projection you are constantly setting before the men and which any operator worthy of the name would surely be glad to carry out. Take, for instance, the matter of speed at which the reels should be run. What must be the feeling of an operator, who is thoroughly in accord with your views of this matter, but who is obliged by the management to run the pictures through at a rate which transforms them into a farce and an absurdity. Surely it is enough to discourage a man as regards efforts at proficiency in other directions. Only when and where the art of motion picture projection is removed entirely from the realm of sordid gain and commercialism will you find the largest possibilities for attaining the best results on the screen. I have filled the position of both manager and operator and know whereof I speak. Of course there are exceptions, and these will be found to be managers who either have ample capital and confidence in the operator, or else, in addition to confidence in the operator, have sufficient foresight to see that quality pays in the long run, and that penny wise is more often than not pound foolish. However, Brother Richardson, be sure and hold up the standard of high class projection, and with the demand of the public for high class pictures will eventually come the demand for high class projection of those pictures. When that time does come the men will then have an opportunity of showing what they can do when given the chance.

Friend Dann is an operator with the right ideas, evidently he studies something else besides the face of the clock. What he says is absolutely true, except that whereas his use of the term "commercialism" is perfectly correct, it is a slander on that term, for true commercialism would demand the projection of the pictures in the best possible way. I believe the fault does not lie with commercialism, but in the narrow-mindedness of men who don't seem to understand the simple proposition that almost any man or woman will prefer quality to quantity. I think the principal fault lies in the attempt to give too big a program at the expense of quality, under the mistaken idea that people would rather see five reels butchered than four reels put on the screen properly. Well, I don't believe it, and I don't think I ever will believe it.

No, I'm not acquainted with the carbon in question. If the importer cares to send not less than half a dozen for trial, I will be glad to have them tested. Sending one or two would do no good, however. Your scheme of retaining a carbon copy of your answers is excellent.

A Splendid Production.

It was the privilege of the writer, through the courtesy of the management, to witness the production of "The Alien" at the Astor theater, New York City, recently. "The Alien" is a combination of moving pictures and acting; that is to say, up to the last scene, which is laid in a florist's store, the whole thing is moving pictures, then the scene fades out, and during an instant of darkness the screen is pulled up, the stage lighted, and we see an elaborately set stage and the actors, who then proceed with the play in spoken drama. "The Alien" is intensely dramatic. I think when it was finished all the women in the audience were in tears, and a good many of the men had a very suspicious handkerchief movement.

However, it is not of these things I wish to write. I think in this combined moving-picture-acting play I have found the very thing I have been seeking, viz.: the chance to call pointed attention to one certain thing I have been saying for lo these many years.

The projection, almost throughout the entire film was too fast. The figures in places moved with an absurd wiggle, caused by a speed which would have been totally and absolutely impossible in real life, but when the real actors, instead of their shadows, came upon the scene, I did not notice them flying around like a windmill; I did not observe any of them taking ten steps a second. No, as I have time and again said, the principal abuse in the projection of moving picture is that the actor is forced into an unnatural speed of action and a speed which no one in the world would think of asking him to even attempt in reality, nor would he do it if you did ask him, nor could he do it, for that matter.

The first man I ever heard to defend this proposition was Mr. Griffith of "The Birth of a Nation." I talked with him concerning the speed at which portions of that film was run, and he took the position that it was "art"; that the mind of the audience passed on and followed the story with a greater degree of satisfaction, regardless of the fact that the actual action be totally absurd.

I have every respect for the views of a man of Mr. Griffith's attainments, but, nevertheless, he and I must agree to disagree on this particular proposition. I believe, as I before said, that Mr Griffith's idea is not the correct one. I do not think there is any art in seeing an actor moving around like a jumping jack, or in seeing a horse or other animal move at utterly ridiculous, absurd and impossible speed, any more than I believe that art cannot be expressed in a draped figure just as well as in a naked one.

I do not wish to be misunderstood in this matter. "The Alien" is a splendid production, though, as a matter of fact, the gripping climax is largely due to the intensely dramatic acting of George Beban, an artist of large ability. Just how powerful this dramatic climax could be made in moving pictures I am not prepared to say. I would like very, very much to see it tried. Frankly, I do not think it could be done in any very effective way. It strikes me that there are great possibilities in this combined moving-picture-acting proposition. It allows of the bringing in, in the forepart of the play, much which could not be portrayed in any adequate way on the stage, and then staging the actual climax in real acting.

Good Results.

The Stanley Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, have installed a Day and Night Screen in the Alhambra theater, and, although that house is 85 feet deep and 115 feet wide at the rear, they make report that the focus of the picture is clear and sharp from all parts of the theater.

I was myself surprised at the results attained by the Day and Night in this respect. There is no question but that the focus of the picture on a Day and Night Screen is good, regardless of the angle it is viewed from. I have tested that matter for myself.

Martin Converter.

John Alexander, Minneapolis, Minnesota, inquires:

Can you give me some details as to the Martin rotary converter, manufactured by a firm in Chicago? Has the converter the indorsement of the projection department or has it not?

It has not. The manufacturers of the Martin rotary converter have not seen fit, up to date, to present to this department any proven data as to its overall efficiency, nor have they demonstrated the excellence of its mechanical or electrical construction, therefore this department is unable to recommend the Martin. This does not mean that it is not an excellent machine, but that if it is we have been supplied with no conclusive proof of that fact. This department only recommends a device after its manufacturer has demonstrated its excellence to the satisfaction of the editor. It is entirely up to the manufacturer. If the commendation of the department is not of sufficient value to him to justify the expense of a demonstration, why that is, I think, no fault of ours.

One-Phase Versus Three-Phase.

J. C. Searcy, Balboa, Canal Zone, Panama, says:

I have a subject of importance to place before the department. Two weeks ago we ordered a motor generator set to take A. C. supply and deliver D. C. at the arc. I recommended a three-phase motor, as the same was to be operated on a 220 volt, 25 cycle line. The electrical engineer of the Panama Canal recommended a single-phase motor. Of course this was merely a convenience on his part, but just the same he put up a stiff argument, and said he could not see the superiority of the three-phase motor. Now I would like to know what some of the other fellows have to say on this subject. I have been operating and managing theaters for four years, and am one of the devotees of the Moving Picture World; also have one of your Handbooks which is I think the grandest thing going for operators. I am at present holding down the position of chief operator for the Club Houses on the Canal Zone, consisting of six theaters. Operators in the States have a cinch to keep things in shape. Down here the machine will rust over night unless we go over it after every performance with an oily cloth; should we forget to do so we find it in bad condition. There is another thing here I never saw in the States, viz.: condensers sweating. I find this is a regular thing here, and the only way to prevent it from lasting more than ten minutes is to open the door and blow sharply between the condensers. This will stop it. It shows how damp the air is in the rainy season.

As to the single and three-phase motor matter, I do not feel able to put up a very complete argument on that particular proposition, therefore will refer the same to our electrician contributors, some of whom no doubt will deal with the matter at length and in detail. Yes, the air in the Zone during the rainy season is, according to my understanding, not only damp, but distinctly wet. When it does not rain all day and all night it rains all night and all day, or something like that.

Brother Searcy wants to get back to the States. He offers to furnish high class references, and is willing to go anywhere there is a position at reasonable salary. Should anyone desire to avail themselves of his services, he can be reached by addressing him care of F. M. M. Richardson, Superintendent of Club Houses, Balboa Heights, Canal Zone.

Power Correct.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, writes:

> Enclosed find my effort at answering question 88. I am going to have a question booklet sometime, but at present must wait the weekly appearance of the World to get busy on the week's dose. Yes, of course, I have a Handbook, it being my second copy, the other having been lost, strayed or stolen. What Mr. Power says regarding definition and eye strain is undoubtedly correct. This is easily proven by throwing the stereo or M. P. lens out of focus, and then trying to make out the objects in the picture. By-the-way, while advising managers to look into this matter, why not impress upon the producers the necessity of having the best procurable lenses in the cameras, and then have their camera men turn out sharp negatives?

The producers have the best lenses obtainable, but, Neighbor Dann, they do not always have the best cameramen. Producers are supposed to have brains, but, like managers, they sometimes cause one to think they have not an over supply of that article by employing the cheapest cameramen they can possibly get rather than the best. Moreover, the cameramen and the lenses sometimes get blamed for what is the fault of the darkroom men, or printing room girls. You see there are a good many different things that can operate to injure the final result in the positive print. First, a poor lens; second, a dirty lens; third, a poor light, or poor judgment as to stopping down the lens; fourth, wrong speed of the camera; fifth, static; sixth, improper treatment in the dark room, which includes a good many things; seventh, improper treatment in printing, which also includes quite some several things—all these various items must of necessity be "right up to the notch," or the result on the screen of the theatre is going to be in some degree lacking. Yes, Brother Power is right. In fact he quite frequently is. But Mr. Power and the editor of this department very often have lengthy and sometimes reasonably warm discussions, but we are good friends nevertheless.

Serve Under an Operator.

Brooklyn, New York says:

> For ten years I have been a radio operator and engineer. Am a member of the Institute of Radio Engineers and have built some of the largest wireless telegraph stations in the United States and South America. This statement is made simply to show you that I certainly know something about electricity. Some two months ago I returned from Santa Marta, Columbia, where I built a 50 K.W. radio station complete, and operated it. At the present time work in my line is hard to get, and not remunerative, owing to patent litigation, the war, etc. Since it is necessary for a man to continue to eat, I looked around for something at which to work to make a living, and decided that motion picture operating offered a good opportunity. I enrolled in one of the schools advertised in the daily papers, hoping to learn such practical details in connection with operating projectors as would enable me to pass an examination for a license. The instruction given was almost exclusively electrical, and therefore not new to me. When I went up for examination I failed because the questions asked me were almost exclusively about the machine, projection, fire hazard, etc. As it is impossible for an unlicensed man to obtain practical knowledge by actually operating a machine, how may his necessary skill and knowledge be obtained? I certainly want to pass my next examination, and thought possibly you could and would tell me the best way to prepare myself. This query is frankly from a man who wants and needs to succeed and is propounded to one who has already done so.

I was just a little bit amused, Brooklyn, upon reading your letter. Now see here, old man, aren't you honestly and truly ashamed of yourself? The contents of your letter, which I have only quoted in part, convince one instantly that you are a man of education and brains. Being such, how in the world do you expect to learn a trade by "going to school" for a few weeks? Would you expect to become a locomotive engineer by going to school for thirty or sixty days? Would you expect to become an architect by studying that length of time? Would you even expect to become an efficient railway section foreman by going to school thirty to sixty days? Certainly you would not. But you calmly propose to do that very thing with motion picture operating. Well, it cannot be did. Do you know why the examiner did not ask you many questions on electricity, whereas most men are examined at length and in much detail on this subject? The answer is easy; your manner of answering the first few questions on electricity doubtless convinced the examiners that you were past master of that end of things, therefore they turned to other things, quickly discovering that your knowledge was practically nothing, except on the electrical end, and the electrical end, while of importance, and an exceedingly important part of motion picture operating, is, after all, but one branch. There is only one thing I can advise. You propose to learn a trade, viz.: moving picture operating; you already have the electrical end at your command. All right. Get a position as helper somewhere outside of New York City and serve a sufficient time, which ought not to be over two years, to learn the business. Secure a copy of the Handbook from the Moving Picture World, a 130-page book, devoted exclusively to projection and matters pertaining thereto and combining story with practical experience. Of course, these latter jobs are hard to get, but that is simply a question of hustle, and anyway it is the only practical method of doing the thing and doing it right. You can no doubt, with your present electrical knowledge, become a fairly proficient operator in less than six months' by the time you serve as apprentice is determined, of course, on how hard you study and how much you are satisfied to know. You should also familiarize yourself thoroughly with the various moving picture mechanisms. This is all the advice I feel capable of offering you under the circumstances and I am offering it to you through the department at some length for the benefit of others.

Unique Decorations.

P. M. Bridges, Chicago, Illinois, says:

> I am forwarding, under separate cover, picture of the "Best Theater" operating room, Pine Bluff, Ark., where I was on the job for fifty-eight weeks, until I got the "Chicago blues" and had to come back to the City by the Lake. Am a member of Local 110, Chicago (old No. 2) and was president of Local 328, Pine Bluff, until I left that city. I want to say right at this point that the boys in 328 are as splendid a bunch of fellows as you could hope to meet. Every one of them knows his business, and one has to prove that he knows it before he can gain admission to the local. With regard to the pennants and banners on the walls, you may possibly object, as it is apparently a veritable "harem," but how many operators are there would not welcome the transformation of the dismal operating room walls into something like this if they could "get by" with it? Surely it adds something to the pleasure of the grind, and the more pleasant a workman's surroundings be, the better the results, invariably. I feel that you will acknowledge this to be the nicest-looking operating room yet brought to your attention. Two Powers Six A motor-driven machines and a Wagner converter comprise the projection equipment, while a huge exhaust fan in the 18-foot ceiling makes it cooler inside than out. Joe Lomonico, the operator who worked with me is seen (to advantage) on the left, with myself on the right. All in all, the "Best" is one of the prettiest and best-equipped little playhouses in the south. I am now working in one of Chicago's largest theaters, but there are no pictures on the wall.

The room certainly is unique, but, Brother Bridges, I cannot do otherwise than object, particularly to the banners. Of course, it is very nice, and adds pleasure to the operator's work. We freely grant all that, but my objections to this particular room, which apparently is otherwise excellent, is first (a) the walls are light colored, and a projection room, like the cab of a locomotive, should be as nearly perfectly dark as it is possible to get it; (b) should there be a film fire the banners would add considerable very dense and pungent smoke.

I am not a crank on matters of this latter sort. I don't believe a wooden work bench in the operating room is in any way, shape, manner or form objectionable. I do not believe a few nicely framed pictures, or, for that matter, pictures not nicely framed, would do any harm at all, but cloth banners are open to the objection above named. Of course, if, in case of fire, you get your port shutter down quickly enough and the exhaust fan is sufficiently powerful to pull all the smoke out, why banners won't do any harm, but if, on the other hand, for any reason the smoke begins to pour out into the auditorium, the banners would provide just that much more of it and add an element of "chokiness." With regard to the lightness of the walls, I freely concede some operators are producing good results with light in the operating room, and with light walls at that. But that does not alter the fact that the picture can be seen much more clearly when viewed from a point the dark operating room, than it can from a light one. That statement comes within the category of facts, and it is useless to dispute it.

Now, Brother Bridges, I hope you won't take this as a roast. It is not. I am glad you sent the picture because it is unique and, therefore, interesting to our readers. What I have said is not designed as a roast, but merely as a discussion of certain points in connection with operating room practice.

Of the Worst Kind.

Vernon Collins writes from Southern California:

> I take this opportunity to set forth the condition of things as I find them in Southern California, outside of Los Angeles. I am not an operator, but a photoplay fan of the worst kind; also a reader of the M. P. World, and the department. Am traveling over Southern California in the interest of a fraternal order, and have many friends among operators of the smaller houses. I find projection to be very good, but all operators are underpaid, and are expected to do too much for what they get. I know of one young man, a very good operator, who is working within sixty miles of Los Angeles, running three shows a day, five reels to a show, for $19.00 a week. He has two machines in a little "coop," or "booth," as he calls it. He tends the stage when they have vaudeville, which is every week, and tells me that his manager—the owner of the theater—wanted him to accept a cut to $15.00, and to see that the sweeping out of the place was done, which, he said, was a nice way of asking him to do it himself. His manager [Manager did you say? Ed.] has been in the business about four years, and the operator has been in the game twelve years that I know of. One projector has been in use three years, and the operator informs me that in that time they have paid out 35 cents for repairs, that being for something he could not do himself. Personally I like to go to a show, and when I know the man behind the projector is well paid I enjoy the pictures, but when I know he is expected to come down in the early morning, sweep out, dust, see to the advertising, and in fact run the house, and then get jawed at on pay night when he only receives as much as a common laborer, it raises my mad. Please say something to the managers of this section of the country. This letter is from a friend of the photoplay—not the movie.

Friend Collins, I have talked on this proposition until I am pretty nearly blue in the face. Well, I do know that the talk has at least helped some, but there are still many hundreds of managers so blind to reason that they can only see the one single dollar in their fist. This class of men seems to be absolutely unable to understand the proposition that, within reason, the well-paid operator is, in the end, the best proposition from a business point of view; also that it never has, does not, and never will pay to make the operator maid-of-all-work. Broadly speaking it is good work in the operating room that brings in the nickels and dimes, twenty-five cents and half dollars, and here in New York the dollar and a dollar-and-a-half to the box office. That is an absolutely indisputable fact. It is not subject to argument. Broadly speaking, also, high class work is only put on by the man who has a good enough job that he wants to keep it. The nineteen-dollar-a-week maid-of-all-work operator, who, in addition to projecting the picture, must get the reels, sweep the theater, be scene shifter for vaudeville acts, and grow a luxuriant moustache so the manager can use it for a pen wiper, does not care very much about his job. He can get as good a one almost any time, therefore he is not over-exerting himself to put high class work on the screen.

I do not know just what nineteen dollars a week means in the town where this particular man is working; nineteen a week there might be as much as thirty in New York City, which would, under present conditions, be a fair salary. Be that as it may, however, managers ought to understand that the operator is an operator, and not a chamber maid to the theater. He should only be required to project the films and inspect them. Moreover if the inspection takes any considerable length of time he should be paid overtime for that. It is not right, from any point of view, for the theater manager to take advantage of the necessities of a man and force him to do work which is not, by any stretch of the imagination, a part of his duty.

Frude Film Circuit Closer.

This department is in receipt of inquiries regarding the practicability of a device known as the Frude Film Circuit Closer which is made by the Fire Prevention Devices Company, Chicago, Ill.

We have no knowledge of this device other than that gleaned from circulars which have been mailed to us, and certain letters showing that it has the approval of the authorities in a few cities. This department cannot pass judgment or express any opinion based on evidence of this kind, and we are obliged to advise these inquirers that until such time as the manufacturers of devices of this kind, or any other kind for that matter, submit their goods for inspection and test, or demonstrate their practicability and excellence to this department, we cannot recommend them. They may be all right, but the fact that they are approved by the underwriters does not necessarily prove they are the best thing to purchase. The underwriters have approved a number of devices which were good in their way, but lacked a whole lot of being the best thing of its kind on the market. Also the underwriters have at times approved things in connection with moving picture projection which were, from a practical point of view, distinctly bad.

Referred to the Manufacturer.

S. A. Myers, Edinburg, Virginia, sends check in payment for the Handbook and says:

> I have [illegible] which were used with the lighting plant. Can they be changed to 60 cycle, 110 volt A. C.? If so, what would it cost?

I think not. However, it is a question to take up with the manufacturer of the fans. I believe, however, I am safe in saying that even if they could be changed they would be highly inefficient and the cost of changing would be prohibitive. In other words, I think it would pay you better to get new fans, even though the change is possible.

Inadvisable.

Jarvis Theater Company, Lansing, Michigan, asks by wire:

> Will there be any trouble about getting picture in focus if machine sets four feet off center of screen sideways; 50 foot throw; 14 foot picture; Power's machine; direct current; regular lens that came with machine? Wire answer night letter.

I replied by wire, but the matter is of sufficient interest to be used in this department.

I would not advise these gentlemen to attempt that particular proposition. By means of a carefully selected lens, stopped down considerably, and the doctoring of the projection machine itself, by raising one side of the aperture plate away from the casting considerably, and the bending of the gate to square with the aperture plate in its new position, it would be possible, I think, to get at least fairly good results, and perhaps practically perfect results, so far as focus be concerned, though there would still be a side keystone effect and a consequent distortion of the picture to deal with. The distortion could not be remedied, though the side keystone effect could by carefully filling in the top and bottom of the aperture with solder and filing the same to compensate for the keystone.

I do not believe, however, that it is advisable to undertake to project pictures under such difficulties. A building which will not allow of the proper location of the projection machine is not, in my judgment, fit for a moving picture theater. The operating room is, after all, the heart of the moving picture theater, and, even as in the human anatomy, a misplaced heart is not at all desirable. Presumably the Jarvis Theater Company is adapting a building already erected for some other purpose to moving pictures. Now if I were going to do that the very first thing I would look at would be the possible operating room location, and if I could not get what I wanted in that direction, absolutely regardless of other considerations, I would immediately reject the building as unfit for the purpose.

A projection machine 4 feet off center on a 50 foot throw, projecting a 14 foot picture, lacks a good deal of being an ideal proposition. True, fair results might be had even without any doctoring of the machine, but "fair results" are not what we seek these days. The time is rapidly passing when the motion picture theater patrons are satisfied with "fair results." The motion picture theater patron of to-day is looking for the best, and is rapidly learning that out of focus, blurry effects are not the best, and that discoloration of the projection light is not necessary and not the best. In other words he is becoming discriminating. He is beginning to buy his moving picture amusement with some degree of intelligence. No, I would advise the Jarvis Theater Company not to attempt anything of that kind, but with the proviso that they may do it, and get fair results, but only "fair."

Focal Length.

I. M. Shryock, Aberdeen, Washington, orders a Handbook, renews his subscription to the World and says:

> Kindly let me know best condenser combination for 5 3-4 E. F. lens. Throw 94 feet with a drop of 25 feet. Measurements on center line from lens to screen. Use about 35 amperes through a G. E. rectifier. Kindly send me name of a good make of condenser.

You will, I think, find the Maltese Cross condenser lens to be very satisfactory; also the lens supplied by the Kleine Optical Company, Chicago, though some of the latter have more surplus glass (thicker edge) than I like. On the other hand they are less likely to turn straw color than the Maltese Cross, so on the whole it is about a standoff between the two. That seems to be the only fault the Maltese lenses have—a tendency to turn a very light straw color. However their manufacturers guarantee the lens against any coloring of any kind except yellow.

As to your condenser combination, I am sorry, but I am not giving out any dope on that matter now. I expect within the next few weeks to present you with tables that will enable you to fit up your lens system absolutely correct. In order to answer you intelligently now I would have to know the diameter of your objective. Until the lens matter comes out in the department use two 7 1-2 inch set right up close together. I think you will get the best results if you have the objective, of ordinary diameter, with your lamphouse back somewhere between 18 or 20 inches from the film to the apex of the curved surface of the front condenser.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

HIS FATAL SHOT (Biograph), June 28.—Circumstantial evidence plays an important part in this one-reel drama. The working out of the plot is quite ingenious. Ivan Christy and Herbert Barrington are the principals in an effective cast.

TRAPPED (Essanay), June 28.—The events which take place in this one-reel drama are not very convincing, the detective's scheme for trapping a murderer being altogether too far-fetched. John Thorn and John R. Hope give a good account of themselves in the leading characters.

THE MAN WHO DID NOT DIE ("Road o' Strife" Series, No. 13) (Lubin), June 28.—Most surprising are the happenings which make up this number of the Emmett Campbell Hall Serial. The silver cup has a false bottom and hides a document which proves that Alene is "Her Royal Highness, the Princess Alene, rightful heiress to her father's crown and the throne of Urania." Professor Gershom, who disappeared on the day Alene left the House of Secrets, brings this astonishing news to light.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 51, 1915 (Selig), June 28.—Laying the keel for U. S. Navy transport at League Island, Philadelphia, starts the news items. Then come, in the following order: Leland Standford rowing crew leaving Palo Alto, Cal.; crusade in New York City against dishonest scales; Haweiian delegation celebrating at the Panama-Pacific Fair; Lucile fashions; blowing up wreck at entrance to harbor, Chicago; street scenes in Rome, Italy, during war excitement; flood at Kansas City; advocates of Peace League meet at Independence Hall, Philadelphia; U. S. Dreadnaughts, Utah and Texas, passing under East River bridges.

MR. JARR AND THE CAPTIVE MAIDEN ("The Jarr Family" Series, No. 13) (Vitagraph), June 28.—Roy McCardell has gone afield for his fun in this number of his serial, and producer Harry Davenport has been obliged to do some hard thinking. The result is fairly humorous, owing largely to the hearty support of the cast.

LOVE'S MELODY (Biograph), June 29.—The story of the broken-down musician whose daughter is restored to him through the instrumentality of one of his own compositions, has done service in all forms of fiction. Its vitality still remains unimpaired, however, and the two-reel photoplay entitled "Love's Melody" deals with the theme in a fitting manner. Edward Cecil, Gus Pixley Jack Mulhall, Marie Newton and Irma Dawkins comprise a high grade cast.

THE MERRY MOVING MEN (Kalem), June 29.—The activities of "Ham" and "Bud" in this one-reel comedy may not be strictly true, but they will not seem very much overdrawn to the many sufferers whose household treasures have been left to the tender care of a pair of husky moving men. An amusing satire on an always timely subject.

HER CHOICE (Lubin), June 29.—"Love finds the way" out of the difficulty which an embarrassment of suitors places the heroine of this one-reel comedy. Albert G. Price has handled his material with considerable skill, and Mae Hotley, Ed. Lawrence, Frances NeMoyer, Raymond McKee, Jerold Hovener and Ben Walker give a spirited performance.

ON THE BORDER (Selig), June 29.—Not a very complicated little drama, but the girl marries the right man, and the phase of western life is interesting. Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are true to type. "Some Speed," a bit of rapid-fire farce, is on the same reel.

CARTOONS IN THE HOTEL (Edison), June 30.—"Tales of Silas Bunkum," "A Chip of the Old Block," and "Mr. Hicks in Nightmare-land" are the three clever "Grouch Chasers" by Rauol Barre, in this set of animated cartoons. Hearty enjoyment goes with each one. The live actors in the picture lend diversity to the reel.

DREAMY DUD RESOLVES NOT TO SMOKE (Essanay), June 30.—Another living cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson, clever in conception and drawing. On the same reel with picturesque views in Arizona.

THE MYSTERY OF DEAD MAN'S ISLE (Selig), June 30.—This compact little one-reel drama was written by James Oliver Curwood, and deals with a band of counterfeiters and a love motive. The interest is well sustained. Clyde Benson and Edith Johnson are pleasing as the lovers.

THE EVOLUTION OF CUTEY (Vitagraph), June 30.—The plot of this one-reel comedy long ago did valiant service in the cause of the drama. In the present version the fun is brought out effectively on the screen. Wally Van, Albert Roccardi, Nitra Frazer and Cissy Fitz-Gerald lend their talents to a spirited performance.

FATE'S HEALING HAND (Biograph), July 1.—The dramatic material in this one-reel photoplay is strong, human and well knit together. Wm. J. Butler, Frank Newberg and Isabel Rea are all cast to advantage.

A COUNTLESS COUNT (Essanay), July 1.—Knockabout comedy of the most approved burlesque type is the building material in this one-reel farce. Eddie Fries, Harry Pollard, Ed. Armstrong, Robert McKenzie and Margie Rieger work conscientiously and keep the fun moving at a lively rate.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 52, 1915 (Selig), July 1.—Yale defeating Harvard at New London, starts the reel. The remaining events are: Alumni Day at Yale; Graduation Day at Harvard; bathing at Brighton Beach; Upton Physical Culture Class at Middleton, Mass.; London City Guards drilling in Hyde Park; old submarine goes on the junk pile at Philadelphia; opening of Selig Jungle-Zoo; fire drill of New York school children; fireworks display, Panama-Pacific Exposition; Aviator Art Smith making a night ascension; and Rario Resta breaking auto record at Chicago.

A HARMLESS FLIRTATION (MinA), July 1.—George Ovey has the star role in this one-reel farce, which is played in fast time and may be relied upon to amuse an audience. Goldie Colwell and Louis Fitz Roy assist in making the picture a success.

THE HONEYMOON PACT (Vitagraph), July 1.—An excellent reminder of the days when a chap and his wife imagine that they can live entirely on love. The pair of Newlyweds, in the competent hands of Lillian Walker and Evart Overton, have a most amusing experience, and awaken to the terrible truth that even love birds grow weary of just each other.

THE SANDS OF DEE (Biograph), July 2.—This reissue of D. W. Griffith's pictorial setting of Charles Kingsley's celebrated poem, reveals the now famous director's eye for beauty, and skill in photoplay construction when the art was first born.

THE LITTLE PROSPECTOR (Essanay), July 2.—One of the best of the new series of dramas in which G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton are now appearing. Two clever children add largely to the play's success.

THE SUFFRAGETTE SHERIFF (Kalem), July 2.—A shrewd dig at the present feminine agitation which will amuse everyone, including the members of the new party. Alice Joyce enters into the spirit of her role as if strongly in favor of the Suffragettes.

HER MOTHER'S SECRET (Lubin), July 2.—A one-reel domestic drama, with a neat touch of romance, this photoplay is convincingly acted by John Smiley, Carol Halloway, Clarence Elmer and Frankie Mann.

HUNTING A HUSBAND (Vitagraph), July 2.—The Western Vitagraph Company, directed by Ulysses Davis, give a very successful production of this amusing one-reel comedy. Alfred Vosburg, Jane Novak and Jack Mower have the principal parts.

LUXURIOUS LOU (Biograph), July 3.—The richly flavored humor of Roy Norton is responsible for this one-reel Western comedy. The story illustrates the sad truth: Man proposed—and occasionally wishes he hadn't. Mrs. La Vernie is imposing, and wonderfully gowned, in the title role. Ivan Christy, Walter Coyle and Joseph McDermott are a trio of real Westerners.

WAS IT HER DUTY (Edison), July 3.—This one-reel domestic drama does not answer the question asked by the title. They tell of a woman's struggle between love and duty, presenting the problem clearly, and then leaves the spectator to make his own deduction. A well staged and well acted photoplay.

THE MIDNIGHT LIMITED (An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 3.—Leaping onto the roof of a rapidly moving freight train, and climbing out of the window of a faster moving sleeper, are part of "the day's work" for Helen in this reel, and once more suggests the query, What is she going to do next?

A DAY ON THE FORCE (Lubin), July 3.—Billie Reeves gets back into his own (stage) person in this one-reel comedy. Under the mistaken idea that a policeman's beat is one round of pleasure, he impersonates an officer, and has a number of amusing experiences. One piece of business is entirely too broad.

THE TRAIL TO THE PUMA'S LAIR (Selig), July 3.—A Jungle-Zoo drama, this one-reel picture shows the fate which overtakes a faithless wife. The story, producing and acting, keep the reel on a level with the rest of the series.

General Film Company Specials.

THE BONDWOMAN (Kalem), June 28.—The material used by Mrs. Owen Bronson in her three-reel drama, has been given an intelligent and efficient production by Kenean Buel. The story is not remarkable for its originality, but it has great dramatic value, and keeps a close grip on the attention. Vera Fuller Mellish is girlish and natural in the star role, but lacks the emotional power demanded by the stronger scenes. Henry Hallam, James B. Ross and Helen Lindroth are excellent.

THE GIRL AND THE REPORTER (Selig), June 28.—The love motive and general trend of this two-reel drama make an entertaining photoplay; the character and doings of that knowing little rascal, Pete Davis, the office boy, gives it a fine comedy flavor. Roland Sharpe does Pete to the life. Edith Johnson, Leo Pierson and Lafayette McKee are also excellent, and the direction of Thomas Santschi is first quality work.

PROVIDENCE AND MRS URMY (Essanay), June 29. This three-reel drama about an American girl who unknowingly marries a lord, is put together with so much skill and so well acted by Beverly Bayne, Francis X. Bushman, Louise Crolius and Helen Dunbar that it has all the charm of a fresh subject. The production, although elaborate, is not always English in atmosphere.

THE HAND OF GOD (Vitagraph), June 29.—There is a strong moral in this two-reel drama by Frank Dazy, in fact, two of them: bigotry often becomes a crime, and even a minister should not deceive his wife. Fear of the truth nearly wrecks the minister and his entire family, in this photoplay. Charles Wellesley, Naomi Childers, Betty Gray and Bobby Connelly bring out all the acting possibilities of the story; and Capt. Harry Lambert, in command of the producing forces, deserves the thanks of his superior officers.

THE ACCOMPLICE (Kalem), June 30.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 2108 issue of June 26.

THE PATH OF THE RAINBOW (Lubin), June 30.—The unselfishness which made Dickens' Tom Pinch so lovable, is to be found in Henry Grayson the leading character in Shannon Fife's three reel drama. The story has no big dramatic thrill, but is sweet and clean, and well acted by Arthur Matthews, Ormi Hawley and the rest of the cast.

BY THE FLIP OF A COIN (Lubin), July 1.—Julian Louis Lamothe has used army life in India as a background for his two-reel drama. The story is full of action and the interest is held steadily up to the climax. A realistic battle scene is part of the action. L. C. Shumway, George Routh and Velma Whitman make an excellent leading trio.

THE WAR O' DREAMS (Selig), July 1.—This three-reel drama would have made an excellent release for the Glorious Fourth. It is filled with the smoke of battle, and is also a powerful argument in favor of peace. The story, acting and filming are all of a high order of merit.

THE TRAGEDIES OF THE CRYSTAL GLOBE (Edison), July 2.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1784 issue of June 12.

THE CRIMINAL (Broadway Star Features Vitagraph), July 3.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 2109 issue of June 26.

THE INNER BRUTE (Essanay), July 3.—There is great dramatic strength in this two-reel drama. The story is not a pleasant one, but it is handled consistently, and filmed so as to bring out its strong points. The locations, especially, have been well chosen. John Lorenz and Warda Howard meet every demand of the situations.

GREATER LOVE HATH NO MAN (Popular Plays and Players), July 5.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 322 issue of July 10.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 26, 1915 (Mutual), July 1.—The variety of news events pictured in this issue is marked. It opens with war scenes from Europe and among the more interesting of the events, includes the Yale-Harvard boat race, the 250th anniversary celebration in New York and a flood that did great damage to valuable property.

MR. WALLACK'S WALLET (Komic), July 4.—Particular interest attaches to this knockabout farce in that it was one of the last in which Elmer Booth appeared before his tragic death. Mr. Booth supports Fay Tincher in a series of ludicrous complications that make first rate entertainment of the more obvious sort.

FIFTY YEARS AFTER APPOMATTOX (Thanhouser), July 4.—A Decoration Day story, featuring Lorraine Huling and Boyd Marshall. The widow is seen following the ceremonies in the cemetery, going over her girlhood days in civil war time. She was arrested as a union spy and pardoned by Jefferson Davis. This is strongly sentimental in treatment and makes a characteristic offering of the type.

THE HEALERS (Reliance), July 5.—There is a full reel of diverting comedy in this story of stranded vaudeville performers, who, owing to an accident, and the man's opportune knowledge of surgery, gain a reputation for possessing mystic powers. How they play upon the credulity of simple country folk and are showered with greenbacks, is exceedingly well told in a cleverly conceived photoplay.

THE HIRED GIRL (Majestic), July 6.—Acted in pleasing rural surroundings and introducing the always appealing figure of a girl, who, because of poverty, is denied the normal pleasures of girlhood, this offering is certain of a favorable reception. At a strawberry festival the hitherto ignored hired girl appears very fetching in a new gown, delivered to her by mistake, and the young men of the village are quick to recognize her attractiveness.

THE HIGH COST OF FLIRTING (American), July 7.—With John Steppling in the leading role, audiences will find a thoroughly intelligent and amusing comedy in this one-reel subject. It is a humorous travesty on blackhand methods in which a citizen of blameless repute figures. One day he is unwise enough to kiss a pretty fortune teller and is caught in the act by her husband, who sees a fine opportunity for blackmail.

THE FORTIFICATION PLANS (Reliance), July 7.—Elmer Clifton, Vester Perry, Gladys Brockwell and F. A. Turner appear in this story of military life. The young lieutenants are rivals for the girl's hand; one of them sells valuable plans and the other proves his worth by protecting them. This is nicely pictured, well-constructed and quite pleasing.

MADAME BLANCHE, BEAUTY DOCTOR (Falstaff), July 9.—A prettily pictured comedy number, featuring Harry Benham, Riley Chamberlin, Mignon Anderson and others. The nephew poses as a female beauty doctor in order to raise badly needed funds. This is entertaining, though slight in plot.

AT THE POSTERN GATE (Reliance), July 9.—A costume picture of romantic days, presumably in France. To defend the honor of the family the girl's mother assumes men's clothes and fences with her lover. The duel scene is picturesque. Later, when the lover has been wounded, his father comes and happiness follows. This is well-photographed and pleasing.

THEY RAN FOR MAYOR (Royal), July 10.—A fair burlesque depicting the antagonism of an Irish-American and a German-American candidate for mayor of a small town. Having built a spite fence to separate their yards and abused each other on every opportunity, they become good friends when a rank outsider wins the election.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

LITTLE MARIE (Reliance), July 3.—Charles West's playing of an Italian laborer is the most memorable feature of this two-part heart interest drama. At times his acting of scenes with his little daughter, who means everything in life to him, is reminiscent of Bebans's performance in "The Alien." The story is fairly dramatic and reasonable enough in its construction, although it offers nothing particularly fresh in idea or treatment.

THE OLD HIGH CHAIR (Majestic), July 4.—A quiet, pleasing two-reel subject serving as a photoplay illustration of a sentimental poem. There is no story to speak of, rather a series of episodes following the career of a southern family, before, during and after the Civil War. The aged mother waits patiently through the years for the return of her favorite son, who went away to become a sailor. Settings and costumes are in good taste and most of the acting is sympathetic.

MOUNTAIN MARY (American), July 5.—Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson and Charles Newton have conspicuous roles in an acceptable two-part melodrama, based on a mountain feud. A plot that might easily become objectionable is handled in a way that gives no offense. The son of an old mountaineer plans to avenge the insult suffered by his father by ruining the daughter of his enemy. In winning the love of the girl, the youth falls in love himself and, as might be expected, the attachment of the young people ends the family warfare. A satisfactory treatment of a conventional subject.

COURTHOUSE CROOKS (Keystone), July 5.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 321 issue of July 10.

THE MAKER OF GUNS (Thanhouser), July 6.—A two-reel number, featuring Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster. It pictures the making of big guns in an American plant, the girl's father and brother being in the business. Views of this industry are of timely interest and these are well-photographed. The girl dislikes the business intensely; later her brother goes abroad to sell the guns. He is killed in battle by the very munitions of warfare he helped sell. The duel scene was nicely staged. The number is on the whole very entertaining, though it has no great dramatic strength.

SECRETARY OF FRIVOLOUS AFFAIRS (Mutual Masterpicture-American), July 8.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 318 issue of July 10.

THE RUSE (Broncho), July 14.—A two-reel Western offering, featuring Wm. S. Hart, Clara Williams, Gertrude Claire and others. Hart plays the part of Bat Peters, a mining man who goes to Chicago to sell his property. The stenographer knows her employer is a crook and tries to warn Bat. Later he saves her from the employer and also saves his own property. This is well-constructed and interesting throughout. The final scenes, depicting the single handed gun fight, are very stirring. This is stronger than the average story of this type.

THE BURGLAR'S BABY (Domino), July 15.—A two-reel story featuring Walter Edwards, Leona Hutton and J. Barney Sherry. The plot is very conventional throughout and the production offers very little novelty. It tells of a poor man out of work who robs a house and is discovered through a little silver cup he gave to his baby. The recognition of the burglar by the doctor is the strongest scene. Well-constructed and well-acted but not new.

THE TIDE OF FORTUNE (Kaybee), July 16.—A Civil War story in two reels, featuring J. Barney Sherry, George Fischer and Estelle Allen. The young Northern sympathizer marries the colonel's daughter secretly before going to the war. Later he and the colonel appear on opposing sides. During the war the hero hides in his wife's room, after seeing his new born baby. He is captured. The story jumps to the close of the war, neglecting to say how he escapes. He obtains a government office for the colonel, now out of funds. The story is one of average interest, with good construction in the main.

OLD FOES WITH NEW FACES (American), July 5.—Chapter 10 of "The Diamond from the Sky," in two parts. This is full of exciting incidents and carries the story along with a whirl of interest. The train is held up and Vivian is forced to give the diamond over to a bandit. The latter is shot and the diamond falls near a rattlesnake's lair. Other threads of the story are brought out entertainingly. The photography in this number is wonderfully clear and effective.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 173, June 30. A Shriners' parade Atlantic City pageant, auto races in Chicago, Yale-Harvard regatta, war demonstrations and other interesting features are shown in this number.

THE WRONG LABEL (Imp), July 5.—A story of a despondent girl who attempts to take her life with bichloride of mercury, but instead takes a harmless drug. Her lover and a gang of crooks also appear. The plot is not very strong and is not of the most appealing sort.

MARTIN LOWE—FIXER (Laemmle), July 11.—A pretty story by Ben Cohn and Frank Lloyd, illustrating how an old bachelor applies the plot of a short story to real life in converting the girl's father. He succeeds in bringing about the wedding, but the father reads the story and discovers where the idea came from. This is very enjoyable; Frank Lloyd, M. K. Wilson, Vera Sisson and Marc Robbins are in the cast.

WHEN FATHER HAD THE GOUT (Nestor), July 12.—An Al E. Christie number, featuring Harry Rattenberry, Billy Rhodes, Herbert Stanley and Neal Burns. The lover wheels the gouty father out on the beach and refuses to save him when the tide approaches until he gives consent to their marriage. This is not particularly strong, but has amusing moments.

HIS NEW AUTOMOBILE (Imp), July 13.—A light comedy offering, with King Baggott and Jane Gail in the leads. He buys an auto and the fun comes in when he tries to run it. It finally explodes and when last seen is up in a tall tree. This is well-pictured and amusing.

WHEN HEARTS WERE TRUMPS (Powers), July 13.—A pleasing juvenile number, with a country school as the setting. The rivalry over the girl is amusing and the hero's conduct at the fire makes him worthy of her. A good number of the kind.

DEAR LITTLE OLD TIME GIRL (Laemmle), July 15.—Featuring Wm. C. Dowlin and Violet MacMillan. The mountain girl is sent to the city, where she charms the young man by her pretty, old-fashioned ways and costume. Not very new but dainty and attractive.

CAPTAIN KENT'S EDUCATED SEALS (Powers), July 15.—A half reel showing for what is said to be the first time on the screen a number of trained seals. They toss hats and balls, beat drums and perform in a very pleasing manner the usual feats of these intelligent creatures.

THE WIZARD OF THE ANIMALS (Powers), July 15.—On same reel with above, pictures of Prof. Raymond L. Ditmars and his wife taking moving pictures of animal life under the microscope. The studies include a tenrec and echida, two rare animals, and some bats. The number as a whole is a good one.

HER RUSTIC HERO (Nestor), July 16.—A pleasing comedy, by Harvey Gates, featuring Victoria Forde and Eddie Leonard. She is a would-be authoress and he poses as a mountain youth, though really from the city. Of course a marriage results. The scenes are good and the handling light and enjoyable.

THE TRUST (Victor), July 16.—This story by Katherine M. Kingsbury features Lon Chaney and Vera Sisson. Chaney plays a man of the underworld, who plans to rob a house. He enters it and finds a despondent wife, with whom he makes an agreement to bring back her husband, holding a pearl necklace in trust. There is some vagueness in the construction, but as a whole the story proves quite entertaining and has some novelty in it.

FREAKS (Joker), July 17.—Max Asher, Gale Henry and Milbourne Moranti appear in this story of a circus side show. The scenes are not very attractive, particularly in and about the mess tent. Some of the situations are quite funny, though the production as a whole is only of about average merit.

THE STRANGER (Powers), July 17.—The story of a gentleman burglar who brings together a young couple almost estranged. Val Paul, Doris Pawn and Sydney Ayres are featured. The photography and settings are good and the plot, while not unusual in any way, is developed in an interesting manner. It makes a pleasing release.

FOR HIS SUPERIOR'S HONOR (Laemmle), July 18.—A good story of life at a military post by Frank Lloyd, showing the manner in which a young corporal saves the colonel's wife from wrecking her life by eloping with a scoundrel. The motive is delicately expressed and the cast which includes M. K. Wilson, Irma Sutor, Gretchen Lederer, Mae Robbins and Lester Calvin, is pleasing. A good offering.

THE CLOSING CHAPTER (Big U), July 11. A three-reel offering, written by Clifford Howard. Murdock MacQuarrie plays the part of a prosperous merchant who lives with an unmarried sister after the death of his wife. The latter turns the father against his own son throughout the whole production proves very hateful and designing in her efforts to gain her brother's estate. Adele Farrington makes a strong character part of this. The son marries, is cast out and later his daughter effects a reconciliation with her grandfather before [illegible]. The production is extremely well done for the type of story it is and shows human nature from both its pleasant and unpleasant sides.

THE FACE AT THE WINDOW (Universal Special), July 12. No. 4 of The Broken Coin series. This is not as much a detective story as this two-reel installment in that one of the series seems to be added. The last events are the threatened revolt of the [illegible] which is checked by Count Frederick and the outlaw to the order of Count Sachio. Here Kitty promises to come in for a new series of adventures, in her efforts to get both parts of the coin. This number introduces Normand MacDonald as The Apache, who will no doubt start new troubles.

THE GARDEN OF LIES (Broadway-Universal Features), July 12.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy on page 76 issue of July 3.

THE PEOPLE OF THE PIT (Gold Seal), July 14. A two-reel number by Grant Carpenter, featuring Ray Hanford, Cleo Madison and Joe King. While stock market stories have been frequent, this is unusually clever in many respects. It brings the present European crisis into the American market and shows in an enlightening way the effect of rumor on the sensitive quotations. There is a love story in which the aspiring young clerk ventures into business for himself and almost wrecks the girl's father. The girl puts her wits together and saves him. The holdup by the crank was well staged. A good stock market yarn.

THE PRIZE STORY (Victor), July 14. Reviewed by Marion Mac Donald on page 79 issue of July 3.

THE OPENING NIGHT (Big U), July 15.—A two-reel number featuring Adele Lane, Edward Sloman and Olive Adair. This is a stage story, and concerns an actress who returns to the footlights after a long absence. Her worthless brother shoots himself off stage because she will not give him any more money. The situation at the close is original, but, of course, very tragic; the brother connects up the phone and telephones his sister on the stage what he intends doing. She continues the performance to the end, knowing he has killed himself. This is well-constructed and quite strong for a story of its type.

THE ELEVENTH DIMENSION (Imp), July 16.—A two-reel production by Raymond L. Shrock, featuring Wm. E. Welsh, Howard Crampton, Alan Holubar and Frances Nelson. Stories of mental infirmity always have an unpleasant tinge. At the same time this plot, which centers about an insane chemist, who tries to kill a man and then restore life, has numerous qualities which are commendable. The girl first suspects her father's loss of reason and brings aid just as he is in the act of trying to kill a friend named Lovejoy. The game of chess and later the bullet imbedded in the watch were good features. There is considerable suspense in the latter scenes.

THE TOLL OF THE SEA (Bison), July 17.—A two-reel story of sea adventure, featuring Sherman Bainbridge, Marie Walcamp, Wellington Playter and others. The girl is made captive by her would-be lover and is taken to sea in his ship. The hero is a government officer scouring the seas for salvage pirates. The girl has many adventures; there is mutiny on the vessel and it is blown up. Two bands of pirates appear and later the hero comes to her rescue. This is full of action, and while some of the construction is jerky, it makes a good yarn of the kind.

A DOOMED HERO (L-KO), July 18. A two-reel low comedy, featuring Billie Ritchie, Peggy Pearce, Henry Bergman and others. The plot concerns a baron and his groom, pursued by anarchists. Ritchie rides a bucking horse and saves a girl's life by sliding down a wire. The bombs come into play later and there is a lot of good nonsense as the picture progresses. The feature of the deaf man, impervious to the noise about him, was a good one. This is better than the average offering of this company and altogether quite amusing.

THE Ether: It is hardly two hundred years ago since people first had any adequate idea that our atmosphere exists and that we live and move about at the bottom of a sea of air, the weight of which presses upon us and all other objects about us with a pressure of approximately fourteen pounds to the square inch. The existence of an all-pervading ether is even more difficult to grasp. That it exists is only an inference from observed facts, so for that matter is the existence of the atmosphere; we believe it to exist because its existence explains the facts which we observe. Do not mistake the term Ether used in this sense as the aenesthetic chemical which bears the same name.

The Ether, then, is an all pervading medium in which the entire universe is submerged, by means of which are transmitted Light, Radiant Heat, Actinic Radiation, X-Rays, Electro magnetic oscillations and Herzian Waves. Of these forms of radiant energy, that of light, and to a slight extent actinic radiation, are the only ones which we will consider here. Light is transmitted through the ether in straight lines by very minute waves or vibrations which travel with almost inconceivable velocity. These waves in the ether do not exactly correspond to waves of sound in the atmosphere, which are waves of compression and rarefaction, but are transverse deformations or displacements of the ether; that is, the wave movement or displacement is from side to side at right angles to the direction in which the light ray or waves are traveling.

magnify a light ray to an inconceivable size, if it were possible to render it visible. A ray of light is invisible and cannot be seen in passing through a transparent medium such as the air or glass or water unless there be present in the path of the light particles of matter which because they reflect some of the light give a visible image of the path of the ray. When we say that we see a ray of light, as for instance a darkened room where a ray of sunshine enters through a hole in the curtain or window shutter, it really means that we see the dust particles which float in the atmosphere of the room in the path of the sunbeam. In ordinary illumination they are too small to be visible, but under the strong light of the sun each particle becomes a tiny luminous point. For experiment turn the light of a projection machine on in a quiet room or theater that has not been disturbed for some time and you will not be able to distinguish the cone of light, but stir up a little dust or blow a little puff of smoke in front of the machine and see how quickly the light cone springs into visibility.

Fig. No. 2.—Light Vibration in a Single Ray.

Figure number two is an imaginary cross-section of figure number one in which we may conceive that the wave or ray is vibrating back and forth rapidly in every direction within the limits of the circle. An illustration which will help one to produce a mental picture of the nature of a light wave is that of dropping a pebble into a smooth pool, notice how the ripples leave in ever widening circles the center where the pebble was dropped. These waves leave the pebble and move outward in straight lines at a uniform speed and as they spread out in all directions from the center at the same speed they produce a circle. Do not become confused by the idea of the circle, but remember that selecting a point on the crest on any one of these ripples or waves it moves outward from the center in a straight line. In a similar manner, light waves move out in straight lines from their place of origin, not only in one plane, as the ripples do on the surface of the water, but outwardly in every direction; that is, through an inconceivable number of planes. The velocity at which light travels is one hundred and eighty-six thousand miles per second. That is nearly eight times around the earth in one second.

Fig. No. 3.—Emanation of Light from a Luminous Point.

As the whole structure of photography rests upon the application of the science of physics and chemistry it would be well for the earnest student of cinematography to dig up his high school text books and review the subjects of the physics of light and the chemistry of the salts of silver—if he has no such text books the public libraries will prove a mine of interesting text books on these subjects and even to those who have considered physics and chemistry dull and uninteresting the tracing of the relations of their phenomena to the applications of photography will lend an interest not before suspected.

It is not necessary to delve deeply into these subjects to acquire the fundamental facts upon the photography is based, and when once learned they will form the firm foundation upon which to build a solid symmetrical structure of photographic knowledge. Each new fact acquired will then fit in orderly sequence like the bricks in a wall.

Later papers will take up the chemistry of photographic processes in their relation to motion picture making and explain the reasons for the ingredients of the various formulas and their influence in the various chemical reactions which take place in the photographic processes described.

In the study of chemistry we learn that matter is indestructable and although we may change it and even render it invisible, as for instance when a substance is burned and its material becomes changed by uniting with the oxygen of the air into invisible oxides and water vapor. We learn that the composition of matter in all its forms may be resolved or analyzed into some one or more of the elements of which they are only about seventy and, aside from a few exceptions like radium which is not yet fully understood, there is no way yet known of transforming one element into another. Chemists believe that all matter consists of inconceivably small particles called atoms which cannot be farther subdivided; and that all matter is made up of combinations of these atoms into molecules which are the smallest divisions of any kind of substance that can exist.

*Copyright, 1915, by The Chalmers Publishing Co.

We can imagine for instance that a grain of common salt could be ground so finely that it would be impossible to reduce the resultant particles of powder to any finer state; one of these particles would then be a molecule of salt; but if this separation were continued all that could be done would be to part this tiny particle or molecule into the elements which compose it; that is, an atom of sodium and an atom of chlorine. Of course this imaginary example is mechanically impossible and is only intended as an illustration of the theory which explains much of the sciences of chemistry and physics as they are now understood. In a molecule the atoms may range in number from one as in a molecule of mercury or quicksilver to several hundreds as in the albumen or white of an egg. It is assumed by physicists and chemists that in any substance, particularly in a gaseous or expanded or heated state, that these inconceivably small molecules move about in a space which separates them from one another, almost comparable to planets and suns and stars in universal space and that they are in continual rapid motion or vibration.

The reasons for these assumptions are too complicated to go into here, but are clearly explained in most good texts on physics.

Sir William Thompson, a celebrated physicist, has calculated that if a drop of water were magnified to the size of the earth that each molecule would occupy a space about the size of a football.

Ether-waves are due to the Vibration of Molecules. The light and heat rays emanating from an electric arc are simply the ether waves caused by the vibration of white hot molecules of carbon in crater of the arc.

Vera Doria Latest Film Recruit

Prominent European Dramatic Soprano Secured by Morosco to Appear With George Fawcett and Cyril Maude.

MLLE. VERA DORIA, the famous European lyric soprano who has also had rare experience in big dramatic roles supporting such stars of the stage as Sir Charles Wyndman, Sir George Alexander, Charles Hawtrey, John Hart and others, is the latest theatrical star to be lured into motion pictures by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., in association with Bosworth, Inc.

Vera Doria is perhaps somewhat better qualified for successful picture work than the majority of those coming over from the theatrical profession. Not only has her interpretation of heavy roles in grand opera developed her dramatic talents, but she has also had special experience through her connection with notable dramatic productions in all parts of the world.

Mlle. Vera Doria.

When but a mere girl of sixteen, Mlle. Doria appeared in Australia, in a production by Charles Hawtrey, who was making a world tour in his sensationally successful "Message from Mars." This was the beginning of a stage career containing many important milestones and in a short time the black-haired Australian girl became the leading woman for Sir Charles.

In England Mlle. Doria appeared in George Alexander's "The Wilderness," which engagement literally "made" her in the British Isles. Subsequent engagements with Sir Charles Wyndam and other noted managements put her on the high road to notable stage success.

The success of the Morosco-Bosworth concern in securing Mlle. Vera Doria was largely due the good offices of General Manager Charles Eyton, who is her brother. She will appear in prominent roles in George Fawcett's first screen production, "The Majesty of the Law," and in Cyril Maude's screen play, "As the Years Go By."

CLEMENT EASTON AND EDGAR JONES JOIN THANHOUSER.

Clement Easton has left the Universal to become a Thanhouser director. His first production for the Mutual program is "His Two Patients" with Harry Benham featured in the role of a specialist.

Edgar Jones has left Lubin for Thanhouser. "Snap Shots," a Mutual two-reel comedy by Phil Lornergan, was produced under his direction.

G. Charles Bryan

G. CHARLES BRYANT is a native of Shaldon, Devonshire, England, but came to this country when fifteen years of age. After being engaged with several banking institutions, Mr. Bryant heard the call of the footlights and entered the legitimate.

Mr. Bryant's experience as an amateur actor was valuable to him and he succeeded in gaining the late Charles Frohman's favor while appearing in "The Arcadians" and "The Girl from Montmarte" under his management, and also was with Klaw & Erlanger for several seasons, in the "Pink Lady."

G. Charles Bryant.

While rehearsing with "The Little Cafe" George Baker offered him a part in "The Girl at the Lunch Counter" with the late John Bunny, after which he decided he would forsake the stage and identify himself with pictures.

After a long engagement with The Vitagraph Co. Mr. Bryant was specially engaged for the part of Frank Richman, supporting Kathryn Ostermann in "Housekeeping Under Cover."

The "Grandin Film Co. then made a bid for Mr. Bryant's services and he appeared in conjunction with Ethel Grandin in many screen successes, principally "Following Her Daddy's Footsteps," "War at Home," "The Spider," and "The Stranger."

Mr. Bryant has just finished a five reeler entitled "The Battle of Ballots," for which he was especially engaged to play Alfred Tuthill which was produced by M. A. Neff, under the direction of Frank Coigne.

Mr. Bryant is at present spending his vacation at his home in Corona, L. I.

REICHENBACH GOES TO EXPOSITION.

Harry L. Reichenbach, general advertising manager and press representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, left New York Wednesday, July 7, for San Francisco to look after the interests of the Metro concern during the Exhibitors' Convention and to handle Metro Day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, which is officially designated by the directors as July the 15th.

The Metro will have a magnificent display on the convention floor, consisting of life-sized paintings and statues of Metro stars, handsome souvenirs for each day at the convention, many novelties and a few surprises.

For Bushman day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Reichenbach has arranged with a prominent Panama Coast aviator to illuminate his machine and spell Bushman's name in phosphorescent letters in the clouds. All in all, Metro will be amply represented at the convention and on Bushman day at the exposition.

ROSEMARY THEBY IN "THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET."

Rosemary Theby, the Universal star, has been selected to co-star in the film production of "The Earl of Pawtucket" in which Lawrence D'Orsay made his greatest stage success. Miss Theby has appeared in such plays as "The Hard Road," "Baby," "Mumps," and "The Prize Story," and has been playing leading roles in the films for more than four years, and considers her work with the Universal her best efforts.

In "The Earl of Pawtucket" she is seen to advantage as the much pursued American girl.

RICHARD MARKWELL WITH MUTUAL.

Richard Markwell's name has been added to the list of players at the Mutual's Hollywood studios. He has appeared in support of many speaking stage notables and is a very good type for motion picture work.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IN PAST YEARS when some problem presented itself and after lengthy discussion those who took part in it found themselves unable to reach a solution it would be said, "I give it up. It will take a Philadelphia lawyer to decide that question." This seems to be the status of the discussion which is under way between manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors as to single and double reel subjects and features consisting of more reels. One of the pioneer exchange men of this city undertook to solve the question recently and, while he spoke many truths, he really only endorsed an already well established fact—that a good one-reel subject is a far better box office winner than a feature of many parts but of little merit. This idea has been responsible for the reports in the trade that features are waning in popularity with the patrons of the theaters, which really is not a fact. If features have suffered in the estimation of the public it is because they were not features. It is because in many cases there has been only enough merit in them to make a good one-reel subject, but to get the money the producers have resorted to ruthless padding.

The same exchange man is of the opinion that age or length of a subject has no bearing upon box office value. This line of thought is not a new one from a business standpoint on the exchange's side. Exhibitors who are not new in the business cannot receive it in the same spirit with which it is given unless qualifications are attached. One of the greatest troubles exchanges and exhibitors had a few years ago was to avoid "repeaters." These columns repeatedly appealed to exhibitors not to put on subjects which their patrons had seen but a short time previously, unless there was a demand for them. Exchanges and exhibitors replied that there was a scarcity of subjects. In some instances exhibitors ran repeaters because they got them at reduced prices. These people were warned that a continuance of the policy would greatly injure, if not ruin, their business. Those who persisted in it found this to be true. At the present time unsolicited repeaters will kill the business of any house. The picture "fans" know that the production of films has become so great that there is no room for the excuse that a scarcity of subjects exists. They read the trade journals and they know as well as those closer connected with the business what subjects are to be released, and when. So that, from this view of the question, age of film has a bearing on the box office. It reduces the revenue. Some exchange men may be misled in forming their opinions on this subject by off-hand expressions by exhibitors to the effect that "I had a one-reeler that beat the feature you gave me last night a full mile, and I will bet that with the same advertising on separate nights the single reel will throw that feature in the shade." This does not mean that the exhibitor believes his favorite would bear repetition. It only emphasizes his condemnation of padded subjects.

When the age of a subject is being considered in its bearing upon the box office, it must be real age, and not recent period. Confer with any of the state rights people and they will show by box office statements that no matter how good their features are and the amount of advertising given them the receipts on a re-booking fall below the first. The cry of motion picture patrons for new subjects is just as strong today as it was when there was a scarcity of productions. It is an established fact that no matter how good a small or feature subject may be the majority of the patrons are satisfied with one presentation. This is the rule, but like all rules there are exceptions to it. Conditions may exist to prevent attendance on the first booking and with those conditions removed the receipts on a re-booking may be far greater than the first. This result is dependent solely on the subject itself. If it has the punch those who missed will get there on the second round.

Many old timers have been heard saying that there are hundreds of winners lying in the vaults of manufacturers, and only one-reelers, too. This is absolutely correct. It refers, however, to subjects the present generation of picture patrons have not seen. Old exhibitors frequently urge manufacturers to reproduce such subjects and cannot understand why they fail to do it. The writer has discussed the matter with manufacturers and has not been able to get a more definite reply than, "Perhaps some day we will do it." The proposition appeals to them, but there appears to be one or more phases of uncertainty attached to it. In speakon the subject quite recently, a manufacturer said: "The pictures are not like wine; they do not improve with age. Time places a severe hand upon negatives as a rule, and this is particularly the case with the negatives of early production. It was impossible to preserve many of them. Besides, you must remember that many of the subjects we have been asked to place upon the market again were crude from the standpoint of scenic, costume and other effects. I doubt that a reproduction of them in original form would be the success many anticipate. This impression has been made by the results of reproductions on the stage. How many of the old timers pine to see revivals of dramatic successes and variety and minstrelsy. But almost every revival of them in the original shape have been failures. Yet drama and vaudeville acts embodying many of the same features go big with the new generation of theater goers. Do you know that many of the situations in the current slap-stick comedies are taken from old time variety and minstrel acts? Few of them are original—very few. With this as a criterion, I believe that eventually some of the old-time motion picture successes will be reproduced, but under modern conditions. And they will be winners, even if the veterans do not recognize them in the new dress. I also believe that some of the resurrected subjects will compare very favorably with some successful features of the present time."

When the writer intimated that the latter part of the manufacturer's statement practically removed the phases of uncertainty in connection with reproduction of old-timers, reply was made that what went so well in the early days cost very little money in comparison with modern productions and with the influx of so many able and well known writers, directors and players into the field of to-day, it is a question whether it would be policy to spend the money upon the excellent material in hand, or go back and experiment with reconstruction. "Sometimes it is better to build a new house than to try to modernize an old one," said the manufacturer. "The cost of building material bears the same relation to the calculations of the architect as salary lists do to the operators of motion picture producers. I see that a manufacturer has taken this stand in replying to a protest made by exhibitors against an increase in prices of films. Naturally such arguments by manufacturers are looked upon with suspicion, especially if advanced by the large companies. It is nevertheless a fact that the salaries paid the players for appearing in successes of the earlier days were but little more than those paid almost obscure players of to-day. The players have advanced in standard with the productions and the respective costs have necessarily kept pace with each other."

The censorship radicals are respectfully requested to note what Rev. Clarence J. Harris says in The World Magazine concerning motion pictures. After over twenty years spent in the ministry he has given it up for scenario writing. One of his subjects is being used in a temperance crusade by the Unitarian Church. He says motion pictures have taken up the hold on the people that the churches have lost by drifting behind the times, and that the asking for the closing of picture houses on Sundays is a confession of weakness on the part of the church. He adds that millions of people who never go to church go to the moving picture theaters and the field where the millions are found is better for his work than to labor among the hundreds that do not need his inspiration."

KLEINE STARTS WORK ON "WOMAN NEXT DOOR."

The Kleine New York studios were the scene of much activity last week when work on Owen Davis' "The Woman Next Door" was begun. Miss Irene Fenwick will be seen in the lead of Jenny Gay, supported by a carefully selected cast, which includes Miss Camille Dalberg, Della Connor, Richie Ling, Lawson Butt, Ben L. Taggart, Albert Andruss and John Nicholson.

"The Woman Next Door" is founded on Owen Davis' stage success of that name. It is an unusually powerful story, capable of much fine character delineation on the part of Miss Fenwick and many situations of great dramatic strength.

EDWIN STEVENS WITH UNIVERSAL.

Edwin Stevens, who starred in "The Devil," the Molnar play which created such a sensation some years ago, has signed with the Big U company and will appear in a feature play in the near future.

Fox Film Men Meet

Large Gathering of Exchange Managers at Hotel Astor, New York.

AFTER a week's session in their first annual convention at the Astor Hotel, the branch managers of the Fox Film Corporation from all over the country returned to their respective offices last Tuesday. The entire week was spent in discussing ways and means for making the Fox service the most effective and profitable for the exhibitor, and the effect of this interchange of ideas will undoubtedly soon make itself felt.

William Fox took up every point raised by the branch managers, and went over the ground very thoroughly. It is to be expected that the managers will return to their respective territories with a renewed vim and vigor.

During the convention the auditing and efficiency experts were in constant attendance and assisted materially. Addresses were made by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, Abraham Carlos, general representative, Louis T. Rogers, manager of the New York Branch, John H. Goldfrap, general publicity manager, and other officials of the company.

Following is the list of the managers of the various branches who attended the convention, and other members of the main offices: William Fox, president; W. R. Sheehan, general manager; A. Carlos, S. Power on Parade

ON TUESDAY, June 29, the Shriners of Kismet Temple, Brooklyn, marched and rode in a novel and highly interesting parade in honor of the initiation of twenty-nine candidates for admission into the order. There were over 2,000 Shriners in the parade, which was led by Colonel Alexander S. Bacon, in his official robes as Potentate, riding on a pure white horse and several floats representing historical American subjects, among which were the "Spirit of '76" and the "Surrender of Lee to Grant." Nicholas Power, a Shriner of high standing, led a long procession of automobiles, and was accompanied in his car by John A. Morrison, Past Potentate, Edward Earl, Arthur J. Lang and Dan A. Robertson, the old show man.

The most amusing part of the parade was the "Zoo," which was composed of the twenty-nine candidates who were to be initiated that night. They were garbed in wild animal costumes, lions, tigers, baboons, etc., and the streets echoed the laughter of the spectators at their funny stunts. Hearst-Selig and other animated weekly camera men photographed the parade for their respective weeklies. Motion pictures are to be seen at all Kismet affairs, Mr. Power having recently presented the Brooklyn Shriners with a Power's 6A, and special motion pictures were made of the parade by Pathe, which were purchased by the Shriners.

Gov. Dunne Vetoes Olson Censor Bill

Regarding the Olson censorship bill passed by the legislature of the state of Illinois, the following telegram from THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent at Springfield, Ill., speaks for itself:

"Springfield, Ill., July 6, 1915.

"Moving Picture World, New York:

"The Olson motion picture censorship bill was vetoed by Governor Dunne this afternoon. The Governor says the act would have created double taxation for Chicago exhibitors and is not needed by the rest of the State. MADISON."

New National Board Chairman

Cranston Brenton Succeeds Frederic C. Howe as Head of the General Committee on Censorship.

CRANSTON BRENTON of New York, War Relief Director of the American Red Cross, has been elected Chairman of the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures. He succeeds Frederic C. Howe, who is now Commissioner of Immigration of the Port of New York, and who resigned some time since. The election was ratified by the General Committee of the National Board at its meeting yesterday.

Mr. Brenton is a man of about forty. He has had some years of business experience as a superintendent of a manufacturing establishment in New York. He graduated from Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., with the highest standing in the Scientific Department in 1899, and subsequently received the degree of Master of Science from that Institution. For ten years he served on the Faculty of Trinity College as Professor of English Language and Literature. Because of his interest in social and civic work, he resigned this position to assume the duties of Executive Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of New York. In October, 1914, he accepted his present position with the American Red Cross. Mr. Brenton is a man of executive ability, of broad interests and experience. He has a sympathetic appreciation of the importance of the motion picture in amusement and in the education of the people. His years of specializing upon literary criticism, drama and dramatic technique, has developed clarity of thought and a grasp of dramatic values. Mr. Brenton has an established position as a public speaker and as a student of social questions.

Cranston Brenton.

The work of the National Board has developed rapidly during the past two years until it holds a commanding place in the thought of the public, the motion picture industry and students of amusement. Under this co-operative arrangement with the producers and distributers of motion pictures it viewed last year nearly 6,000 film subjects, approximately 10,000 reels, and has been in close communication with 400 centers throughout the United States. Mr. Lester F. Scott, the acting director of the People's Institute, has served as chairman of the National Board in the interim between Mr. Howe's resignation and the election of Mr. Brenton.

Zukor Returns From California

President of the Famous Players Arrives in New York with Important Plans for Future Activities.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players Film Company, accompanied by Mrs. Zukor, and his son and daughter, returned to New York on Monday, June 28, from his extended visit to California. While on the coast Mr. Zukor made a complete survey and examination of the various studios, with the view of acquiring a sufficient knowledge of the construction and equipment of western producing plants to assist the Famous Players in the perfection of the studios which they contemplate building in Los Angeles during the coming fall. Within the next few days Mr. Zukor will consult with Edwin S. Porter, treasurer and general manager of the Famous Players, regarding detailed plans for these studios. Mr. Porter will leave for the coast within the next two or three months to lay the foundation for the new Famous Players studios.

In answer to a question regarding the future activities of the Famous Players in the East, Mr. Zukor replied: "The policy we have maintained since the organization of the Famous Players, that of supplying a feature program of consistent standard, but of wide variety and appeal, will be more assiduously maintained than ever. If the present wars terminate before the fall or early winter, we will resume our European plans, abandoned at the outbreak of hostilities abroad, for a series of spectacular subjects to be produced in the various countries of Europe and Asia. If, however, there is no indication of the cessation of the present conflict we will, as previously announced, produce the elaborate subjects we have obtained for this purpose, at the new coast studios now being planned, and which will be designed with this exigency in view.

"In summing up the observations of my trip, I can but say that whoever is apprehensive regarding the future of clean and wholesome motion pictures forms this conclusion from the fears in his own heart rather than from direct contact with the factors in the business that create the commercial conditions and phases of the industry—the exhibitors and public."

Clifton Crawford

ANOTHER famous Broadway favorite has cast his lot with moving pictures. Donald Mackenzie announces that he has signed Clifton Crawford to play the lead in "The Galloper," the Great Broadway success of Richard Harding Davis, which is now being produced for Pathe at their Jersey City studios. Melville Stewart, who is now playing in the "Follies of 1915," will support Mr. Crawford. The rest of the cast is also decidedly strong.

Clifton Crawford.

Mr. Crawford held off for a long time before consenting to sign up for the silent drama and it was the tempting contract offered by Mr. Mackenzie which caused him to decide to enter the field.

Born of actor parents in Edinburgh, Scotland, Mr. Crawford took up the stage at an early age and after appearing in small parts for some time became a great favorite in the English music halls. Later he came to America and played in vaudeville, where he always appeared as a head-liner. Later he appeared in such noteworthy successes as "The Peasant Girl," "The Quaker Girl," and "The Three Twins." After starring for three seasons in the last mentioned production he made a tour of the world, and thereby earned the soubriquet of "the man who put a belt of smiles around the world."

Mr. Mackenzie's production will be released in the early fall, and will be of five reels.

ADLER-KATZ.

Cupid seems to be making the Universal offices his headquarters of late. Four Universalites have been married in as many months, the last being the marriage of Bert Adler and Miss Kitty Katz, of the Universal clerical staff. The marriage ceremony was performed at the home of the bride in New York City on Monday, July 5, and was a typical Twentieth Century marriage.

Adler, who is temporarily stationed in Chicago, where he is handling the production of Anna Pavlowa, left that city last Sunday on the Twentieth Century and arrived in New York at 9:45 A. M. Monday. The marriage took place at 1 P. M. and the bride and groom left on the Twentieth Century at 2:45, or one hour and forty-five minutes later. They will remain in Chicago until the Pavlowa production is finished and then will return to New York and take up their residence in Fort Lee, N. J.

The wedding was a quiet affair. Those being present, besides the relatives of the contracting parties, were Joe Brandt, who acted as best man; Mrs. Joe Brandt, who was matron-of-honor, and Miss Blanche Wallick, bridesmaid.

Play and Photoplay

Rowland of the Metro Has a Plan to Run Them Simultaneously—Believes It a New Idea.

WHAT Richard A. Rowland believes to be a new idea in the amusement line is a plan put forward by him through the Metro Pictures Corporation to produce a dramatic play and a photoplay from the same script and by the same cast of players and both productions to be presented to the public simultaneously in nearby houses.

The production to be so treated will be B. A. Rolfe's play, "When a Woman Loves," in which Emmy Whelan is preparing to appear. The feature film version will be held by Metro until a seasonable period and then the stage version will be arranged. In two theaters, yet to be announced, the film and the spoken version will be rendered nightly. Auditors could visit the film performance one night and the spoken drama the night following. An excellent opportunity to compare the possibilities of the two styles would thus be afforded. There has long been arguments as to the respective effectiveness of the two styles of presentation. The stage production with its limits of scenic effects, restricted lines of action and necessity for useless dialogue and absolute falsity of environment, compared with the camera production, with its limitless possibilities, faithfulness to scenic effects, magnificent power of width and depths, and the thousand other details that have provoked comment, pro and con, would be substantially answered once and for all time.

Mr. Rowland promises definite details as to the theaters and cast and date within a few weeks.

Cleo Ridgley Engaged by Lasky

MISS CLEO RIDGLEY, who for several months has been prominent in leading parts in different productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, has signed a contract by which she becomes a permanent member of the playing organization. She will continue at the Hollywood, California studios, where some interesting work is being laid out for her in the near future.

Besides an unusual attractiveness of features, a versatility of talent and a cleverness of manner, Miss Ridgley brings with her to the Lasky forces a large following among motion picture playgoers throughout the country. She has termed herself the "transcontinental girl" because of her exploit several years ago when she turned equestrienne and rode a pony from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The term might also apply to her fame in photodrama.

Cleo Ridgley.

Miss Ridgley has all the virtues that accrue from being born and raised in New York City. For a time in her childhood, it is true, she lived in Wisconsin, but she returned East. As a small child she once saw her cousin, Victor Moore, the comedian, win the plaudits of an audience, and Miss Ridgley decided to become an actress.

Her first appearance in a Lasky play was in support of Blanche Sweet in "Stolen Goods." She recently has completed characterizations as the Duchess in "The Puppet Crown" with Miss Ina Claire and Carlyle Blackwell; as Rose Fanchon in "The Fighting Hope," with Laura Hope Crews and an all-star Lasky-Belasco cast; as the English actress in "The Marriage of Kitty," in which Miss Fannie Ward makes her debut as a picture star and in one of the leading roles in "The Secret Orchard" with Blanche Sweet.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG TAKING SUMMER HOTEL SCENES.

Clara Kimball Young, she of the lustrous eyes, heads a party of actors and actresses to Gedney Farm, near White Plains, N. Y. There they intend to take the summer hotel scenes which figure so largely in the photoplay, "Marrying Money," which Mr. James Young is putting on elaborately for the World Film Corporation. Among those going are Mr. Chester Barnett, Mr. Winthrop Chamberlin, and Mr. William Jefferson.

Rialto Music Director

Hugo Riesenfeld, Former Director at the Manhattan Opera House, Will Be in Charge.

FOLLOWING closely on the announcement that he had engaged the well known composer, Alfred G. Robyn, as organist of the Rialto Theatre at 42nd Street and Broadway comes the statement from Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel that he has placed under contract as director of his orchestra Hugo Riesenfeld, formerly concert master and one of the directors of Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera Company.

Mr. Rosenfeld, who was born in Vienna, and who was a student at the Royal Conservatory of Music there, is equally well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a violin soloist and conductor. He first attracted the attention of Gustav Mahler, of the Philharmonic asd Metropolitan Societies, who, when he heard him play abroad engaged him as first violinist for the Imperial Opera House in Vienna. While there Mr. Riesenfeld composed a ballet and two dance pieces constructed on the music of Chopin, and thereafter became conductor of ballet music in the Imperial Opera House. Heinrich Conrad brought him to this country as concert master of the Metropolitan, but released him to Oscar Hammerstein, with whom he remained for three years in a similar capacity, also conducting the rehearsals of such noted works as Lohengrin, Tannhauser, Elektra and Salome.

Mr. Riesenfeld, while under the management of Klaw & Erlanger, composed the music for "The Merry Martyr" and also conducted some of that firm's other musical productions. He was thereafter engaged to reorganize the orchestra for the Century Opera Company and was one of that organization's conductors.

Mr. Riesenfeld will have under his direction the largest orchestra ever installed in a moving picture house, and his musicians will be chosen for their particular capability in their various lines and from symphony orchestras all over the country. Mr. Rothapfel has given him a free hand to make the Rialto Orchestra the most notable organization of its kind in the country.

Louis Fitzroy of MinA Films

LOUIS FITZROY, one of the principal members of the MinA Films Company directed by Milton H. Fahrney, this week celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his stage debut. His career, as that of his earlier life, has been crowded with adventure.

Fitzroy, the son of an army officer, was born at Fort Brady, Mich., in 1865. He moved with his father's regiment (First United States Infantry) to Dakota, where he remained until after the Custer massacre. He was in the fight which resulted in the killing of the "Apache Kid," a half breed renegade, and the routing of the renegades under him. He was too young to receive a commission in the army, but went with the regiment as second lieutenant.

Louis Fitzroy.

Later he attended Ohio State University. He left that institution to join a summer stock company under Frank G. Campbell, of Winnipeg. That was in 1886. Since that time he has been with companies under new managers, the most prominent of whom are Klaw & Erlanger, C. B. Dillingham, Charles Frohman, Henry French, B. D. Stevens and Joe Brooks. He was with William H. Crane, Lillian Russell, Jerry Sykes and Francis Wilson, besides less prominent members and organizations too numerous to mention.

His first appearance on the screen was in a series of prohibition pictures. He went to California two years ago and joined David Horsley's Nestor Film Company and was with that company when the Universal was formed. Since that time he has been with Selig and Lubin companies and three months ago became a member of the MinA Films Company.

Julia Swayne Gordon

JULIA SWAYNE GORDON, one of the Vitagraph Company's best known leading women, is a graduate from the stock company school of the legitimate, where experience is gained through hard work and advancement only because of merit. Miss Gordon comes from Ohio, having been born near the capital city of Columbus, on October 29, 1881, and was educated in Columbus. Her first stage experience was gained in the William H. Harkins Stock Company, an organization that successfully toured the Canadian Provinces. Two seasons under Mr. Harkins' management and Miss Gordon developed into a full-fledged actress. Stock appealed to her and succeeding seasons found her identified with companies in various parts of the country, through the South, East and West respectively. Later she toured the entire South at the head of her own company and has taken one or two successful fliers in vaudeville.

Julia Swayne Gordon.

Miss Gordon first posed for moving pictures at a time when professionals thought it beneath their dignity to be seen on the screen. As a matter of fact she was literally forced into the work by a theatrical agency that had a contract to furnish people to several motion picture producing companies. Her first assignment to the Vitagraph was beset with misfortune, as she was given the wrong direction and instead of arriving at the studio at 9 A. M., the appointed time, did not reach her destination until two hours later. Here, she met the late William V. Ranous, one of the deans of motion picture art, and a friend of long standing. It was through his persuasiveness Miss Gordon was induced to become a regular, joining the now famous Vitagraph Stock Company. She was immediately cast to play leads and registered a personal triumph in her first picture. Her best work has been in such screen stories as "The Painted World," "413," "The Sins of the Mothers," "The Juggernaut," "Lifting the Ban of Coventry," "The Esterbrooke Case," "Hearts Ablaze," etc.

In her home life Miss Gordon is a plain, every-day woman, an ardent horsewoman and an omnivorous reader of serious works with Ibsen as her favorite.

LUBIN COMPANY BANISHES "SCENARIO."

In recognition of the development of the motion picture manuscript from a brief and sketchy suggestion into an elaborate and carefully constructed dramatic composition which, as far as the work of the Lubin staff writers is concerned, is far more comprehensive and specific than the usual speaking-stage manuscript, the Lubin Company has formally banished the derogatory term "scenario," the proper definition of which is merely "a brief dramatic outline," and established in its stead the expressive and now generally accepted word "photoplay."

Henceforth Lawrence S. McCloskey is "Editor of Photoplays" and the members of his department are "photoplaywrights" by designation as well as in fact. It was felt not only that "scenario" was a misnomer, but that its application to work of such dramatic and technical excellence as is being done by Emmet Campbell Hall, Clay M. Greene, George W. Terwilliger, Shannon Fife and Harry W. Chandlee was an injustice.

POWELL PRODUCING "THE SORCERESS."

Frank Powell, director of "A Fool There Was," "Children of the Ghetto," "The Devil's Daughter" and many other feature films of note, is producing "The Sorceress," by Victor Sardou, the author of "Princess Romanoff," which Mr. Powell also produced. Miss Nance O'Neil will be the star of this picture

"THE ETERNAL CITY" EXHIBITED IN PORTER'S HOME TOWN.

"The Eternal City," the Famous Players Film Company's great photo-spectacle of Hall Caine's novel and play, which is considered one of the few most notable photo plays ever presented in the entire annals of the screen, was last week shown in Connellsville, Pa., the home town of its chief producer, Edwin S. Porter. Connellsville, which has always been proud of its native motion picture producer, turned out en masse to see his greatest production to date. It has been calculated by the management of the Colonial theater, where the photo-spectacle was exhibited, that citizens of the town returned two or three times to get another view of their boyhood friend's stupendous screen accomplishment. A slide thrown on the screen of the theater, containing a direct message from Mr. Porter to his old friends, created several enthusiastic demonstrations in the theater. The message on the slide read as follows:

"To the people of Connellsville, Pa.
I hope all my old friends in Connellsville will be as pleased with 'The Eternal City,' as I was to learn that it is being played in my home town."

When Mr. Porter heard that this subject was to be exhibited in Connellsville, he said he was prouder to have it shown in that town than he was at its metropolitan presentation.

"THE WRITING ON THE WALL" (Vitagraph).

In producing the picturization of William J. Hurlburt's play, "The Writing on the Wall," with which Miss Olga Nethersole was identified for two seasons, Vitagraph Director Tefft Johnson required the front of a block of tenement houses, with a particular type of fire escape, for use in one of the scenes. A search throughout the entire East Side of New York City and through the tenement district of Brooklyn, failed to reveal even a single tenement that would answer the purpose, as recent fire laws and the activity of the building inspectors were responsible for the complete elimination of the type of escape that would conform to the requirements of Hurlburt's story. To overcome this obstacle and complete the realism of the pictured narrative, Director Johnson was compelled to have built in the open air studios at Flatbush the outer shell of a front of houses, every detail of which being produced from still pictures of the Bowery, photographed about fifteen years ago. One scene only of the house fronts, which served as the background for tense action, was taken when they were set on fire and one of the most thrilling episodes of the five thousand feet that will comprise the finished picture, was filmed.

EXHIBITORS PLAN PRODUCING COMPANY.

There is to be a meeting in Chicago, Ill., on July 15, to which a limited number of exhibitors have been invited, one from each section of the country. It is expected that altogether about 15 exhibitors will be present. The object of the meeting is to organize an association or company to operate an exhibitors' manufacturing plant. The scheme is to have each exhibitor put up $10,000 each and to send representatives through the country to get a sufficient number of other representative exhibitors, making fifty in all, so that the total capital to start with would be $500,000, on the basis of each exhibitor putting up $10,000. Each exhibitor would automatically become the exchange man in his section, and the money raised would be used to buy productions as well as manufacturing. "It is purely an exhibitors' proposition," said John H. Kunsky, to the Moving Picture World representative at Detroit.

Included among those who will participate in the July 15 meeting are John H. Kunsky and George Trendle, Detroit; Mitch Mark, Buffalo; Warren Sievers, St. Louis; E. Mandelbaum of Cleveland, and Mr. Gordon of Boston.

LULU GLASER WITH UNIVERSAL.

Another of the "holdouts" against the lure of the camera capitulated last week, when Lulu Glaser, the famous stage favorite, signed a contract to appear in a Universal Broadway Feature. George E. Kann, secretary of the Universal, who has been conducting the affairs of the new feature department, had been angling for the services of Miss Glaser for some time, but the prohibitive price self-placed upon her services put her out of reach.

It was the fact that she would be in the company of such distinguished members of the stage profession, stars of both sexes who have enrolled under the sign of the Big U, that finally persuaded her to come down to earth and get in the parade of merit.

To find a book or play for adaptation, which will dove-tail into Miss Glaser's peculiar histrionic qualifications is now the task of Mr. Kann, who is carefully going through a mountain of preferred material.

Letters From "Bugs to Gus"

RING LARDNER, the Chicago sporting editor, recently became famous by the Saturday Evening Post route. He wrote a series of articles, describing the baseball and other adventures of a mythical young fellow who made Gus his confidant. Bugs and Gus are the excuse for the making of the series of pictures to be released by the World Film Corporation, in which all the great people of American baseball are seen, their very own selves. Roger Bresnahan, Hans Wagner, Schulte, Garry Hermann and others.

Ring Lardner.

There is a love interest. Bugs makes up to a pretty girl, but she prefers a husky ball player. When Bugs, who has a wealthy parent, tries to play ball, the effects are comic in the extreme. He gets drunk at a dinner at which the baseball magnates are present. He has a dog whose antipathy to umpires is ferocious.

There are real baseball scenes, with real players plus the comedy element, and the quaintness of Ring Lardner's stories is absolutely rendered on the screen. The World Film anticipates that these intensely funny comedy films will go big anywhere and everywhere.

NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

State Exhibitors League Holds Convention at Fayetteville.

Fayetteville, June 30.—The North Carolina Moving Picture Exhibitors' League held its annual convention here to-day with a good attendance. The following officers were elected: P. W. Wells, Wilmington, president; L. B. Davis, Raleigh, first vice-president; M. W. Jordan, Laurinburg, second vice-president; S. A. Lambert, Fayetteville, treasurer; W. S. Wishart, Lumberton, first national vice-president; H. T. Drake, Fayetteville, second national vice-president.

It was learned to-day that the league will censor moving pictures after the National Board of Censorship has passed them. On August 16, the league will spend the week-end at Wrightsville Beach. Delegates will be sent to the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors in San Francisco, July 12 to 27, though these delegates were not appointed at to-day's meeting.

SAM SPEDON EN TOUR.

Sam M. Spedon, the genial publicity promoter of the Vitagraph Company, left Tuesday, July 6, for an extended vacational trip. He will include in his itinerary, stopovers in Chicago, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, where he will spend two weeks, representing the Vitagraph Company at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Convention, and in introducing members of the Western Vitagraph Company, with studios at Santa Monica, California, to exhibitors of the East, in attendance at the convention. On the way back, he will visit the largest cities of the country and make himself acquainted with the local managers of V-L-S-E branch offices. A leisurely trip, which will occupy about six weeks, will afford Mr. Spedon a breathing spell, which he calls his vacation, the first since his joining the Vitagraph Company as head of the Publicity Department, six years ago.

WHERE IS TOM STODDARD?

Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, manager of the Monroe Theater, at 2216 Chippewa street, St. Louis, desires information of her son, Thos. W. Stoddard, who left home more than a year ago. The boy is 18 years old, six feet tall, slender and was smooth-faced when he went away. He is musically inclined, and his mother thinks he will be employed in the orchestra of a theater, as he is a good trap drummer. Any information as to this young man will be most thankfully received.

JACK HARVEY JOINS UNIVERSAL.

John Harvey's acquisition as director by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to direct William Garwood and Violet Mersereau at the old Champion plant at Coytesville, is one of the master strokes of the year. Julius Stern is credited with the scoop, and the former Thanhouser Peerless One finds himself at home in the Jersey town, because the old Champion studio was his second home in the picture game, Edison claiming his initial service.

With Mr. Harvey goes John William Kellette, a script writer with an international reputation, as assistant director, to be the buffer between his chief and the watchful waiting line of extras looking for work in Harvey's pictures.

Monday (June 28), morning Mr. Harvey started to cast the three reel feature, "The Wolf of Debt," from the pen of Hugh C. Weir, adapted for the screen by M. B. Havey, and as the story lacked the "punch" Mr. Harvey deemed necessary for his first picture, which will carry considerable night photography, an actual storm with lightning accompaniments at night, and a vivid dramatic tale, it was deemed wise to reconstruct the script, and last week Mr. Harvey and Mr. Kellette devoted their whole time to it.

William Garwood is "Bruce Marsden;" Violet Mersereau, "Helen Stanhope;" Mrs. James Cogan, "Mrs. Roger Stanhope;" Brinsley Shaw, "Anthony Stuart," the heavy, and about 200 others will be used for small parts and extras in the production.

As Mr. Harvey was the first director to make a complete success of night photography, as evidenced in the four reel Thanhouser feature, "The Patriot and the Spy," much is expected in this line for the Universal program in the future.

GENE GAUNTIER HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Half an inch nearer the temple, and the blow that rendered Gene Gauntier unconscious for eight hours, would have proven fatal. As it is, Miss Gauntier is now rapidly recovering from the accident at her Hollywood bungalow, and thanking her lucky stars that a blackened eye, terribly bruised head and painful abrasions of the neck and face are all that she suffered.

It all happened because Jack Clark respected a Ford, driven wildly by a woman down a mountain pass, and instead of jumping over it turned into a fence over a culvert. The shock of the impact threw Miss Gauntier, who was alone in the tonneau, forward against the rail, dealing knock-out blows on the chin, behind the ear and over the eye, just missing the temple. Mr. Clark was uninjured—that is physically. The other car did not stop, and, with a stove-in radiator, a broken wheel, and an unconscious wife on his hands, and no telephone within many miles, he had to wait in the dark mountain pass for aid to happen by. He declares that is the last time he will try to dodge a Ford.

"THE JUGGERNAUT" BREAKS RECORD.

From the general offices of "The Big Four" comes information of a feature production playing for three consecutive days in a town with a population of only 3,221 people.

This feat, remarkable in the history of feature films was successfully carried out by the Regent Theater in Billings, Montana. This theater played the V-L-S-E subject. "The Juggernaut," on what the management says in that territory is the hardest combination of the week—Friday, Saturday and Sunday. In a letter to the V-L-S-E, they express themselves as so well pleased with the result of the experiment that they intend to continue this unheard of policy for a town of that size.

By comparison, this three day run must stand as a greater achievement than the fourteen day runs in the larger cities, and as such, may be considered a record for feature exhibitions.

"HAZEL KIRK" TO BE FILMED FOR PATHE.

The Whartons, Pathe producers, announce that they have secured the picture rights to "Hazel Kirk," the play made famous by Effie Ellsler and Chas. W. Couldock, and which has been running continuously on the stage for twenty-five years. Edwin Arden, William Riley Hatch and Creighton Hale will appear in the Wharton picturization.

JUDGE DENIES LASKY CLAIM.

The application of the Lasky Feature Play Corporation for an injunction to restrain the Fox Film Company and Valeska Suratt from advertising or exhibiting a motion picture in which Miss Suratt was featured was denied by Justice Goff in the Supreme Court after an extended hearing last Wednesday, June 30.

British Notes

THE THIRD annual meeting of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association held this week at Edinburgh has furnished a few interesting reflections upon the progress of the moving picture industry within these shores since the declaration of war. Firstly with regard to the Association itself, the outbreak of hostilities on the Continent undoubtedly materially consolidated the Exhibitors' Association as a body. When war was declared it was the first organization in the film industry in Britain to make special provision for the extraordinary emergencies that might arise, and there being no rival faction its prompt action in counselling with the Manufacturers and Renters Associations were fairly representative of the entire exhibiting profession. One outcome of this early counsel of war was the drafting of an arrangement between the three parties whereby the hiring prices of all films would be reduced 25 per cent., but this generous concession has not been taken advantage of yet and the present condition of business shows no indication of it ever being required. Sir Robt. Cranston was the guest at the Conference and drew special attention to the very practical way the industry had assisted the Government in the present crisis. Immediately war was declared the Association issued to its members upwards of 10,000 slides appealing for recruits. Other efforts upon similar lines had resulted so far in over $50,000 being contributed to the coffers of the various relief funds In a few cases theaters were commandeered for Government purposes. British exhibitors had done more, said Sir Robert, than all the speeches and posters.

One of the most serious difficulties which the war produced concerned the supply of carbons. On account of its cheapness the German carbon was almost in universal use. At the outbreak of war only one firm in England were manufacturing carbons and its entire stock, machinery and plant were taken over by the War Office. Consequently prices soared and were soon 250 per cent. above the normal figure. The Exhibitors' Association made arrangements with the Electrical Engineering Equipment Company to supply carbons imported from neutral countries in bulk and thus stopped in time what might have developed into a corner. An unfortunate circumstance in connection with this is the persistence of certain individuals who are importing German carbons via America and selling them as genuine U. S. A. products. It is certain that the authorities are aware of this smuggling and are only awaiting an opportunity to deal with its promoters. Notable amongst the Parliamentary proposals defeated during the twelvemonth by the Association was one to increase exhibitors' licenses from a guinea a year to a guinea a month and, another to enforce in all theaters the use of non-flam films. Another disturbing element to the Association is the attitude of an organization termed the Performing Right Society. Shortly after formation the Association made a standing arrangement with the Société des Anteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique (the only society in England at the time charging fees for the performance of its clients' musical compositions) for the performance of works under its control upon reasonable terms. But now this Société has been absorbed in a new body, the Performing Right Society which is holding out for much higher fees. At the time of writing, no contract has been made between it and the Exhibitors' Association but negotiations for a compromise are in progress.

The experiences of the British Exhibitors' Association with Censorship do not appear to have been particularly pleasant despite the fact that the "British Board of Film Censors" was brought into being with the hearty endorsement of its own Committee. Here are the Secretary's own words upon the vexed question: " . . . the Censorship adopted at the outset . . . has become in a measure dangerous to the exhibitor. Although a joint committee of manufacturers and exhibitors exists, it possesses no power, rarely meets, and the representation of the Exhibitors' Association upon it is farcical. In short, the Censorship is a close corporation, controlled entirely by manufacturers. Such recognition as it has obtained from the authorities has been given in ignorance of the real position. The policy which the British Board of Film Censors has recently manifested is going to cause trouble for the exhibitors. It has been adopted without the exhibitor being in any way consulted, and is designed to coerce him. Local authorities have been invited to include in those highly objectionable regulations which are constantly being imposed upon exhibitors, one, to the effect that only films passed by the Censors may be shown. In some instances local authorities discriminate between the two classes of certificates, viz., that for 'public' exhibition and that for 'universal' exhibition, and prohibit the former. The Committee of the Exhibitors' Association in view of this state of affairs asked the British Board of Film Censors to make a radical change in its control, but was referred to the Manufacturers Association which up to the present time has ignored the request. Exhibitors will be asked to consider the situation further. There can be no such voluntary Censorship which it is attempting to maintain in opposition to the wishes of the exhibitor, and the latter would prefer a Government Censorship rather than one run by manufacturers in conjunction with local authorities."

As president of the Exhibitors' Association, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., journalist and publicist, has been elected, while amongst the first vice-presidents figure the names of Mr. E. H. Montagu (Selig), Mr. G. H. Smith (Vitagraph), Mr. H. A. Spoor (Essanay), and Mr. A. F. Wagner (Edison).

The shortage of agricultural labor has aroused the Board of Agriculture to a sense of duty and moving picture enterprise at one and the same time. The gradual drain imposed by the war upon the young manhood of the country has particularly depleted the ranks of the agricultural laborer and to such a degree that the state has felt itself impelled to invite amateur haymakers to cope with the coming harvest. The response has been magnificent. All classes, city men in silk hats and frock coats to newsvenders of the streets volunteered for agricultural service. And now they are to be taught the rudiments of the science of haymaking, not to the old adage while the sun shines but by the light of enlightening lanterns.

Olcott's Irish Pictures

A Series of Delightful Subjects Made for the Lubin Company.

A DISTINCT novelty in the way of photoplays and one which no doubt will attract wide interest, will be the first of a series of made-in-Ireland comedy dramas, featuring Miss Valentine Grant, which will be released by the Lubin Company July 14. These plays were especially made for the Lubin Company by Sidney Olcott, the greatest of all producers of Irish stories, and were filmed along the rugged cliffs and broken shores of South Kerry and amid the wondrous and picturesque scenery of the Gap of Dunloe and the Lakes of Killarney, so famed in song and story.

Miss Valentine Grant.

The first of the series is "All for Old Ireland," and is a three-reeler. In two of the plays Mr. Olcott himself plays opposite Miss Grant in characters that have made him famous in the past as a delineator of the rollicking, light - hearted and romantic "gosoon." Miss Grant is charming in her roles. Her pretty and sincere conceptions of the ready-witted "colleen" are delightful, and have brought the little newcomer unbounded compliments from all who have seen the private showing of these films, both here and abroad.

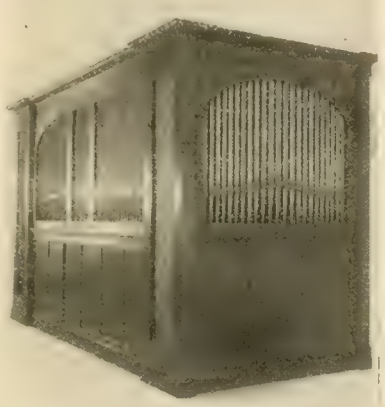
The supporting company includes Laurene Santley, Pat O'Malley, Robert Rivers, Charles McConnel, Arthur Leigh, all of whom were taken abroad, and a number of Irish players, among whom are "Sonny" and Eddie O'Sullivan and Norah Hines.

"All for Old Ireland" is a story of the days of '98 when all Ireland was preparing to resist the iron grasp that was about to close around it. It is replete with charm and dramatic interest. Throughout the play runs a rich vein of humor, and the action is interspersed with quaint customs of the times.

The American Master Organ.

An Instrument by which Piano, Organ and Orchestra Effect Are Produced from the Piano Keyboard.

A REMARKABLE musical instrument is being demonstrated at 1446 Broadway, New York City. In non-technical language, it is a piano that also plays organ pipes by means of concealed electrical wires connected with the key board. In the way it is played, it is a piano, but the pianist with his fingers on the ivories can, at will, at the same time, make all sorts of sweet instruments to sound or silence them when he pleases by the rows of stops, bits of ivory that his finger nail can flick open or close again as his hands pass over the key board. It is his playing on the board that makes both the piano chords to vibrate and the wind instruments or the orchestra to play, so that it seems as though the pianist was being followed by a second player. A World man had a very pleasant hour listening to the American Master Organ and came away frankly enthusiastic as to its scope, sweetness and adaptibility to the needs of the picture show houses.



Master Organ Wind Chest.

Many original things are embodied in the American Master Organ. The company manufacturing the instrument comprises some of the best known theater organists in the country, and expert organ builders who have constructed many British cathedral organs, and subsequently some of the largest theater organs in the United States.

Among the organists who figure prominently in the company are Frank R. White, its president, whose experience began with one entire season at the Century theater, where he supplied the music for the Liebler spectacles, "The Daughter of Heaven" and "Joseph and His Brethren." His subsequent engagements included the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh; the Paris theater, Denver; and seven months at the Vitagraph theater, New York. Augustus C. Ely, Secretary and General Manager of the company, was for two seasons organist of the Cort theater, New York City. Gottfried H. Federlein, organist of the Ethical Culture Society and of Temple Emmanuel, Dr. Gustave Widor-Ronfort and other musicians of prominence are included in the list of organizers of the company, and it is claimed that their practical experience has resulted in producing in the American Master Organ an instrument designed to meet adequately the needs of the modern theater.

Console American Master Organ.

The instrument places the resources of a powerful pipe organ, refined orchestral effects and a Kranich & Bach grand piano at the command of the performer, with an expressive control so complete that all suggetion of the mechanical is eliminated. The remarkable effectiveness of the percussion instruments, such as drums, cymbals, etc., is due to the fact that no expense has been considered in evolving an expressive action, and that the instruments themselves are of the grade and quality used in the large symphony orchestras.

The American Master Organs introduce the first Kranich & Bach new scale grand piano. The massive dignity and beauty of its tone blends superbly with that of the organ and of the orchestral instruments.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater.

"THE SCAR," by Donald I. Buchanan, is the Broadway Star Feature of the Vitagraph Theater this week. The picture is in three parts, its theme being a powerful preachment against the drug habit. The action is arranged in such sequence that titles are unnecessary to the unfolding of the story. "The Star" was produced by William Humphrey, and the cast includes Harry Morey, Estelle Mardo, Gladden James, Mary Maurice and Denton Vane. Chapter Ten of "The Goddess," in two parts, reveals the most exciting episode so far shown in the action of Gouverneur Morris's story, a thrilling battle between the striking miners and the strike breakers. Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea and Hughie Mack are seen in a two-part feature comedy, "A Pair of Queens;" Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Following the Scent," a typical Drew comedy, in which jealousy and a woman's ingenuity make a puppet of an ordinarily sane man; and Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley in Number Fifteen of Roy L. McCardell's Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr's Big Vacation."

Charlotte Walker at the Strand.

Charlotte Walker made her photo-dramatic debut at the Strand Theater this week in "Kindling," which is presented by the Jessie L. Lasky Feature Play Company. "Kindling" tells the story of a poor woman of the tenements, who is married to a man with socialistic theories. He is in every way a good husband, but believes it is wrong for poor people to have children and bring them up in poverty. The play is a powerful one, and Miss Walker gives a fine impersonation of the star role. The company supporting Miss Walker includes Thomas Meighan, Raymond Hatton, Mrs. McCord, Billy Elmer, Lillian Langdon, Florence Dagmar and Tom Forman. Aylesworth's Big Game Pictures, cartoons by Bert Levy, the Strand Topical Review, and the usual excellent musical program are also given.

Blanche Sweet at the Broadway.

The Jessie L. Lasky Feature Play Company's production of "The Clue," with Blanche Sweet as the star, heads the bill at the Broadway Theater. This photodrama was written expressly for Miss Sweet by Margaret Turnbull, and contains a tense story of modern life. Gertrude Keller, Edward Mackey, Page Peters, Ernest Joy, Billy Elmer and Sessue Hayakawe, are in the cast. Charles Chaplin in his latest two-reel comedy, "The Woman," the Paramount South American Travel pictures, the Broadway Animated News, and a number of the newest one-reel pictures fill out the program.

MAKING BIG RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN.

The Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company, at their factories in East Orange, N. J., are busily engaged in preparing for early delivery one of the largest projection screens which has ever been constructed. The screen will be eighteen feet high and twenty-four feet wide and has been ordered for T. L. Tally's well known Broadway theater in Los Angeles.

Redlick & Neuman are representing the Radium Gold Fibre people on the Pacific Coast and have already placed quite a number of screens, the large majority of their orders following a first installation in Los Angeles which proved very successful.

J. L. Kempner, who is directing the general sales campaign from the company's home offices in the Candler Bldg., New York City, has been in Chicago for some time giving his personal attention to a number of important contracts which are being closed up through the Central Film Co.

KRITERION RECEIVER'S SALE.

Samuel Strasbourger, receiver for the bankrupt Kriterion Film Corporation, announces that he will receive sealed bids for the several properties of the company consisting of furniture, negative films, positive films, test proofs, both released and unreleased, also office fixtures, safes, etc., located at the premises of the company, 1600 Broadway, New York, or at the vaults of the Gaumont Company, Flushing, L. I. The date set for the receipts of bids is July 9, at 2 o'clock P. M. Inspection of the property to be sold may be made at 1600 Broadway between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M. daily and at the Gaumont Studios, Flushing, between 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. daily. The address of the receiver is 72 Broadway, New York, where bids must be addressed.

V-L-S-E Classification Approved

Big Four Plan of Grading Features and Rental Prices Gives Satisfaction.

SINCE the recent joint announcement by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, and A. E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, to the effect that the "Big Four" subject, "Hearts and the Highway," was placed as a class B subject by comparison with "The Juggernaut," and "The Island of Regeneration," and would not be offered to exhibitors at rental charges in excess of $50, untold comment and discussion has arisen in feature film and exhibiting circles.

At the time of making this announcement, it was distinctly stated that the rental set on the subject in question was not to be construed as a cut in prices, but had been set because exhibitors, owing to the great success of the two preceding blue ribbon features, would be inclined to pay an equal amount for this subject, and the Vitagraph Company did not wish their salesmen to use two regular releases as the basis of charge for this added subject.

Hundreds of letters, however, from exhibitors have been received at the general office and by the V-L-S-E branch managers, and the thoughts expressed in all of these letters are identical. With the exceptions of minor differences in phraseology they might all have been run off on a multigraphing machine.

One of them from a prominent exhibitor in the South will serve as an illustration of the consensus of exhibitors' opinion on the V-L-S-E policy. This exhibitor writing to W. C. Brandon, manager of the Atlanta branch, says:

> We want to congratulate you and the V-L-S-E in the matter of grading their features. We refer especially to the method of handling the Vitagraph release, "Hearts and the Highway."
> Some feature exchanges would not have hesitated in juggling this in with their regular feature program and insisted upon the same amount of rental therefor.
> The fact of the matter is "Hearts and the Highway" is much better than many feature producers could possibly turn out, and it would have been heralded with much praise on some programs.

The tenor of this letter is identical with thousands now in the files at the executive offices of the V-L-S-E and Mr. Irwin, speaking on the subject, said: "The company is gratified that its efforts to work in close harmony with the exhibitor are so well understood and appreciated."

"Lincoln Cycle" Creates Interest

Innovation Presented by the Charter Features Corporation and Benjamin Chapin Opens New Fields for Exhibitors.

ANNOUNCEMENT in last week's Motion Picture World of the comprehensive motion picture, "The Cycle of Lincoln Plays" to be released by the Charter Features Corporation, has brought forth a surprising response from all over the country and a great number of inquiries from exhibitors for further details.

The Advertising Department of the Charter Features Corporation makes this statement: "We have in preparation a book that outlines in detail many of the activities planned for exhibitors who carry Charter Features' 'Cycle.' It embodies the various sidelights to the general scheme and presents the extensive forces that are at work to back up the pictures wherever shown.

"Plans for educational, religious and political alliances are covered in this book and an outline is made of the new type of advertising that is to be done for the Lincoln Cycle.

"Having planned to spend a goodly amount of money in acquainting the entire exhibitor public with all of the facts through the trade press, it is intended that all moneys spent in reaching the general public shall be done on behalf of and in the name of the exhibitors showing the pictures. In other words, instead of nationally addressing motion picture goers, each theater will be made a pivotal point of all promotion activities so that none of the results shall be lost for the theater."

SOLAR SCREEN IN SOUTH AMERICA.

After trying for several years to induce the South American exhibitor to install daylight screens, it fell to the lot of the Simpson Solar Screen Company to fill the first orders for that country. This week four Solar screens will be shipped to Brazil and Venezuela.

Alice Brady in Role of "Circe"

Interprets the Part of the Goddess of Sensuality in Remarkable Knickerbocker Production.

THE beautiful, winsome Alice Brady, a favorite Broadway star and one who has proven by the quality of her work that she is worthy of the enviable name she has won, appears in the next release of Knickerbocker Star Features, a three-part drama, "The Cup of Chance," written expressly for her by the Rev. Clarence J. Harris—a story which represents an entirely new line of work by this author.

Miss Brady has added new lustre to an already brilliant career as she interprets with such remarkable skill the life of a girl who has never had a chance in life. Her role as Hope is one of great difficulty which involves an interplay of all kinds of emotion from simple, innocent childlikeness to the extreme of waywardness.

During the filming of this drama Miss Brady won the esteem and good will of all connected with the studio; she was called there a "Jolly-good-fellow," and she was rightly named, for she made everyone happy as she worked, from the little child in the drama, and visiting children, to fellow artists and director.

In the range of emotion which Miss Brady is obliged to interpret in "The Cup of Chance," we see her a young girl whose home influence has always been the worst, a home in which motherhood was unknown, and where liberty and license reigned. Here we see innocence in the environment of wrong doing, the girl so raised that the wrong looked right to her. Hope's sale to a whiteslaver, which results in immediate retribution to the slaver, leads to her accepting a position in an opera, "Circe," while the tragic death of her mother gives her a chance in life for which she is utterly unfitted.

Alice Brady in "The Cup of Chance" (Knickerbocker).

In the role of "Circe," Miss Brady interprets the enchanting spirit of Circe from the Odyssey, the famous epic poem of Homer. Interpreted by Mathew Arnold and others, Circe is looked upon as a goddess of sensuality, and according to Homer, she gathered admiring men about her, only to turn them into swine at her pleasure. Until the arrival of Ulysses, she plays well her part.

While acting the part of Circe in the Opera, Hope, impersonated by Miss Brady, lives the part off of the stage. At last, however, Hope pays the price for her folly, collapses and flees from society and the stage, only to meet and marry a rich bachelor. Here she meets her first great chance in life, but is unable to grasp it and the marriage ends in tragedy.

The story is not a preachment; however, it has for its basic principle the fact that on account of the degraded motherhood in many instances, children are reared with false standards of morality degrading ideals and weakened constitutions, all of which must end in wreckage of character. More than this, untrue motherhood, not only blasts the destiny of the child, it has far-reaching influence in the lives of others, for no one falls by himself. Miss Brady has outdone herself in her work, she holds one to the last flash of the picture and handles the delicate subject with great genius and skill.

MARGARET WYCHERLY IN A NEW ROLE.

Margaret Wycherly, the star of the World Film Corporation photoplay, "The Fight," appears in a new role, quite in keeping with the part which she took in that very successful film. She has been chosen to impersonate the goddess of liberty and read the Woman's Appeal for Liberty at the Independence Day demonstration of the Empire State Equal Suffrage Party.

It will be remembered that in the photoplay, "The Fight," Miss Wycherly was the woman mayor of a city, Jane Thomas, who set out to clean up the vice resorts. She encountered great opposition but was successful in the end.

"Little Pal"

Famous Players Introduce Mary Pickford in the Role of a Half-Breed—Story of the Far North.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ANNOUNCED as an "original" photoplay, "Little Pal" may have been written with the intention of giving Mary Pickford a character that is different—different from the winsome, roguish, merry, or pathetic creatures she is in the habit of playing.

For the purpose of this Famous Players production she dons a dark wig, wears a costume that makes her appear more diminutive than ever and assumes the stolid reserve of an Indian. Little Pal is not a full-blooded Indian, but a half-breed living in Alaska among gold-crazed men. Miss Pickford remains true to the character even at the sacrifice of some of her most winning graces. She seldom smiles and there is no place for girlish coquetries in drawing the drab, unhappy child of the far north. It surely is interesting to see Miss Pickford step so completely out of her own personality.

In dramatic strength the picture varies. It seems as if several of the opportunities for telling climaxes have been slurred over, rather than sharply marked to score their best effect. A case in point is that of the scene in which the girl's father stakes his saloon and his daughter on a throw of the dice. Certainly, the scene at the gambling table brings one of the most important developments in the story and might be extended to get greater suspense, as Sid Gerue, the drunken saloon keeper, and Black Brand throw for such ruinous stakes. Immediately following the success of Brand, however, there is withal enough tragedy and drama in the suicide of Gerue and the young easterner's fight to save Little Pal from the man who has won her.

Throughout these scenes Miss Pickford is most appealing in indicating the suppressed misery of a taciturn girl, to whom the relief of emotional outbursts is unknown. Another dramatic moment which she makes an audience feel comes with the appearance of Grandon's wife and Little Pal's realization of the tie that makes her devotion hopeless. James Kirkwood gave the story a satisfactory production, barring a few slips, and character sketches of conspicuous merit were supplied by Russell Bassett, William Lloyd and Bert Hadley.

CHARLES CHAPLIN IMPERSONATIONS.

Charles Chaplin has imitators aplenty among screen actors and vaudeville and cabaret entertainers; but Minerva Courtney probably is the first female impersonator of the famous comedian. In three two-reel subjects, produced and handled by the Metropolis Film Manufacturing Company, Miss Courtney shows herself to be a clever mimic in catching the more obvious of the Chaplin mannerisms. She walks a la Chaplin, skids around corners on one foot and gives a very fair imitation of the actor's expressions, including his smile. Miss Courtney evidently has studied her subject closely and if she does not attain the impossible in achieving the elusive humor that is a part of Chaplin's personality, she must, at all events, be credited with a novel, thoughtfully developed performance.

Judging from the reels shown at a private exhibition, the pictures, based on several of Chaplin's most popular photoplays, were hastily prepared and technically a bit crude. They may be improved by a careful re-assembling of the scenes to eliminate awkward jumps and some of the more apparent errors in direction. The three subjects now ready are "Minerva Courtney in her Impersonation of Charles Chaplin," "Minerva Courtney as Chaplin, Putting it Over," and "Minerva Courtney as Chaplin, in Her Job in the Laundry."

"The Blindness of Virtue"

Essanay Films Cosmo Hamilton's Play in Six Parts, with Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn in the Leading Roles.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SEX problems are always a risky venture in the photodramatic domain, unless handled with great delicacy and niceness of mind. There are millions of youthful eyes whose owners have pure and tender hearts, looking longingly towards the screens the world over, and they must be protected from any views that might tend to threaten the chasteness of youth's bright morning.

In "The Blindness of Virtue," produced by Essanay, I am of the opinion, after carefully viewing the films and honestly judging the story as told there, that the moral lesson taught is powerful and one that should be productive of great good to parents and to boys and girls who are approaching the years of discretion. The manner in which the story is told in these pictures carefully avoids all coarseness, and there is nothing that tends to offend good taste, or anyone possessed of the most delicate susceptibilities.

The photodramatic merit of the story will be acknowledged by all of fair minds. The interest is cumulative and reaches a fine climax at the close. The character types give the impression of "newness;" that is, somewhat different from what one has become accustomed to see on the screen. Take the Episcopalian clergyman, for instance. He is a fine manly man as well as one spiritually minded. He is a man of the world as well as a man of the "cloth," and altogether a type of man we feel a liking to know. His daughter, Effie, is another peculiar type. Her innocence and ignorance of the ways of life are astounding to the initiated; but never create the impression of improbability. Poor Mary Ann, the daughter of the washwoman, is possessed of similar innocence and ignorance; but, deprived of like home influences, she becomes a common type. The story is kind, in that it shows her restored to her home and rescued from the slums through the intervention of the Hon. Archibald Graham. And here we have another very remarkable type. This blue-blooded young man has been expelled from Eton and afterwards from Oxford, and has been quite liberal in his sowing of wild oats. Yet he is redeemed by the sweet innocence of Effie, and the love of her has made him a defender of the weak and vain Mary Ann.

Edna Mayo is a sweet girlish figure in the part of Effie Pemberton. The opening scene in which Effie is introduced shows herein a fairy bower of flowers, on the grounds of the manse where Rector Pemberton lives. Miss Mayo charms us by her youth and beauty in this scene and in many others. There are scenes, however, where she has been caught by the camera while she is in shadow, and in these her face shows age that is neither her due nor becoming.

The fine versatility of Bryant Washburn will be quickly conceded when one sees him in this photoplay as the youthful Archibald Graham and contrasts the role with that of grouchy old Henry Bisbee, in "The Little Deceiver," which I reviewed in the issue of June 19. The transformation is really remarkable. George Le Guere is to be complimented for a typical characterization of the high-bred, vicious young sport, Edward Winstanley.

The strongest and most appealing man role is that of the Rev Henry Pemberton, which is most excellently sustained by Thomas McLarnie. Spiritual strength and man's frailty, and wholesome religious practice and ideal friendship are well brought out in this fine portraiture. One must not overlook that fine actor, Harry Dunkinson, in the small part of Lord Aberlady's butler, nor John Tossar, as his lordship himself. Betty Brown, as Mary Ann, was almost overlooked by me, which would have been unpardonable; for the character is well impersonated.

The release will be made through the V-L-S-E, Inc., offices July 19.

"Don Cæsar De Bazan"

A Costume Picture in the "Broadway Favorite" Series—W. Lawson Butt Has Lead as the Romantic Don—Offering Is Marked by Strong Acting.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS well known very romantic drama, "Don Caesar de Bazan," has been done before in pictures. Robert G. Vignola has now produced it again and, with the help of W. Lawson Butt, an English actor who has made a great success on the regular stage with his playing of Don Caesar, and the no less skilful playing of Alice Hollister and Harry Millarde, he has made an offering in four reels that a reviewer can recommend. It is a costume play, so that there can never be anything personal in the appeal that it makes to the spectator. But as man bears his strenuous burden until, weary, he needs rest and sleep, so the average spectator wants something more than realism in his recreation. He is apt to want now and again something like a fairy tale to bring back the pleasant illusion that life is to be filled with pleasant surprises, rewards, honors and successes that are to be his. In Don Caesar there is nothing of the spirit's struggle with reality; it is all cobweb stuff, but the director and his company have set it and played it with enough art to make it, as a whole, distinguished and graceful. A good picture that can be advertised and will come up to expectations on the screen.

The backgrounds, chosen in old St. Augustine, with care so that one never sees discordant notes or jarring incongrueties, serve almost, if not quite as well as old Madrid would have served—the scenes are perfect even if they don't contain the Escurial. Some of the scenes offered interesting problems—one, for instance, takes figures under arches looking out on a bright patio with palms, whose branches are white in the intense light; yet the faces are clearly shown. The camera work is almost as good as Kalem standard in its worst scenes and is perfect most of the time. Camera work is one of Kalem's trumps. Lawson Butt's acting of the ragged Don clearly shows his devil-may-care kindly spirit that makes his falling into the nets spread by the crafty Done Jose (Harry Millarde) a quite convincing circumstance. Alice Hollister, at the opening of the play, a singer and dancer named Maritana, saves Don Caesar's life in a street brawl. The king (Robert D. Walker) has seen her, and Don Jose, who loves the queen (Helen Lindroth) plots to entangle the king so that he may be able to persuade the queen to give him her favor. The story with its dual in carnival time, the condemning of Don Caesar to death, the masked marriage, the Don's escape, his rescue of Maritana from the king, and its showing how the queen helps and Don Jose is killed—is well known. They make an entertaining picture that one will watch closely.

"A Daughter of the Jungle"

jungle experiences become a part of Director McRae's production. On several occasions he uses double exposures to good purpose and so well are the scenes timed that an audience easily may wonder how the pictures were taken without injury to the players.

In finding a plot to account for the incidents in the jungle, Mr. McRae was not especially successful. There are too many stories within stories, too many visions of what has already occurred, with the result that an audience is liable to confuse the past with the present and mistake the meaning of the characters. By using a more direct method of plot development the author probably would have improved the dramatic quality of his production. The idea of the lost child maturing into an untutored young woman, who wears a leopard skin and enjoys the companionship of negroes and wild beasts, is not more extravagant than the usual run of fanciful notions encountered in pictures of this stamp.

Marie Walcamp does very well as the golden-haired daughter of the jungle, and other parts are adequately carried by Wellington Playter, Rex de Rosselli, Sherman Bainbridge and Betty Sehaid. Locations and settings are all that the action requires and, better still, there is no escaping the thrills of many of the animal scenes.

"Should a Mother Tell?"

A Four-Reel Melodrama of French Origin, Produced by the Fox Film Corporation—Betty Nansen in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

REX INGRAM is credited with the authorship of "Should a Mother Tell?", the four-reel melodrama which is the latest production of the Fox Film Company. Mr. Ingram is to be congratulated upon the remarkable skill with which he has copied the methods of Eugene Sue, Zola and the Elder Dumas. Not for an instant does the story lose its Gallic atmosphere, and it is constructed after the most approved rules of the French drama. The successive steps by which the climax is reached have all the mechanical perfection of plays by Scribe, or Sardou, and it is a decidedly vigorous and sensationally effective photoplay.

The title is somewhat misleading. "Should a Wife Tell?" would cover the case more correctly. The dilemma in which Marie Baudin finds herself placed, is whether to betray her husband or keep silent and permit an innocent man to suffer the death penalty; the question of her daughter's happiness is secondary. The story is a straight forward elucidation of that lust of greed which is a characteristic of a certain class of French peasants, and leads to murder and self-destruction. The sex question, or anything of a pathologic or psychologic nature, is never touched upon. J. Gordon Edwards has transferred the scenario to the screen with the easy command of a technical expert who has been given a free hand and a large expense account. His work is uniformly without fault. Betty Nansen, as Marie Baudin, could not be improved upon. The part fits her personality, and the resources of her histronic art and amply emotional powers, find no difficulty in lifting the character to its proper importance as the star role. Miss Nansen's reserve power and almost entire absence of gestures, deserve special remark. Stuart Holmes plays the guilty innkeeper convincingly, and without any unnecessary accentuation of the character. Arthur Hoops, Jean Sothern, and Claire Whitney, are also prominent in an excellent cast.

"The Right of Way

William Faversham Gives Sterling Performance in B. A. Rolfe's Picturization of Famous Novel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE RIGHT OF WAY," from the book by Sir Gilbert Parker, produced by the B. A. Rolfe Company under the direction of Jack Noble, with William Faversham in the character of Charlie Steele, is beyond a doubt one of the biggest pictures thus far put forth on the Metro program. As the chief attraction at the Strand Theater during the week of July 4, it pleased the audience immensely and elsewhere, whatever the caliber of the theater and the neighborhood, its popularity will be no less marked, for there is a real story of general appeal and the acting of Mr. Faversham is impressive in the extreme. The star deserves a large share of the credit for the emphatic success of this picture, Director Noble, too, is to be thanked for a painstaking production and performances of distinct merit are contributed by Jane Grey as Rosalie and Edward Brennan as Joe Portugaise.

Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, as adapted to photoplay, needs witht a due regard for the essentital elements of the original plot, has a romantic, even spiritual quality at times, and is withal consistently dramatic. It moves rapidly, and in building up to the climaxes one gains the impression of situations that are the natural outcome of an expression of character and not artificially devised to meet the mechanical requirements of a dramatic photoplay. Even the saloon brawl and the accident resulting in Steele's loss of memory appear to be the natural outcome of a life given over more and more recklessly to dissipation. One way or another, sooner or later, Steele must have come to grief and for the purposes of a picture, the rumpus in the saloon, followed by the lawyer's plunge into the river, is highly effective. The only question about these scenes is in the choice of a rather too vivid tint.

Preceding Steele's loss of memory, his rescue by Joe Portugaise and his recovery among Canadian woodsmen, are some notably realistic court room scenes in which the camera man used the dissolve and the close-up very cleverly to bring out the full strength of Mr. Faversham's virile acting. The arrogance of the young lawyer, his dominating mind and the ease with which he tramples over those who stand in his way, are emphasized in a truly authoritative performance. There is much more in this picture deserving of praise and very little to suggest fault finding. Few features offer such a combination of artistic acting as that provided by Mr. Faversham, Miss Grey and Mr. Brennan, and equally few present a story as deserving of intelligent consideration.

"The Red Stephane"

A Two-Reel Vitagraph Melodrama Marked by Exciting Incidents—Directed by Ulysses Davis.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

HOW effectively an infrequently used locale may freshen up a story that in itself makes slight claim to novelty, is illustrated in this two-part Vitagraph melodrama, directed by Ulysses Davis from a scenario by Charles Lofquest. The characters are those of western melodrama, with the desperado, the wealthy ranch owner and his wife. The excitement, too, so largely dependent upon a prolonged chase and a fight with Indians, is reminiscent of the familiar tale of the American West; but there the similarity ends.

Instead of selecting the lawless sections of our own country, the author chose to picture his people as inhabitants of Argentine and Director Davis succeeded in carrying out the illusion by finding locations that certainly will pass for Argentine, and presenting his characters in costumes that do not belong to any period of the United States, whenever they may have originated. The total effect is of a melodrama well removed from the customary run and exciting in the bargain. Perhaps the only anachronism likely to be noticed by an audience is in a scene that shows a telegraph pole in the background.

Admirers of adventure stories will find Red Stephano, an entirely reckless desperado, to be a man after their own hearts. His villainy is of the full-blooded kind that knows no fear. Deciding that death by shooting is too good for him, Jack Schneider has his enemy bound in a most trying position on the back of a horse and heads the animal for the open plains, figuring that he will die an uncomfortable death. But Stephano is saved by Schneider's wife, who is treking across the desert with her children. He dies in a running fight with Indians. The characters are presented with dramatic intensity, first honors going to William Duncan for his portrayal of Stephano.

semblance of fact. We are given a view of large pieces of ordnance in process of manufacture during early scenes of the play, supposedly in the factory of Martin Wright. In fact, big guns of various models and calibre, from mortars to 14-inch breech-loading rifles, are shown in process of manufacture, while Martin Wright goes over the works in company with his son and his daughter. It is the nature of things that the son should be enthusiastic over the scientific construction involved and that the daughter should be affected by the destruction of human life promised by the huge engines of war—woman is a creator of beings, man a creator of things.

The son goes abroad after war is declared in Europe and sends special envoys from clashing nations to negotiate for control of his father's output of cannon. These envoys meet at the house of Martin Wright and bid against each other in the presence of his daughter for weapons calculated to kill or maim all that woman has done to perpetuate the race. The daughter objects on principle to her father's participation in the slaughter, but her objections are overruled, and a deal is made with one of the envoys. Martin Wright's son, meanwhile, remains abroad, becomes infatuated with a beautiful dancer, embroiled in a duel on her account and finally, in proof of his devotion, joins a foreign legion in defense of her country. His return home is awaited with growing anxiety until, one day, news is brought that he was killed in battle by one of his father's guns.

LASKY GETS "HEIR TO HOORAH" AND "BLACKBIRDS."

Arrangements were completed last week by which Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Lasky Feature Play Co., has obtained the exclusive photodramatic rights to two famous American plays, "Heir to the Hoorah," Paul Armstrong's dramatization of the play, and by arrangement with the Kirke La Shelle Company, and "Blackbirds," by Harry James Smith.

"Blackbirds," the cinema version of which has been prepared by Margaret Turnbull, will be the vehicle in which Miss Laura Hope Crews will make her second appearance as a photodrama star of the Lasky Feature Play Company. Her first production was "The Fighting Hope" produced by the Lasky Company in association with David Belasco. In "Blackbirds," which tells a tense and gripping story of smuggling and reformation, Miss Crews will have the support of Misses Jane Wolf, Florence Dagmar, Evelyn Desmond, Messrs. Thomas Meighan, George Gebhardt, Raymond Hatton, Ed Harley and Frederic Wilson.

CHARLOTTE WALKER IN SECOND PHOTOPLAY.

Following her exceptional success as Maggie Schultz in the Lasky Feature Play Company's production of "Kindling" by Charles Kenyon and by arrangement with E. J. Bowes, Miss Charlotte Walker, noted American actress, has begun work under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille on another photodrama of quite different character. "Kindling" will be released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation on July 12. It marks Miss Walker's debut as a photodrama star.

THIS is one of the rare features which all enjoy and few want to analyze. You forget about the number of reels and watching the story unfold itself on the screen you regret that it is over. It's of the beguiling sort of features.

No melodramatic fireworks, no accidents, no so-called tense moments, but instead a very human picture, a leaf taken out of the book of life and most skillfully and artlessly presented, All the old friends that we saw in "The Middleman" and in "Brother Officers" are there with some new talent added.

The atmosphere is strictly of the Dickens variety though Dickens never wrote the story. Dickens, however, is surely the tutelary genius of the play and we heartily agree with the lovable henpecked old man, who takes one of the leading parts, when he takes a statue of "Mr. Dickens" from the shelf and assures us that the ending of the story would have delighted that great master of the modern novel. There is a singular charm about English life; its men are so manly, its humor is so real, though solemn, its characters have the sympathetic touch, the kind that makes us all akin. Told by a competent story-teller, its magic is irresistible.

The play abounds in pretty and pathetic scenes and in superb characterization. The exhibitor who is looking for the hurly-burly of cheap dramatics or for the ultra-sensational will be disappointed with "Liberty Hall" but the exhibitor who likes to give his patrons rational enjoyment with touches of art and a little pulling at the heart-strings will treasure this feature as a strong point in his program. Settings and photography are beyond all praise. Somebody said recently that the motion picture of today shows flashes of the art of Rembrandt in subtlety of characterization, in its finesse of detail and its startling fidelity to life. "Liberty Hall" is a good sample.

"The Pursuing Shadow"

A Picture Playhouse Production In Which Tom Terris Is Featured.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

TOM TERRISS has made an enviable reputation on the speaking stage. That he has transferred some of his power and cleverness to the screen is apparent in this feature. The plot of this feature is strange and complicated. It deals in large measure with aspects of the underworld and with "unsavory characters," to use the language of the synopsis. It is highly spiced with melodramatic episodes of the kind most relished by English audiences. The cast is good. The elder Terriss is a typical British actor in melodrama.

The direction is somewhat weak and lacking at times in coherence and dramatic unity. A judicious use of the pruning knife will improve matters. It is not easy to follow the unfolding of the story and the swiftness of the shifts is at times bewildering.

Even in these days of splendid photography a word of special praise must be said for the magnificent work of the camera man. This splendid work will in no small measure atone for some of the faults of the picture.

"After Dark"

Favorite Play of William A. Brady Is Revived by World Film Corporation in Five-Part Picture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BEFORE the days of moving pictures, no less a personage than William A. Brady himself played the role of "Old Tom" in Dion Boucicault's play, "After Dark," which has been made into a satisfactory picture by Director Frederic Thompson of the World Film Corporation. This time, Alec B. Francis portrays the character created by Mr. Brady, and throughout, his performance is pitched in a highly sympathetic key. A large cast was used in the picturization of Boucicault's play, including Dorothy Green in the dual role of Mrs. Dalton and Fanny, Eric Maxon, Melville Stewart, Norman Traver, J. H. Goldworthy, Charles Dungan and Bertrand Marburgh.

Early in the opening reel we have some effectively arranged battle scenes, supposed to transpire in the Philippines, and meet Captain Frank Dalton, a young officer who has left his wife in the States. It soon becomes apparent that Lieutenant Bellamy is destined to be the trouble-maker in the story. First he displays cowardice in battle; then steals the regiment's funds and back in America, living under an assumed name, makes love to Dalton's wife so successfully that she consents to run away with him when he is in danger of arrest.

Having established a reason for Dalton's degeneration, the author goes on to introduce a number of subsidiary plots bearing upon the former officer's wife and after her death, following the career of his daughter, Fanny. In scene and action, as well as in characterization, the picture offers considerable variety. "Old Tom" descends the social scale step by step; we see him selling newspapers on street corners of New York, looking for a place to sleep in any hovel that offers a sheltering roof and finding in drink his only relief from haunting memories.

Frankly melodramatic as the story is, Mr. Francis arouses an active sympathy for the old derelict. Director Thompson found settings with atmosphere and worked up to scenes of dramatic force, such as "Old Tom's" rescue of his daughter when Bellamy throws her into the river and the final discomfiture of the schemers. "After Dark" was a fortunate choice for picture production.

PEDRO DE CORDOBA APPEARS WITH FARRAR.

First of the photodramas in which Miss Geraldine Farrar will be the star, produced under the management of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and to be distributed through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be "Carmen," in which the noted prima donna will appear in the title role, a characterization she re-created last winter in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Pedro de Cordoba, the leading romantic player of Broadway, formerly a member of the New Theater Company and more recently one of the principals in Margaret Anglin's company at the Lyceum theater, New York, is appearing in leads in support of Miss Farrar in the several photodramas she is making this summer at the Lasky Feature Play Company's studio at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille, director general. Wallace Reid also is a member of Miss Farrar's acting organization.

MOTION PICTURES REPLACE FIREWORKS.

At the various Independence Day celebrations in New York fireworks were discarded and motion pictures shown in their place; this being in harmony with the idea of a safe and sane "Fourth of July" celebration.

A program of Biograph pictures exclusively was arranged for the celebration held at McKinley square and, judging from the applause, it was enthusiastically received. Among other pictures on the program was "The Battle," the remarkable one reel Civil War picture, which was quite appropriate.

As is the case with the preceding episodes of this portion of the serial episode 4 contains incidents which suggest the romantic climax that is expected. These incidents are replete with interest of an individual sort. The fathoming of the ocean's depths by Del Mar, the pursuit of Jamieson by the foreign agents and the theft of the treasured communication which was in his possession, the near tragedy with which Elaine meets, and the thrilling interference on the part of the mysterious geologist are all remarkable in their manner of presentation, and evasively suggestive of thrills to follow.

Along with other mysteriously presented points of the story, the map which is perused by Del Mar and his associates when the curtain is about to be drawn, accompanied by the statement that "If we hold this section, we hold America!" is a perplexer. In fact we must concede that the problem for solution placed before us in "The Romance of Elaine" is more puzzling than anything in the preceding chapters of the serial.

"Just Out of College"

A Production Made by the Gustave Frohman Company and Richly Flavored with George Adeisms.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush

FOR a first effort this feature makes a good impression. Of course anything built half intelligently on the rich and often boisterous humor of George Ade is bound to be funny. The titles of the play which are almost without exception taken directly from the text of Ade are always good for a laugh and so are many of the situations. The cast is good, the settings are splendid, the photography leaves nothing to be desired.

Scene from "Just Out of College" (Frohman).

There is no pretence at anything like strong dramatic action; indeed the whole performance is or at least is intended to be pure comedy. Much of the stuff is bromidic and unduly expanded, a further use of the trimming scissors will do the film a lot of good.

Here and there the full force of the Ade humor breaks through and at such moments no audience can help enjoying itself and being noisy in its demonstrations of approval. Much of all of Ade's work, whether on the speaking stage or in novels and "fables" depends upon the wittiness of the dialogue and for this essential element of Ade's literary success there is but scant opportunity on the screen except of course in titles. Altogether the feature is a creditable piece of work. It affords good opportunities for presentation, indeed a progressive and skilful exhibitor can make a whole lot out of it and delight his audience by clever presentation.

"Letters From Bugs to Gus"

Ring W. Lardner's Baseball Stories Are Being Made Into World Film Comedies—Series of Twelve.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SEVERAL millions of people, more or less, are familiar with Ring W. Lardner's inimitable letters that have appeared under the general title of "Big League Stuff, of You Know Me, Al," and it is safe to venture that a comfortable percentage of these millions will be interested in seeing the photoplay versions of the characters and incidents made familiar to them in print. For release on the World Film program, a Chicago company is preparing a series of twelve one-reel pictures based on Lardner's wholesome American humor and using the author's own phraseology and unique spelling in the sub-titles.

The first of the series, and it may be assumed that others will maintain the same spirit, is a distinct success, far more likely to entertain the genuine baseball enthusiast than is the conventional story that every now and again serves to introduce some of our big league celebrities. We have a number of the celebrities in this picture, too—Bresnahan and others—but its best bid for favor is in the humor of the action and the laughable sub-titles, a very important factor in a comedy of this character. Suitable types were selected for the baseball players, real and near, that appear in the first of the "Letters from Bugs to Gus" series.

PATHE TO FILM GILBERT PARKER'S "THE WEAVERS."

Pathe announces the acquisition of the picture rights to Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Weavers." This novel has never been dramatized before, though it had a tremendous sale, passing through a number of editions. The story should make an intensely interesting picture, being full of unusual and highly dramatic situations. It deals with the adventures of a young Quaker, whose uncle is killed in an insurrection in Egypt, and whose dying request is that his nephew try to reclaim Egypt by establishing Christian standards of living. The young man by his absolute honesty rises to high power, but the intrigues of jealous native princes finally drive him back to England. His love affair with a beautiful American girl who has married an English title is woven through the story.

"The Weavers" is replete with fine picture situations, and the development of the characters is most cleverly done.

MACKENZIE PRODUCING "THE GALLOPER."

Donald Mackenzie, who is producing "The Galloper" for Pathe, announces that he has signed Fania Marinoff to play opposite Clifton Crawford in that feature. Miss Marinoff is well known to the motion picture public, having appeared in several big features made by well-known companies. Her greater fame rests, however, upon her work in the "legit" with such famous plays as "The House Next Door," "Within the Law," "Consequences," and Arnold Daly's revival of "Arms and the Man." Many of her appearances in this country have been made in Oriental and Slavic characters, which suit her exotic personality and eastern type of beauty. She is a true Russian, having been born in Odessa about twenty years ago. This will be her first appearance in a Pathe picture.

PATHE ANNOUNCES THE "GOLD ROOSTER PLAYS"

Pathe has acquired so many splendid plays and books by well-known authors that it has been decided to call the features made from them "Gold Rooster Plays."

Features put out under this name will be most carefully selected for quality representing the best talent only in authorship, cast and direction. The first of them will be released early in the fall. Quite a number of these features will be in Pathecolor.

FIFTH RAFFERTY COMEDY STARTED.

"Rafferty at His Summer Home," the fifth of the Peaceful Rafferty comedies, was started this week when Director J. A. Fitzgerald left with a company of players, headed by genial Joe Sullivan, Tammany Young, Peggy Shannon, Billy Bowers, Charlie A. Mason, and about two hundred extras for Centerport, L. I., where most of the large exterior scenes that Charlie O'Hara's script calls for will be enacted.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A WOMAN" (Essanay).

Charlie Chaplin takes a stroll in a park where he sees a man, his wife and daughter seated on a bench. The husband sees a pretty girl passing and smiles at her. She smiles back and he makes an excuse to his wife to get away and follows her. The girl inveigles him into playing a game of blind man's buff, and when he is securely blindfolded, robs him of his pocketbook.

Chaplin offers to lead the man back to his wife, but instead takes him to the sea and pushes him in. He then introduces himself to the wife and daughter and they take him home with them. When the husband gets back he is introduced to the new found friend. He recognizes Chaplin's voice and a fight is started. Chaplin, after losing part of his wearing apparel, escapes by running upstairs.

Presently he reappears sans moustache, dressed in the daughter's clothing. The flirtatious husband then tries to make up to Chaplin and stirs his wife's jealousy. Another battle is started and the wife discovers that Chaplin is not a woman. He finally is hurled out into the street and wends his sad way homeward. Released July 12.

THE VERNON CASTLES IN PICTURES.

Oliver D. Bailey, one of the producers of "The Melting Pot" for the Cort Film Corporation, has finished casting and began work this week on the big five-reel feature picture which he will do for the same corporation with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle as the stars. The story will be a polite melodrama in which hundreds of extra people will be used. Many of these will be recruited from social circles in New York City and the residents of Long Island.

Many of the locations which have been picked for the picture are among the finest to be found in all of Long Island. Resorts where bathing is at its height and the back country where hunts are held will be included in the aggregate scenics of the picture. The beautiful estate of the Castles will be used as well as Mrs. Castle's former home in New Rochelle. A cast of more than ordinary merit has been selected for the picture.

CYRIL MAUDE IN BIG PUMICE DEAL.

An English syndicate is said to have secured the famous pumice deposits in the Imperial Valley in Southern California. These deposits are mined in a limited area, pumice being a geological freak formation as it can only be formed by the contact of sea water with volcanic material while the heat of the eruption is still on it. The deal is believed to have been put through during the visit of the English party accompanying Cyril Maude, the celebrated London actor-manager who has just completed "Peer Gynt" for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co. Mr. Maude, one of the wealthiest men on the stage, is a member of the syndicate.

NEWMAN'S NEW TICKET CHOPPER.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, with factories located at Cincinnati, Ohio, 101 Fourth avenue, New York, N. Y., and 108 W. Lake street, Chicago, Ill., manufacturing a complete line of brass and bronze poster frames, easels, railings and theater fixtures of every description, are manufacturing a new improved ticket chopper, for which patent has been applied for. This ticket chopper, as will be noticed on the illustration, is provided with an automatic rocking comb attachment, which automatically combs or feeds the tickets into the mutilating knives without the necessity of using any other outside method, such as a wire, or tilting the chopper. The tickets, after passing through the mutilators, are perforated in a manner that it is impossible for them to be used over again.

Another noteworthy feature of the Newman chopper is the fact that they have provided an emergency door under lock and key, as will be noticed on cut. This is used in cases where the coin is accidentally dropped into the machine, and for oiling the machine when necessary. This is a big improvement over the old style way of removing the top in order to get into the box. Handles provided on the sides of cabinet make it easily handled by one person. All trimmings are highly nickel-plated. The Newman concern makes these choppers in mahogany or oak finish, or in solid brass. Their new 1915-1916 catalog describing these choppers, lobby display frames and other theater products which they manufacture, will be mailed to any theater manager for the asking.

"ALL FOR OLD IRELAND" (Lubin).

The three-reel Lubin comedy drama, "All for Old Ireland," written and directed by Sidney Olcott, one of the greatest of all producers of Irish stories, and released July 14, will undoubtedly create wide interest. This is the first of a series of "made-in-Ireland" comedy dramas in which the Lubin Company is featuring Miss Valentine Grant, a charming and clever little star who is particularly suited to Irish colleen roles.

Scene from "All for Old Ireland" (Lubin).

The scenes for this play were filmed along the rugged cliffs and broken shores of South Kerry and also amid the wondrous surroundings of the Gap of Dunloe and the beautiful lakes of Killarney so famed in story and song. "All for Old Ireland," is a stirring tale of the days of '98 when all Ireland was preparing to resist the iron grasp that was about to close around it. Mr. Olcott himself plays opposite Miss Grant in two of the plays in characters that have made him famous in the past as a delineator of the rollicking, light-hearted and romantic gossoon.

CHICAGO CONCERNS CONSOLIDATED.

The Barker-Swan Service and the Advance Motion Picture Company, both of Chicago, have consolidated, and hereafter the entire business is to be conducted under the name of the Advance Motion Picture Company. The new officers are C. W. Hutton, President, A. H. Shields, Secretary, Edwin L. Barker, Treasurer and General Manager.

LAURA HOPE CREWS IN LASKY-BELASCO PRODUCTION.

Miss Laura Hope Crews, one of the most distinguished American dramatic stars, makes her debut as a photodramatic artist on July 19, under the joint management of Jesse L. Lasky and David Belasco in the elaborate picturization of Mr. Belasco's famous dramatic hit, "The Fighting Hope," by William J. Hurlbut. In addition to Miss Crews herself, the cast for this notable offering will include George Gebhardt, Gerald Ward, Thomas Meighan, Richard Morris, Florence Smythe, Theodore Roberts, Cleo Ridgley, Tom Farman and Billy Elmer.

Scene from "The Fighting Hope" (Lasky).

"The Fighting Hope" tells of the struggle of a good woman to believe in the innocence of her husband who has been condemned to prison and to remain true to him despite the fact that she falls in love with another man.

Miss Crews made her first stage appearance in San Francisco when only four years of age and has devoted her entire life to dramatic art. Among the leading productions in which she has played important roles are "Merely Mary Ann," "Ransom's Folly," "Zira," "The Great Divide," "The Faith Healer," "The Havoc," and more recently "The Rainbow" and "Blackbirds." She has appeared also in London with success.

Laura Hope Crews stands as one of the few artists always sure of critical approval. She received propositions from practically all the main photoplay companies of America. The fact that she determined to appear only under Lasky-Belasco direction, is in itself significant of the care with which she has entered into this new departure and her positive desire to do only such work as much necessarily add to her brilliant reputation.

"MOTHERHOOD" (Selig).

Miss Bessie Eyton, one of the most accomplished actresses in Filmland, performs what is perhaps her most versatile work in the character of "Hazel Foster" in "Motherhood," a Selig Diamond Special in three-reels, produced by Lloyd B. Carleton from the scenario written by J. A. Lacy, and released Thursday, July 22d.

Hazel Booth, a society favorite, marries Franklyn Foster, a millionaire banker Foster is a great lover of children, but little ones do not appeal to Hazel. At a lawn party given for the children of the poor at Foster's residence, a little boy mistakes Hazel for his mother, put his arms around her neck and she finally awakens to a true appreciation of what motherlove means.

Hazel, following an operation, goes abroad in search of health. While abroad she meets Jacques Lanoi, an unscrupulous physician. Hazel tells the physician of her newly awakened love for children and of the fact that she has undergone recently an operation. Lanoi says, "Why not adopt a child?" Hazel acts upon this suggestion and returns to America with the baby which she tells her husband is their own.

After two years Lanoi comes to America, financially impoverished, but with an all-consuming social ambition. Knowing that he has Hazel in his power, Lanoi tells her that he wishes to make Estelle, Hazel's sister, his wife. Hazel, horrified, determines to confess all to her husband. She tells him of her deception. Foster forgives her. Dr. Lanoi loses his life.

Beautiful staging also contributes to making this Selig Diamond Special the last word in motion picture dramatization.

"THE CUP OF CHANCE" (Knickerbocker).

"The Cup of Chance" is a sensational three-reel production by the Knickerbocker Star Features Company, in which Alice Brady is featured in the winsome role of "Hope." Miss Brady is supported by George W. Howard. Flavia Arcaro and T. Morse Koupal assume the heavy roles with Jim Levering in character part.

The drama is written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the editor for Knickerbocker Star Features expressly for Miss Brady, a drama which is unique in style and alive with the technical punch. The story deals with society at two extremes, both of which seem to pour more of the scum than virtue into the innocent life of little Hope, who, at four years old, is "launched on the sea of life" unprepared to meet the chances that life may offer for upgrowth

Scene from "The Cup of Chance" (Knickerbocker).

Mr. Howard takes the part of an ambitious, serious-minded business man, who in his struggle marries the butterfly mother of little Hope, and in his wealth marries unknowingly, his step daughter for whom he has sought for year. Hope's position in opera as "Circe" shows her playing on the stage the type she lives in the world, all of which Hope leaves in her opportunity for new life with Jack. She is unequal to the new chance, and turns to her old lover and old life. All discovered, Jack plays the gallant part by poisoning one glass of wine, compelling Hope to serve him and her lover, one glass containing life, the other death. The lover gets the poison, Jack leaves for good, but later again meets Hope on the Cliffs as she reclines in an invalid's chair. He discovers her identity, softens to forgive, as the wheel chair accidently takes Hope to her death.

KASSEL PAINTS FILM STARS.

M. Kassel, whose studio is in the Candler building, 220 West 42d street, New York, makes a specialty of painting the portraits of noted photoplayers for use in theater lobbies. He has been exceptionally successful in this line. Mr. Kassel will have an exhibit at San Francisco in which will be shown eleven life size portraits of film stars. The usual size of his paintings is from 30 by 40 inches to 40 by 60 inches and the prices are remarkably low.

Nat A. Wagner, of the Nat A. Wagner Film Corporation of Los Angeles, was in New York recently on a trip combining business and pleasure. Mr. Wagner made his headquarters at the Hotel Knickerbocker and during his stay here became acquainted with many of the leading film producers. He purchased a number of pictures for the California territory.

Richard J. Jose

Singer Who Made "Silver Threads Among the Gold" Famous Now Leading Man in the K. & R. Company.

RICHARD J. JOSE, who has been selected to play leading parts with the K. & R. Film Company, was born in Cornwall, England. He developed a remarkable talent for singing at an early age and when but eight years old he was known as the boy soprano and had the distinguished honor of singing before the crowned heads in London. Owing to the illness of his father and mother the boy's tour in Great Britain was brought to an end. At the request of a brother of his father Richard was sent to America by his parents and made the trip to Virginia City, Nevada, where his uncle lived, quite alone, a tag bearing his destination being attached to his coat. Unfortunately his uncle died while Richard was on the way, so he reached Virginia City, a wild western mining camp, to find himself homeless and friendless.

A pathetic tale is told of how he found his way, hungry and footsore, to a gambling house where he was given permission to sing. With "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "Nearer My God to Thee" he soon had the hardened gamblers on their knees and closed the house for the night. On the following Sunday he sang in the little church of the camp and before he left he found a new home with the town's blacksmith.

Years after, when he rose to prominence Richard Jose married the daughter of Governor Oliver.

The K. & R. Film Company has just completed a six-reel picture suggested by the immortal ballad, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," with Richard Jose in the leading role. This subject will be handled on the state-right plan and considerable territory has already been taken.

"THE SKY HUNTERS" (Essanay).

This is a thrilling and strikingly original photoplay written by William Anthony McGuire, the well known playwright. Its three acts are filled with action and unusual interest. The Sky Hunters are a band of robbers who live in the open spaces and control and terrorize the territory to the sky line. Their leader is a woman, who was bound by an oath to her father to live in the guise of a man to perpetuate his reign over the bandits, he having no son. She grew up a wild and rough character, as desperate as any of her male followers. Then comes the secret service agent to rout the gang. The woman leader suspects the operator and battles with him in the darkened hut in which she lives. He discovers that she is a woman and laughingly turns her cheek to him and kisses her. She already had gained a fondness for the man and with the kiss all her woman's instincts are awakened. She finds that she loves him and battles with her conscience whether to betray him and remain true to her oath or let him escape. While she hesitates he flees but is caught by the bandits and bound and gagged by a railroad track. Other operators arrive, however, and the band is hopelessly routed. The woman finds the agent and releases him from his bonds. Then realizing that her companions have been disbanded she yields to the persuasions of the detective and returns to Washington with him to become a woman and a bride. Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo enact the leading roles with unusual understanding and strength. Released July 24.

MOTION PICTURES AT OCEAN GROVE.

The Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association have inaugurated motion pictures in their 12,000 seat auditorium at Ocean Grove, N. J. The distance from the moving picture machines to the screen is over 200 feet. Equipment includes one Hallberg A. C.-D. C. Motor Generator and two Simplexes, style S, with one hundred ampere lamp houses. Entire equipment furnished by J. H. Hallberg, 36 East 23d St.

"THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM" (Lubin).

This is the last, and one of the most interesting, chapters in the Lubin "Road O' Strife" serial, featuring Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson and released July 12.

Having followed the mysterious and exciting adventures of Robert Dane and Alene up to the time he goes to a hospital, badly wounded, and she discovers that she is of royal blood and has a kingdom beyond the seas, we find the two young people in conference with the ambassador from Hervo-Alesia.

Scene from "The Coming of the Kingdom" (Lubin).

The ambassador tells Alene that if she will agree to wed a prince from Hervo-Alesia and become an ally to the Empire, the emperor's army will restore the monarchy and place her on her father's throne as Queen of Urania. Dane sits there with a breaking heart. The moments are tense. Finally Alene speaks. "Your emperor's aid is not needed," she says, "for I have come into my kingdom," and then, as the bewildered ambassador leaves the room, she turns to Robert Dane, the man for whose love she has sacrificed a kingdom. "Now, now, I am only a girl," she whispers to him, and Dane draws her close to his heart.

"THE HONOR OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY" (American).

A scene, striking in its thrill and realism, is embodied in the action of "The Honor of the District Attorney," a two-reel "Flying A" drama to be released July 19 on the Mutual program. Miss Vivian Rich, the pretty "Flying A" star, is the central character therein. She is shown enjoying a morning canter in the mountains. While passing a highland cabin, a clothes line becomes entangled about her horse's neck. The animal becomes frightened and bolts, carrying Miss Rich directly toward a spot where some civil engineers have just lighted a fuse for a dynamite explosion.

Far in the distance you can see the engineers waving frantically to the girl. Then one of them, Walter Spencer, realizes that she has lost control of her mount. Laboriously he clambers to the danger zone, where he seizes the bridle of the galloping horse as it passes. The horse literally is thrown to the ground, and Miss Vivian actually sustains some painful bruises. Scarce a second elapses after the rescuer carries his fair burden away, when, with a mighty tremor, the earth upheaves. Rocks, large and small, are showered all about. How the cameraman escaped is, in itself, miraculous.

"A DUEL AT DAWN" (Universal).

The sanguinary duel depicted herewith takes place in the Joker (Universal) one-reeler, "A Duel at Dawn," which is to be released on July 24. Max Asher, it will be seen, is in great pain, due primarily to the fact that his opponent's rapier has pierced his vitals. In the second place he strongly suspects that the blade of the rapier which has just severed nis great intestine has been poisoned with chlorine gas.

His second, in the immediate background, is also greatly perturbed by the incident and is closely examining the protruding tip of the rapier for poison stains. If he finds that Max's adversary has used foul means in the duel he, undoubtedly, according to the rules of war, will attack the sneering villain with his cutlass.

It was a great surprise to Mr. Asher's friends to learn that he had been seriously wounded between the black and white stripes of his sport shirt for it had been generally understood that Mr. Asher was an expert swordsman. While at Spiegelberger University in Hofbrau, the capital of the kingdom of Heiniekapoobler on the upper Rhine, Mr. Asher was known as the best swordsman in his class. He still bears the scars of many a furious combat.

No offense should be taken by neutrals because this is a pro-Ally photograph. The Frenchman who thus gains a temporary advantage over Mr. Asher is afterward sorely wounded himself and laid to rest in a shallow grave.

CELEBRATED PLAYERS SECURE "MELTING POT."

A Record for Quick Sale of State Rights Was Made This Week in Chicago.

The final papers were signed by A. H. Sawyer representing the Cort Film Corporation and L. N. Selig and J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film whereby the Celebrated obtains the rights to "The Melting Pot," which features Walker Whiteside for the states of Illinois and Wisconsin.

Mr. Sawyer who has been with the Cort Company since severing his connections with Sawyer, Inc., arrived with the film in Chicago Monday afternoon, showed the picture to buyers in a leading theatre Wednesday and signed final papers Wednesday night.

The Cort Company has been holding this territory for big money as Mr. Whiteside has a tremendous following throughout the middle west. He played in "The Melting Pot" for seven months in the city of Chicago.

In an interview with Mr. Friedman, general manager of the Celebrated Players Film Company, Mr. Friedman said: "The price we paid for "The Melting Pot" is the highest paid for any feature film ever brought into this territory, not excepting Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter." We intend to handle "The Melting Pot" in much the same way as we did the Kellermann picture. We have signed a contract at a big rental with Alfred Hamburger, Chicago's leading motion picture theater owner, for an extended run at the Fine Arts Theater, where the Kellerman picture ran for six months. Mr. Hamburger thinks "The Melting Pot" will make a longer run than "Neptune's Daughter" did at the same theater. We wanted to buy "The Melting Pot" outright for this territory, but have compromised by giving to the Cort Company the biggest advance ever given for a feature in this territory. Our arrangement makes Mr. Cort and the Cort Film Corporation partners with us and we are very well satisfied with the arrangement. In the first three days after the announcement that we had secured the picture we received over five thousand dollars in applications for bookings but we will not close any bookings until after the opening at the Fine Arts on July 17."

This transaction means that practically two-thirds of the country is disposed of on this picture. Mr. Sawyer is still in Chicago and is negotiating for the sale of the Southern states which he expects to close within the next week.

"THE TOILERS" (Kalem).

"The Toilers" is undoubtedly one of the best of the "Ham" comedies. According to the story, Cupid claims poor Ham for his own the moment the latter lays eyes upon beauteous Marion Morton. The latter has come to look at some statuary done by Michael Cangelo.

A group showing a couple of gladiators in mortal combat, attracts Mrs. Morton's attention and she purchases it, requesting that the marble be delivered to her home that evening. Ham and Bud overhear this. They take a glance at the statue, a peek at the fair purchaser and then become buried in deep thought.

Scene from "The Toilers" (Kalem).

By the time an expressman calls for the marble, Ham and Bud have taken the places of the gladiators. The two are carted to Mrs. Morton's home and are placed behind a pair of portieres in the reception room. A butler chances to put some refreshments consisting of cake and sandwiches upon a table near the statue. The gladiators promptly come to life and devour the food.

The deception is discovered when the sculptor presently enters the room. Of course trouble galore ensues. There is no doubt that "The Toilers" is a worthy successor to the "Ham" comedies which have preceded it. Many will deem it the most laughable of all. This comedy will be released Tuesday, July 27th.

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY" (Lubin).

"The District Attorney," the five-reel Liberty Bell picture play, released in the V-L-S-E service on July 5th, gives petite Dorothy Bernard the opportunity to make her initial bow on the Big Four program.

George Soule Spencer plays the title role, supported by such well-known Lubin players at Charles Brandt, Peter Lang, Ruth Bryan, A. H. Van Buren, Rosetta Brice, Walter Law and Florence Williams.

"The District Attorney" was adapted for motion picture presentation from the well known stage play of the same name, written by Charles Klein and Harrison Grey Fiske. The action of the play evolves about the machinations of a grafting contractor, and the efforts of a public spirited District Attorney to protect the interests of the city.

The play is an excellen exposition of the dramatist's art in taking ordinary incidents in ordinary life, and embellishing them with the alluring touch of romance; the tense situations that occur in almost continual sequence furnishes an abundance of thrills of the plausible kind.

HARRY SCHWALBE GETS STANDARD PROGRAM.

Al Lichtman's sudden trip to Philadelphia last Saturday night before his subsequent jump to Chicago with Abe Warner and some sixty reels of new Standard Program releases, brought to light the fact that Harry Schwalbe, of the Electric Theater Film and Supply Company has signed a contract whereby he will control the Standard Program in his territory for a period of five years.

Harry Schwalbe has been prominently identified with large affairs in the Motion Picture Art since its inception, having sold out his original exchange to the General Film Co., remaining with it in the capacity of general manager. The fact that Mr. Schwalbe has tied up the Standard Program for his territory calls attention to the strenuous activity of the recently incorporated Standard Photoplay Producers.

"Man's Genesis"

Unusual One-Reel Biograph Re-Issue Directed by D. W. Griffith.

If for no other reason than the fact that the story of "Man's Genesis" breaks away from the conventional type of moving picture stories, this Biograph Re-issue will be welcomed by moving picture audiences.

In this picture we have portrayed for us, the physiological theory of the birth of the idea of the stone hammer by the cave-men of the prehistoric ages; and is presented so logically that the average observer is convinced of its authoritative value.

But aside from the educational value of the production, which in itself is enough to warrant its presence on any program, it is produced in a manner that offers unusual entertainment. In correction of detail and appropriate locations, the production is perfect. The acting of Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Wilfred Lucas, W. Christie Miller, Charles H. Mailes and W. C. Robinson, under the direction of D. W. Griffith, as well as the photography, need not call for any comment here, their work and ability are too well known to be questioned.

Suffice it to say that "Man's Genesis," as a whole, has a tone of individuality which stamps it as a credit to any program.

STANDARD PROGRAM SHOWN IN CHICAGO.

The Hotel Sherman in Chicago was the scene of the initial showing of Standard Pictures last week. President A. Warner, and Vice-President and General Manager Al. Lichtman, of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., made a flying trip to the Windy City, accompanied by prints representing the first four weeks of Standard Program releases, and gave a special showing of the one, two, and three reel pictures that will introduce the new program to the theater-going public.

A representative audience of well known exchange men attended the showing and were extravagant in their approval of the quality of film presented for their benefit. Joseph Hopp of Chicago was prominent in the gathering, as were also H. A. Spanuth, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Charles Berman, of Toronto, who controls the World Film output in Canada; Peckham and Wesh of the Kriterion Film Service of Detroit; C. E. Olson of the Wichita Film and Supply Company, which at one time controlled the Universal Program for that territory; Fred C. Amer, of Columbus, the pioneer exchange man of the Middle West, who was once identified with Universal affairs in his territory and is now presenting the large Griffith Features, and many other notable film men and theater owners.

"HONEST" HIRSH RUNS PIONEER.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 130 West 46th Street, of which Nathan Hirsh is the president, has been remarkably successful since its entry in the feature business. Mr. Hirsh is one of the oldest exhibitors in New York in point of service, and has managed his theaters in such a way as to render each house the favorite in its respective locality. While doing this, he has kept his eye on exchanges, taking particular notice of weak points in the conducting of same. He is now taking advantage of his experiences and observations, and is managing his exchange so it will be equally successful as his theatrical enterprises. Being an exhibitor himself, he knows what his customers want, and being a staunch believer in the "Golden Rule," he treats them in the identical manner as he wanted the exchanges to treat him. Honest representation and fair dealings is his motto, which is deeply impressed upon the minds of everybody connected with him. It did not take the exhibitors long to recognize this quality in Hirsh, hence "Honest Hirsh" is his attribute under which he is known, and which he righteously has merited.

Strong Poster Art

Vitagraph Intoduces It in the Exploitation of Big Features.

One of the most important details connected with the exploitation of the big multiple reel picture plays, is in the careful selection of posters. Several attempts have been made recently to turn out paper of a better quality than that in evidence on most film subjects, and one of the most distinctive lines of paper yet seen, is that gotten out by the Vitagraph Company for its V-L-S-E production, "The Island of Regeneration."

This paper was designed by Artist Popini, who has gained considerable reputation as a painter of strikingly unique features. Mr. Popini first viewed the film, and then painted the principal characters as they had impressed him.

Artist's Conception of Edith Story.

The result is a series of one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters that are gorgeous creations in all of the soft, warm pastel shades. The artist has made but slight attempt to portray likenesses, and has for the most part, eliminated the minor details in the back-grounds. He has idealized the figures, and suggested the back-grounds in combinations of colors and artistic drawings. His conception of Edith Storey in the position of posing on a rock, is particularly striking, and it has brought forth considerable praise and favorable comment from art critics and exhibitors alike.

Taken altogether, the entire line of paper forms an ensemble that is at once compellingly attractive, in its harmonious painting of colors, and convincing, in its interest-creating powers. There is no doubt that high grade paper of this sort will do much toward bringing to theaters increased patronage from the better class of the theater-going public.

GLOUCESTER "RED MEN" BOOK "AS YE SOW."

At Stage Fort Park, Gloucester, Mass., there was on July 5th, a Red Man's Cape Ann Day celebration, and the committee booked the World Film Corporation feature, Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow," for free exhibition to the public, which will be the first time that it has been locally shown.

"As Ye Sow" was made on the Gloucester Coast, and there was a very realistic wreck scene, before hundreds of onlookers. There were some narrow escapes from drowning by those who took part in the wreck. Many of the handsome mansions and summer homes of the district, as well as the Annisquam church are shown in the picture.

LIZZIE AND THE BEAUTY CONTEST (Nestro).

Al E. Christie has just completed a one reel comedy for the Nestor Company. The topic is particularly timely, dealing with the adventures of Victoria Forde as a candidate from "Weedville" in the Universal's Beauty Contest. Many of the scenes were taken in San Bernardino, where the company went to meet the Beauty Special. Others were taken at the Exposition in San Diego while the Beauties were there and the remainder were finished at the Universal City studios. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Harry Lyons and Gus Alexander play the other leading roles. The story will be released under the title, "Lizzie and the Beauty Contest."

"THE FIGHTING KID" (MinA).

Another of the remarkable photographic effects obtainable by the new Horsley double exposure camera, for the use of which MinA Films holds exclusive rights, is shown in this one reel comedy to be released Thursday, July 15, on the licensed program.

Throughout the greater part of the story, Jerry, the principal character, lives in fear of a bully whom he has vanquished when he (the bully) attempted to force his attentions upon an unwilling girl. Jerry has been visiting the girl he protected and as he leaves her home he spies the bully laying in wait to wreak revenge. Jerry stops dumbfounded and his limbs quake from fright as he sees the bully transformed into a group of seven, each shaking his fist menacingly. The vision is novel and mystifying and is accomplished by a very simple process with the new camera.

Aside from the photographic effect this release has the recommendation of being a comedy of many laughs, which is in itself quite sufficient.

The cast is made up of George Ovey, as Jerry, Ray Lincoln as the bully, Goldie Colwell, as the girl, Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully and others.

"THE MYSTIC JEWEL" (Majestic).

"The Mystic Jewel," the Majestic two reel production in which Charles West is featured, deals with the solution of a murder mystery under the most unusual circumstances.

The brothers Charles (Charles West who is featured) and John Burton (Joseph Hennaberry) quarrel over a stenographer (Signe Auen) whom John is to marry. They make up their quarrel, however, and toast the bride. They are in Charles' bachelor apartments.

The next morning Charles is found dead—apparently poisoned

Scene from "The Mystic Jewel" (Majestic).

—upon the floor, while John is unconscious. The police hear of the quarrel and arrest John, who revives, and the stenographer.

After the police have left the apartment the coroner's physician, who is also the family doctor, is left in the room to prepare his report. In a search through the apartment he finds a strange gem in a fantastic Oriental setting.

The jewel recalls to him memories of his own life in the Orient. He decides that Charles has been killed by means of a poison blowpipe. Some one had tried to get the jewel and had resorted to the unusual crime as one of the means of forcing access to the jewel. To get the criminal, the physician (Spottiswoode Aitken) calls in a newspaper editor friend and has a "story" printed to the effect that the doctor has an Oriental jewel of such and such description in his home. Thus the trap is set and baited.

A woman from out the East (Lucille Younge) goes to the doctor's office and tries to overcome him with a deadly blowpipe, but he has taken precautions so that he overpowers her and not she him.

She admits that she stabbed Charles in anger. He had stolen the mystic jewel from her years before.

The adventuress is taken to the police who are suspecting John and the stenographer to a "third degree." She confesses to the murder and then kills herself with a poisoned needle.

The production was made under the direction of Jack Conway. The interior settings are especially rich and atmospheric.

LOU TELLEGEN IN "THE EXPLORER."

Lou Tellegen, Broadway star and leading man for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt on her last two American tours, will make his debut as a photodrama star under the management of the Lasky Feature Play Company, in a film version of W. Somerset-Maugham's play, "The Explorer." Arrangements to this effect which were completed by cable by Samuel Goldfish, general manager of the Lasky Feature Play Company this week, brings together in a single artistic effort a producer, dramatist and actor each of whom occupies a distinctive niche in his country. Mr. Lasky is American in every sense of the word; Mr. Somerset-Maugham is English, and Mr. Lou Tellegen, artistically, at least, is of French training.

Under the personal direction of Cecil B. DeMille the work of the photodramatization in the Hollywood, Cal., studio of the Lasky Feature Play Company, will begin immediately. Mr. Lou Tellegen already is at Hollywood, enthusiastic over his first photoplay experience and impatient to begin rehearsals.

"OLD MOTHER GRAY" (Reliance).

The versatile "Teddy" Sampson is featured in "Old Mother Gray," a mid-July Reliance release, produced under the direction of Francis Powers. Miss Sampson is supported by Mrs. Josephine Crowell, William Lowery, Olga Gray and Bert Hadley.

Mother Gray (Mrs. Crowell) has a little toy shop. Madge (Teddy Sampson) is a newsgirl on the corner and Dan (William Lowery) is a policeman of good humor and great love for the children of the neighborhood.

Scene from "Old Mother Gray" (Reliance).

Madge discovers that Mother Gray is an heiress. She really is, but a ne'er-do-well nephew and his equally worthless wife appear and control the situation. They establish her and themselves in a house of luxury and eventually plot to have her adjudged insane. The sheer force of simplicity of character, which is Mother Gray's great attribute, sets at naught their scheme. Madge and Dan, too, come to her rescue

So in the end we find Mother Gray happy to spend her money just as she wishes—upon little children.

SIX POWER'S MACHINES IN GRAND CENTRAL PALACE.

The Grand Central Palace in New York City has been converted into three motion picture theaters. The Palace is one of the largest convention halls in this country and when it was decided to turn it into a series of motion picture theaters, six of the latest Power's motion picture projecting machines were installed. This is the largest installation of this kind of machinery ever made under one roof. Of these six machines, four project the pictures from the rear of the screen and the other two from the front. The hall is lighted at all times and the pictures stand out with the greatest definition and clearness. Will C. Smith had entire charge of the installation of these machines and he is receiving congratulations of the moving picture trade on his wonderful success.

Two Famous Novels

Biograph Announces Early Release of "Jane Eyre" and "East Lynne" in Three Reels Each.

The Biograph program for the week of August 2 will contain a strong three-reel production of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, "June Eyre," which, librarians assert, maintains its remarkable hold on the affections of readers everywhere. "Jane Eyre" will be the second three-reel Biograph to be released every other Wednesday in the regular service. It will be followed by "East Lynne," the story which made Mrs. Humphrey Ward famous and established a model for writers of tales with a heart throb in every chapter.

Strong, logical stories, lavishly produced, is the policy announced for these three-reel Biographs. "Under Two Flags," the first of these releases, conformed admirably to that policy, being produced with a wealth of detail and picturesque settings. "Jane Eyre" and "East Lynne" offer opportunities equally great, though of different character. And they have the merit of being familiar to almost every picture patron, thus affording the exhibitor an advertising opportunity of which he will be quick to avail himself.

"THE RENEGADE."

World Film Corporation will shortly present the five part photoplay, "The Renegade," based upon Paul Armstrong's drama of that name which had a successful career on the regular stage a few years ago.

Alice Brady is the star of the photodrama. She plays the part of Katie O'Day, a warm hearted girl of Irish extraction, who has a lover in a gallant young officer. A scheming widow sows dissension between them and a tribe of Indians headed by a renegade attacks the post and Katie and her family are in grave danger. However, they are rescued by Captain Lane and his troopers, and he and Katie are married.

The play is full of strongly marked characters. George Ralph plays the part of Sleeping Wolf, otherwise John Found, an educated Indian, who, however, reverts to the primitive when his tribal passions are aroused. A jealous mischief making widow, the trouble maker, attracts the love of the Indian and when she rejects him there is the devil to pay. There are a number of other Irish and Indian characters in the photoplay (cowboys and squaws) which has a refreshingly strong story that is bound to hold by its intensive interest.

Notes of the Trade.

GEORGE S. TRIMBLE, of the Lubin Company, was recently in this city for a few days and paid his first visit to the Screen Club. He has been with the Lubin picture makers for sixteen months and has been "on the boards" for twenty-three years.

Six more Essanay players have gone east to join the company headed by Joseph Byron Totten, to take scenes for plays requiring an eastern atmosphere, especially along the coast. The players who have just left the Chicago studios are June Keith, Richardson Cotton, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Alfred Gronnell, Hazel Daly and Marian Sullivan.

Melvin Mayo, in the role of Tim Carrigan, an old factory watchman, plays a strong part in the two reel drama, "The Old Watchman," just completed at the Western Lubin studio at Los Angeles, Cal. The story centers about a spendthrift son of a factory owner, who, coming into possession of the business, succeeds in upsetting things generally and bring disgrace on a number of people, including himself. Others in the cast are L. C. Shumway, Jay Morley, George Routh, Bob Gray and Helen Eddy.

Producer Irving Directing "Just Out of College" for the Frohman Amusement Co.

"A Dignified Family" is a thrilling three-act photoplay with the settings in the mountains at Chattanooga, Tenn. It has been produced by Essanay's company at Chattanooga in order to get a realistic setting and preserve all the individualistic atmosphere of the play. The beautiful scenery of the Tennessee mountains adds greatly to the charm of the play.

"A Day at Universal City," showing how a Nestor comedy directed by Al Christie is produced from the selection of the scenario to the final showing of the finished film is a unique feature of the Universal program.

Charles Chaplin and his company have moved from his temporary plant on Court street, Los Angeles, Cal., to the new Essanay studios on Boyle Heights. The Essanay-Chaplin company has been augmented by several new players. Besides the regular releases of one two-reel comedy every three weeks through the General Film Co, Mr. Chaplin will now produce a multiple reel feature. He is at present working on a six reel comedy which will be released as a special feature shortly. The special comedies will not interfere at all with the other releases.

In "The Awakening," a one reel Lubin drama, just completed by Romaine Fielding in Arizona, Fielding plays the part of a mine boss who returns from the city with a young, dainty and attractive bride. The life is distasteful to her and she develops a friendship with a young man from the the city. The climax comes when there is a bad explosion in the mine and the agent sacrifices his life to save the husband.

A convict thought by a little girl to be a fairy prince and who in reality turns out to be a prince of another fashion, furnishes the theme of "Her Fairy Prince," a Reliance production now close to completion at the Reliance-Majestic studios.

Violet Wilkey is the little girl, Maxfield Stanley, the fairy prince, Wilbur Higby, the Griffith character actor, a judge; William De Vaul a rascally lawyer, while Jennie Lee provides a bit of humor as an old Southern mammy.

Throughout the earlier portions of "Her Fairy Prince" visualizations of the little girl's belief in fairies are thrown upon the screen.

Julia Dean is out in California at the Universal City studios working on the first scenes of the big feature play which she is doing for the screen.

Essanay has just begun work on "The Man Trail," a six act feature photoplay written by Henry Oyen. It is a red blooded story of lumber camp life, with the rugged characters of the untamed woods. This story made a wonderful success when run as a serial in Adventure Magazine. The outdoor scenes will be taken at Starved Rock, Ill., one of the wildest and most picturesque spots in the country, to get local color and realistic action. It will be released through the V-L-S-E.

The management of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's sanatorium located at Mount MacGregor, Saratoga County, New York, have Just installed a pale gold Mirroroid screen.

Horace Davey and his company of Nestor comedians are at work on the production of a one reel comedy which promises laughs a-plenty, entitled "The Rise and Fall of Officer 13." Lee Moran plays the title role. Jack Dillon, Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns complete the cast.

Bryant Washburn fits easily and naturally into the curate's studio scenes in Essanay's six-act feature, "The Blindness of Virtue." He was brought up in the ministerial atmosphere. His uncle, the Rev. Dwight L. Moody, and other members of the family, tried hard to persuade him to enter the ministry, but Washburn convinced them that his talents better fitted him for the stage.

Allen Curtis, director of the Joker Comedy Company, has completed "A Dip in the Water," by Clarence Badger, and has started on the production of another by the same author entitled, "The Bashful Village Blacksmith." Max Asher, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock, William Franey and Arthur Moon play the leading roles.

"The Little Catamount," a Majestic production which is being finished at the Reliance-Majestic studios, was made in the San Bernardino Mountains when Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis with a company of Griffith players under the direction of Paul Powell went on burro back into the mountainous country.

Miss Gish and Mr. Lewis were supported by W. E. Lawrence, Frank Bennett and William Brown.

In "The Little Catamount," Dorothy Gish, is a little catamount and a little shrew, a moonshiner's daughter who drives off with her fists her would-be suitors.

Joseph DeGrasse has left the Universal City studios for the mountain country in the vicinity of Fallow's Camp, San Gabriel Canyon, near Los Angeles, where he is to stage the exteriors in two two-reel productions from the pen of Julius Furthman. The stories are being staged under the titles, "The Sheriff of Long Butte" and "Mountain Justice." Lon Chaney, Roy McCray, Elsie Jane Wilson and Arthur Shirley appear in the principal parts.

Charles West, who recently joined D. W. Griffith's Mutual stock company at Hollywood, will play the star part, that of an Italian, in the two reel Majestic drama, now in course of preparation. This will be good news to exhibitors who will remember that West's first great hit in the old Biograph days was made in a role of this description.

"Beppo the Barber," with Fay Tincher featured, is the latest Komic subject turned out at the Mutual studios. Beppo works in a barber shop and conceives the idea of disguising himself as a much heralded Duke who is about to seek the hand of Miss Kale, and, incidentally, her money. The Duke, however, is wanted by the police and this gets Beppo into all sorts of trouble. Miss Tincher plays the barber shop manicurist. Elmer Booth, Chester Withey, Max Davidson, Frank Darien and Louise Aichel appear. Edward Dillon directed.

The Smalleys are still at work on the production of Clara Louise Burnham's novel, "Jewel." Ella Hall appears in the title role with Rupert Julian, Hilda Sloman, Lule Warrenton, Miss Brownell, T. D. Crittenden and Dixie Carr comprising the remainder of the cast. Upon the completion of "Jewel," the Smalley company is to leave for Chicago where they will stage a number of exterior and interior scenes for an eight reel feature which will be released through the Universal program. Edna Maison is to accompany them as leading woman. The title of this feature has not yet been announced.

"The Motor Boat Bandits," with Irene Hunt in the leading role, is the latest production made under F. A. Kelsey's direction at the Hollywood studios. Miss Hunt plays the woman reporter. A hand to hand fight on a motor boat between Miss Hunt and a detective on the one hand and a crowd of crooks on the other makes one big scene. In another Felix Mojeska, as the detective, is bound, hand and foot, and thrown overboard. He finally succeeds in getting ashore. Ben Lewis and Catherine Henry are in the cast.

Teddy Sampson is playing the leading role in "The Hired Girl," a Majestic release in the Mutual program. As Sally Smith, a poor girl in the employ of the rich widow, Mrs. Smith, she takes it for granted that a newly arrived dress is intended for her and goes to a party in it. There she wins the love of an admirer of the widow's daughter and the plot thickens humorously. Joseph Belmont, Cora Drew, Mazie Radford, Charles Lee and Elmer Clifton are seen in Miss Sampson's support. Lloyd Ingraham directed.

An exceptional cast is engaged under the direction of George Siegmann at the Reliance-Majestic studios in filming "A Breath of Summer" which is to feature Charles Clary. Francelia Billington, Cora Drew, Olga Grey, William Hinckley and Joseph Landsberg are also in the cast.

The theme is that of a poor girl living in a congested factory district and laboring hard for her mother's sake. The girl writes appeals to the public in general for aid for her mother and sews them into the shirts which she makes. One falls into the hands of a wealthy bachelor, while he is fishing in the Adirondacks. He ultimately comes to the rescue but not until Agnes, the heroine, has had many trying experiences.

Francelia Billington is Agnes and the other principals are assigned to a number of effective roles.

Oscar C. Lund and his company of feature players have returned from a two weeks' stay in San Francisco, Majove and the Yosemite Valley where they have been photographing exterior scenes to be used in the production of Mr. Lund's first Universal release, "Just Jim," a thrilling four reeler dealing with the smuggling of Chinese into this country. Harry Carey, Jean Taylor, Mr. Edmundsen, Olive Golden, William Crinley, Duke Worne, J. F. Abbott and Mr. Loraine compose the cast.

"Thou Shalt Not Lie," is the title of a new Imp picture featuring Violet Mersereau.

"The Runaways" one of the Majestic juvenile productions which is under way at the Reliance-Majestic studios will maintain the high standard set by the younger artists, no one of whom is more than ten years old. In "The Runaways" Violet Radcliffe, George Stone and Carmen De Rue are principals.

"Chasing the Fast Mail" is the name of a startling two reel story of railroad life which Henry McRae and his company are staging at the Big U studios. The story was written especially for the McRae company by Julius Furthaman. The Principal roles are undertaken by Wellington Playter, Marie Walcamp, Sherman Bainbridge and Rex de Rosselli.

"The Empty Gun" is the suggestive title of a one reel story which Murdock MacQuarrie is staging at the Universal City studios. The story comes from the pen of the director-actor and promises thrilling situations a-plenty. Ada Gleasan, a recent arrival at Universal City, plays opposite Mr. MacQuarrie.

Essanay now is getting out a new publicity sheet devoted entirely to the V-L-S-E features. The first number has just been issued and is devoted entirely to "The Blindness of Virtue." One sheet will be issued every four weeks for each feature. The stories are all short and snappy and there are enough of them for a newspaper to use one every day for a month and more. This will not interfere with the regular organ of Essanay, the Essanay News, devoted to all its releases, which is being published as usual.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who recently completed work in his part playing opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," has gone to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he will take the leading role in "Affinities," the play by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, which is being produced by Essanay's southern company.

New Ad. Rates Promised

Illinois Daily Newspapers May Readjust Advertising Rates to Benefit Exhibitors —Same Charge for Shows as for Ordinary Advertising; But No More Free Press Stories—This May Not Satisfy the Exhibitors.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ADVERTISING rates for Illinois moving picture theaters may be readjusted and the exhibitor relieved of a burden which was designed for the shoulders of circus-managers and one-night stand theatrical attractions.

One of the leading dailies in Central Illinois is preparing to make a change in favor of the exhibitor, declared a member of its advertising department to a representative of The Moving Picture World. This paper has, since the advent of the photoplay into its territory, been securing a rate about twice that charged its clients in other lines. Free reading notices were scant at first, but gradually the policy relaxed, until liberal space was devoted to synopses of the films. The rule has been an inch of readers for an inch of display, but because competition was keen among local papers this rule has been practically void.

Under the new plan the rate will be about equal to that paid by other advertisers who use a specified amount of space daily, but the free readers will be discontinued.

This change is not entirely satisfactory to all exhibitors. Some photoplay men regard the notices in the news columns as more valuable than the display space. The synopses are regarded as "criticisms" or legitimate news, and are not "plastered" with the word "advertisement" as the postal laws demand of all advertisements. The best thing so the managers view it—is that the copy handed in by the theater manager generally is used. One exhibitor in particular has always used a larger display space than he felt he needed because he said the increased readers under the 'inch for inch" plan was really profitable publicity.

The advertising men refer to the meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association at Asheville, N. C., where moving picture advertising was discussed. A. F. Sanford, of the Knoxville Journal and Tribune, who spoke on the subject, favored a lower rate for moving picture houses than had been in force for the theatrical attractions, but advocated the elimination of the free notices. He also thought there should be some uniformity in the preparation of copy.

ELGIN OPERATORS' UNION ASKS FOR LICENSES.

Differences between the managers and operators in Elgin did not smooth over as was predicted by both sides some time ago. Three union operators called on city officials and asked that a city ordinance be passed requiring the examination and licensing of operators. Managers, it is said, had agreed to grant wage demands of the operators, but not to recognize the union. The action of the operators was explained by them as due to the fact that the managers of two houses had discharged their operators and replaced them with relatives. It was inferred the relatives were not competent. Elgin operators belong to the Aurora branch of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees.

BUNTS AND BINGLES BY ILLINCIS FILM MEN.

The Gem and Savoy at Quincy played safety-first and when smallpox became epidemic announced their houses would be thoroughly fumigated every 24 hours under the supervision of the city health department. Daily Union carriers at Rock Island saw "Pretty Mrs. Smith" as the guests of Manager Quinn, of the Majestic. The entire Sixth Regiment Band was out at Monmouth to boost their benefit at the Princess. As the attraction was the start of "The Broken Coin," the house will profit in the long run. The Star at Mt. Vernon played "The Christian" for two days. "Rip Van Winkle" at the Princess in Canton was a benefit for the local Associated Charities. Interest in "Jane's New Job," a local made for the Fox at Aurora, was stimulated by showing in the lobby, day by day, scenes as the production progressed. The work was done by the Beaver Photoplay Company, of Chicago. The Knights of Pythias at Monticello rented the Princess and the Airdome to show "Damon and Pythias." The new Lyric at Morrison gave a benefit for the baseball team.

The Hoyburn at Evanston gets a new twist in ventilation advertising with "Remember the Big Blower Fan and its two brother exhaust fans are always on the job." "Tipperary" was shown at the Majestic at Rushville for the benefit of the library association. Women of the P. E. O. Sisterhood sponsored "The Lion and the Mouse" at Dreamland in Farmington. The Grand at Rockford is selling a book of twelve tickets for 50 cents.

GOES BACK TO TEN CENTS.

The novelty of the "jitney" style of entertainment has worn off, announces the Empress theater at Peoria, and hereafter that house will play a better class of pictures at 10 and 5 cents.

EGG DAY AT THE BIJOU.

Hanes Brothers, of the Bijou at Salem, are attracting attention by charging one egg admission every other Saturday. The following rules helped the scheme along:

1. Don't break your way in.
2. Scrambling for admission will not be permitted. We want the eggs whole.
3. Step lightly; remember you are walking in on eggs.
4. Don't say the show is rotten, unless you are sure your egg isn't.
5. "Hen parties" are especially appropriate on "egg days."

"Potato nights," when children under 16 were admitted for a spud of specified dimensions, was a variation.

FILMS AT METHODIST CHURCH EVERY DAY.

Another Elgin church, the Grace M. E., has installed a motion picture machine. Rev. George Gable, the pastor, explained:

"This innovation follows the conviction that the church thereby may better serve the public. Clean comedy and educational films will be used on week nights, and moral and religious subjects will feature the Sunday evening services. Sunday and most week nights services will be free to all. Occasional offerings may be taken.

OF INTEREST IN ILLINOIS.

H. M. Pindell, editor of the Peoria Journal, is said to be the state administration's candidate for governor next year. Nevertheless, the paper urged the veto of the censorship bill, calling it "a mere device for providing more state jobs."

Danville's Sunday theater ordinance has been reported favorably by the council committee, but was put to sleep for a while because some changes had been made.

Theilen & Goldberg have taken a new five-year lease on the Majestic at Bloomington, and $2,500 will be expended in redecorating this summer.

J. T. Clayton, who has been manager for the Colonial Amusement Company at Mt. Carmel, has gone to Harrisburg to manage the company's theaters there. W. B. Steckler, who has been at Harrisburg, has resigned to go into business for himself.

Manager Slater, of the opera house at Bowen, has opened the Majestic, a motion picture airdome there.

A motion picture show has been opened in the town hall at Camargo.

Harm Hinrichs will erect a brick motion picture theater, 160x28, at Minonk.

A. H. Geddes, of Rock Falls, has started a circuit of motion picture shows, playing twice a week at Hillsdale, Harmon and West Brooklyn.

Emil & Alvin Johnson, who operate two photoplay theaters in Rockford, have opened an airdome in that city.

Clarence Irwin's new theater on East Jefferson street in Bloomington, to be opened some time in August, will be named the Irwin.

C. W. Jolhrendt has opened the Princess, a new motion picture theater, in the Kratz building at Monticello.

The Hippodrome at Alton has engaged Rene L. Beck, organist at St. Peter's Cathedral in Belleville, to play its organ. There will be no rag-time.

DON'T LIKE CHOSEN SHOWS.

By A. M. Beatty, Georgia Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT is said that the children of Atlanta have not patronized the moving pictures especially censored and selected for them by the Woman's Club of Atlanta, and put on every Saturday morning at the Grand theater. Especially is this true for the past three weeks.

The themes were selected from the standpoint of interest and amusement. The children at first attended in large numbers, crowding the theater, but within the last few weeks the patronage has become so limited that the management and the Woman's Club committee are confronted with the question:

Unless more interest is shown by parents and children, this to be measured by the attendance the next few weeks at the Saturday morning pictures, those in authority will be discouraged in their effort to continue a recreative feature.

SUNDAY SHOWS FOR CHARITY.

Three moving picture theaters, the Strand, the Montgomery and the Almo No. 2 were open all day Sunday. Through the courtesy of their managers, benefit performances were given for Libby Circle, King's Daughters, and Son of Georgia. The Sunday performances began at 10 A. M. and closed at 10 P. M. First-class pictures were shown at each theater. While no admission fee was charged, donations were received at the door, and many Atlantians availed themselves of this opportunity to aid the several organizations.

GLADYS HANSEN TALKS ABOUT SCREEN ACTING.

Gladys Hanson, who has returned to Atlanta from New York for a two months vacation at the home of her father, P. H. Snook, 103 Cleyburne avenue, Copenhill, talked in an interview this week of the stage, of her experience in moving pictures and of the hard road to success.

"I like moving picture work," she said, "I didn't find it so different from the stage as to make it difficult; there is this difference—in the spoken play the lines lead your audience up to what is to happen, while in motion pictures, since nothing can be uttered, this preparation is harder; for this reason one must always keep in mind the need of leading up to every climax.

"You must not confuse or shock your audience; they must be prepared; I do not mean they must know just what is to happen; but when it does happen they must know just how and why it was done.

"I would call moving picture acting an intensified form of stage acting. In both you eliminate as many gestures as possible. In pictures you depend more on the expression. You must look what you are supposed to feel; it must be a case of the inner feeling being given an outward facial expression.

"There are difficulties, however, in moving pictures. The hours are long, and you jump from scene to scene. They don't build up in pictures as we do on the stage. Suppose four scenes have the same setting and yet are far apart in time and incident. They are made at the same time for the sake of convenience. I don't believe moving pictures wil ever realize their full possibiltities until scenes are made in succession, regardless of the settings.

"I intend to continue playing in moving pictures, as an addition to my theatrical work. But I shall never give my time only to moving pictures. I would refuse now to sign a contract prohibiting my playing at the same time in moving pictures.

"Anything," she said, "is hard work, and that includes moving picture work, if you succeed. You walk over hot stones to success. In pictures and in the theater, it means piling work on work. To do your work well may make you content, but not always happy. I don't think many of the successful people are what you would call really happy.

"But I'm real sure the most pleasant part of the year's experience is being home. A week before I left New York I was wearing furs, not to be stylish, but to be comfortable. And here you have this delightful weather. Is it any wonder then that the Southerner wherever and whenever the band strikes up "Dixie" goes wild over it—it must be the remembrance of this delightful weather."

BREVITIES IN ATLANTA.

Mary Fuller plays this week on the screen at the Alpha theater in "Mary of the Circus," while the real Mary Fuller is in Savannah, Ga., filming "Under Southern Skies."

Work is progressing rapidly on F. T. Montgomery's new theater on Peachtree at North avenue—the Regent. It is thought this theater will open its doors in about ten days. The Regent while not being elaborately finished, will be very attractive in its handsome front and white marble foyer. The aisles are to be wide, with plenty of room between the seats. A program will be arranged that will be appealing to the ladies and children, none but clean, instructive pictures being shown. Nothing of a daring nature will be put on the screen.

NASHVILLE NOTES.

The Nashville papers are now announcing in advance at which parks the free motion pictures, provided by the Board of Park Commissioners, will be shown. These pictures are all of high quality and are proving very popular with the people of Nashville.

At Springfield, Tenn., Steve Holland, of Nashville, Tenn., has leased a building adjoining the Bonita theater, and will combine the two structures. A stage will be erected at the rear of the house and when completed the theater will have a seating capacity of 600. M. S. Mortan will be manager of the new house.

Marr & Holman, of Nashville, Tenn., have about completed the plans for the Sixth Avenue Property Company, of which J. H. Howe is general manager. The plans call for a theater and store building which will extend through the block from Sixth avenue to Capitol Boulevard. The theater will be 50x150 feet and of fireproof construction. A gravel roof and concrete floors will be installed. Washed air will be used in cooling the house.

At the Star theater, of Nashville, a colored motion picture house on Cedar street, a four-reel war picture was recently shown. The negroes appeared to be genuinely interested in the big conflict and good crowds were in attendance. One half of the proceeds of the pictures goes to the Belgian Relief Fund.

New Theater Promised

Chattanooga Amusement Company Files Application for Charter—Object Is to Erect a New Theater—Whether Film or Vaudeville House Not Yet Divulged —One of Applicants Promises the Biggest House in the City.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DEVELOPMENTS in Chattanooga may shortly have considerable effect on the theatrical business of the city. Application for a charter was made recently by the Signal Amusement Company. Charter members, interviewed as to the proposed developments, were very reticent as far as direct assertions were concerned. It is acknowledged, however, that the new company represents Atlanta and Nashville capital, and that in all probability two theatrical ventures will be started soon, one of which will be motion pictures and the other vaudeville. The company is capitalized at $5,000 by W. E. Howell, of Atlanta, F. H. Dowler, Jr., Edwin Healey, Clifford Swift and Barnett S. Andrews. Mr. Howell stated that he was not connected in any way with the Jake Wells theatrical interests of Atlanta, Ga.

"While we expect to do something soon," Mr. Howell said, following the filing of the charter, "I am not yet prepared to go into details nor mention the probable location of a new theater for moving pictures and probably vaudevile. We will probably erect a new house and if we do it will be the largest in Chattanooga. If we exhibit vaudeville it will be of the highest class ever shown in the city." It has been stated that the new theater would be a ten, twenty and thirty cent house, while contradictory reports state that vaudeville bookings of the better class will entail admission charges of 25, 50 and 75 cents.

JERE AUSTIN SELLS HIS CAR.

The sale of a $5,000 automobile for $1 may sound somewhat like a fish tale, but that is exactly what happened following a smash-up on Signal mountain, in which the machine in question figured. The car, which was owned by Jere Austin, lately with the Kalem Motion Picture Company, but now with the American Film Company, was disposed of to Cobb Hays, of the Essanay Company, for a consideration of $1. The paper of transfer was shown to several persons, including some of the Chattanooga reporters.

Several moving picture men figured in the smash-up, which occurred in front of the Signal Mountain Hotel, shortly after 5 o'clock in the evening of June 20. Jere Austin and Joseph Gossman, of the Kalem company's Jacksonville, Fla., office, accompanied Henry Walker and Cobb Hays, of the Essanay Company, seated in a sixty horsepower Stearns machine, driven by Austin, were approaching the hotel by way of the Crest road at a high rate of speed when the steering gear gave way while making a turn, and he was barely able to keep from crashing into the crowded verandah of the hotel.

He crashed into a tree on the lawn, knocking off a front wheel and badly damaging the front of the machine. Gossman suffered a bruised leg and was the only person in the car that was injured. The occupants probably owe their escape to the fact that no one tried to jump.

Austin and Grossman were making a trip from Jacksonville to Chicago by automobile for the purpose of inspecting the roads and testing the actual number of running hours required to make the trip. They came to Chattanooga from Jacksonville in twenty-four hours, intending to spend the evening with a number of friends who are spending the summer with the Essanay Company, which is making pictures on Signal Mountain this summer. Following the accident, Austin announced that he would sell the "darned machine for one bean" and Cobb Hays at once took him up, with the consequence that for once in history a high-priced car was sold for the sum of $1. Gossman afterward stated that he didn't mind getting wrecked, but it was hard luck when the camera man failed to be in the immediate vicinity.

DECHERD OPERA HOUSE OPENS.

At Decherd, Tenn., the Decherd Opera House, a new theater, has just been opened as a motion picture theater. The first performance was given on June 22 to a well filled house. The new house is very attractively arranged throughout, including both interior and exterior. The interior is arranged with panels along the walls in which are set imported paintings. The seats are upholstered in leather with silk plush backs. A commodious stage is equipped with a handsome curtain and expensive scenery for special plays. The latest type of moving picture machines have been installed and good film service and a good operator are working wonders. So far the theater has been well supported by the people of the town.

VENDOME A FIVE-CENT HOUSE.

Finding a strong demand in Nashville for five-cent motion picture shows, and noting a falling off in patronage due to warm weather, the management of the Vendome has decided to reduce prices to a "jitney" throughout the summer. Heretofore the entire lower floor was ten cents while the balcony and gallery were five cents. The theater will continue operating as a feature playhouse and the same character of shows will be given at the reduced price. The Mutual Masterpiece, "Her Shattered Idol," was the first picture shown after the change in policy.

THE SAM DAVIS PICTURE.

A rather interesting development is noted concerning the recently made "Sam Davis" pictures which were made in and around Nashville, Tenn. It seems that J. H. Ragsdale and associates, of Pulaski, Tenn., already had a copyright on a Sam Davis photoplay, and these men are now negotiating with one of the largest and best equipped producing companies in the country to produce a Sam Davis picture in accordance with their copyright play.

Pulaski was the scene of the trial and execution of the Confederate soldier Sam Davis, who is immortal in Tennessee, and the Pulaski people prepared a scenario covering the entire story, and this with pictures representing each scene has been copyrighted. On the other hand the Nashville people produced their film in and around Nashville. When the two parties learned of the existence of the other, some advances were made looking forward to a consolidation, but it is understood that so much of the Nashville film is not available that the Pulaski promotors will proceed as originally planned.

W. B. Romine, who wrote the scenario for the Pulaski parties, objects especially to two of the scenes in the Nashville film. One of these scenes represents Sam Davis and members of his family dyeing a blue coat brown. Later Davis goes away with this coat and the inference is that he used it to disguise himself. The facts are that Davis wore his gray uniform, and efforts were made to save his life on the ground that he was a scout in uniform, entitled to all of the considerations shown a prisoner of war, and not a Confederate spy. The other scene which is regarded as objectionable is that in which a young country woman, a friend of Sam Davis, drinks wine with a Federal officer until the officer becomes drunk and the young woman secures some valuable information which she conveys to Sam Davis.

Pictures Are God-Given

Oklahoma Pastor Believes in Moving Pictures—Tells Why Church People Are Opposed to Influence of the Screen—Things That Are New Are Always Feared —Pictures Meeting the Demand of Modern Life.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

"THE moving picture is of divine origin," declared Rev. O. A. Wright, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Muskogee, in the most remarkable sermon ever delivered in defense of the photoplay.

The minister took for his text, "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?" He opened by declaring that theology had always been opposed to science. He declared that the people who controlled the church opposed the theory of evolution because it would not agree with the Bible; how the science of geography was opposed because it taught the world was round; how the science of astronomy was opposed because it taught the stars were planets instead of "lights tended by the angels;" how the science of geology was opposed because it would not harmonize with the story of creation and flood; how the science of medicine was opposed because of its seeming magic, and how, finally, the scientific invention, the moving picture, is being opposed by the church.

"The moving picture," he said, "is wielding such a great influence that the old 'spirit of the inquisition' is being aroused. Preachers who have not had time to cope with the proposition and who do not understand it, can only denounce it, call it 'a child of hell,' 'an institution of the devil, or something of that sort.

"The moving picture is of divine origin. There is not a single thing about it that belongs to the devil, who, by the way, is only another product of the poetical imagination. The mechanical laws, the laws of light, the laws of chemistry, all the laws of the moving picture are the laws of God.

"The trouble with theology is that it is trying to adjust the life of a busy world in tune with the words of the Bible, an essentially pastoral book. We are living in an advanced age. We need an advanced system of entertainment and education. The moving picture is the only institution that has met the demand. We haven't the time to stop and read long descriptions of the world and what is going on about us, yet we must know things to take rank with our fellow men.

"In comedy, drama and romance we are led to see and understand how humanity lives in real life today and at every other period. Natural history, lessons in science and scenes of travel are brought to us. This, too, at a paltry price.

"Shall we annihilate the institution which has been and is now the arch enemy of the saloon? Nickels and dimes that would otherwise go into the coffer of the saloonkeeper or the bootlegger now are used to take wife and children to the picture show. Husband and father spends the evening with the family. A kind father and a happy home instead of a drunken brute and a hovel.

"What shall we do with the Sunday picture show, is asked? Let it run! Make it clean and instructive until the church can furnish a better means of taking care of the young people and others who seek a place of enjoyment and entertainment. The Sunday picture show should be used and not destroyed. I heard a preacher say once that we get out of a thing about what we look for, and he is about right. Let us look for the good."

The Courtland Amusement Company, of Courtland, O., recently had a representative in Louisville, who purchased from the Owl Feature Film Company, two features, namely "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" and the "Passion Play."

Profitable Publicity

Louisville Photoplay House Managed by Mrs. William H. Shelly Gives Special Reduced Rates of Admission to Organizations in the City—One Day It Is Some "Home," Then Employes of Local Merchants—Good Advertising.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPECIAL reduced prices of admission to inmates of local charitable institutions and employes of mercantile firms were made by Mrs William H. Shelly while presenting "Mr. Barnes of New York," a moving picture drama which was shown at Macauley's theater, the highest price regular theater in the city. The special rates applied to inmates of the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, on Tuesday afternoon; to the Newsboys' Home, on Wednesday afternoon; the School of Reform, Thursday afternoon, and the Kings' Daughters, on Friday afternoon. Employes of local stores were given cheaper rates at the various night performances.

Exhibition dances by Jack Martin and sister were added attractions at the Saturday shows. A huge ten-foot figure of a woman, in which the motor power consisted of a man, was used by Mrs. Shelly around the streets and attracted considerable attention.

A SUCCESSFUL ROAD SHOWMAN.

J. E. Morris, of New Albany, Ind., was recently in Louisville, where he purchased twenty-eight reels of film for use with his road show. Mr. Morris has been exceptionally fortunate with his road shows, but it is a question of good management more than anything else which has attributed to his success. He buys his films outright and carries forty to fifty reels so that he is able to play in one town for several days without having to worry whether or not he is on a railroad or whether supplies will reach him. When he goes into a town the first thing he does is to arrange with one of the churches to give it a certain percentage of the profits. The church workers get busy and take a real interest in the show which would be lacking otherwise. The reels are swopped and new ones purchased from time to time so that a new series is always on tap when a town is played the second time.

COMPLIMENTARY TICKETS.

The spencer Amusement Company, lessees of the Walnut theater of Louisville, has had large quantities of complimentary tickets printed and these tickets are occasionally distributed liberaly. One of the favorite stunts is to place a large stack on the cashier's desk at the Thompson & Company's restaurant. Nearly everyone who comes up to pay for his meal will pick up one or more of the tickets, which are only good until a certain date, stamped on the ticket. The restaurant is an especially good place to attract transient trade which will only be in town a few days perhaps. The theater's policy is a big show for five cents, and complimentary tickets have been found a good means of creating new patrons.

FLY PICTURE STILL USEFUL.

The general crusade against germ-carrying flies has brought out a strong demand for pictures showing the proper way in which to exterminate the pests. At the request of the Highland Civic Club, the film, "The Fly," was recently shown at the East Broadway, Baxter, West Broadway and Ideal theaters. Fly-swatters were presented free of charge to all persons who viewed the film.

SEAT COMPANY REORGANIZED.

The entire property of the Bennett Seating Co. was recently sold at public auction by the officers of the local bankruptcy court following an involuntary petition in bankruptcy filed against the company a few weeks ago. George W. Bennett and associates purchased the entire equipment at the sale and at once incorporated the Bennett Seating Company, which will go ahead with the manufacture of moving picture, theater, school and church seats. The new company is incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 under the laws of Kentucky, while the old concern was an Ohio corporation, and formerly had its headquarters at Cincinnati. The stock is divided into 100 shares of the par value of $50 and the company is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed its capital. Officers of the concern are George W. Bennett, president; Hattie T. Bennett, vice-president, and William M. Dorsey, secretary and general manager. Miss Georgia M. Ludwig, formerly connected with the Kinnemacolor Company's Louisville office, but for the past year in business at Knoxville, has taken charge of the office of the company.

HEARD IN LOUISVILLE.

The Majestic Amusement Company, of Louisville, has taken out a permit to spend $500 in improvements to the front of the theater on Fourth avenue.

The Kerrigan theater, of New Albany, Ind., recently inaugurated what was known as "Potato Day" at the theater. This is an old custom with some of the theaters in other sections, but was a new stunt in the Louisville, Ky., vicinity. A novelty matinee was given on a certain Saturday afternoon at which the admission charge was placed at a potato and a penny. The house was packed all afternoon, and it was later stated that Joe H. Kraft, probation officer, of New Albany, distributed four barrels of potatoes among the poor of the city. Some people, in an effort to help a good cause, brought a peck or more of potatoes in sacks.

George Stockton, the new manager of the Novelty, of Louisville, played to good houses while he had the film "Should a Woman Divorce,' in which Lea Leland takes the principal part in the five reeler.

July 1 was set as the time at which construction would start on a new motion picture theater to be erected at Fairmont, W. Va., by J. D. Galliher and William Prince. The theater will be located on Jefferson street.

Manager Bartlett, of the Lyric, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., has just completed the installation of a high-grade Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra in the popular moving picture theater. Extra fans have been installed in the theater and the management so far has been able to keep the temperature at a comfortable point.

The Pastime, of Maysville, Ky., which was recently closed following an attachment of a portion of its equipment, has reopened for business with first-run pictures and a twelve-piece orchestra.

E. K. Lyon, of Lexington, Ky., who operates motion picture theaters in Lexington and Frankfort, has leased the Queen theater, of Winchester, Ky., and has reopened the house, which has been closed for several months. "The Christian" was the first program featured under Mr. Lyon's management.

John L. Shrode, formerly manager of the Rex, of Hopkinsville, Ky., has announced that he will move to Owensboro, Ky., to take charge of two theaters, the Queen and Empress, purchased by Mr. Shrode and other Hopkinsville capitalists from George A. Bleich. Mr. Bleich will go to Louisville to continue the moving picture business.

The Colonial, of Horrodsburg, Ky., was re-opened on Thursday, June 17, and is now showing Famous Player films at admission prices of five and ten cents, with a change of program twice a week.

Censors Change Decision

Ohio State Board of Censors Refused to Permit Exhibition of "The Devil's Daughter," a Fox Production—A. M. Muller Got Endorsement from Many Spectators at Private View—Then Censor Board Reconsidered Its Ruling.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Cincinnati representative of the Fox Film Corporation, A. M. Muller, is the latest film man to have his troubles with the Ohio censors, and for a time the action of the board threatened extremely serious consequences to one of the recent Fox features, "The Devil's Daughter," featuring Theda Bara, a Cincinnati girl, and for that reason of more than usual interest here, was the production which came in for a share of the censors' wrath.

Scheduled last week as the feature at the Grand, the production was held up by a belated announcement from the Board that the exhibition of the film would not be permitted, either in Cincinnati or elsewhere in the State of Ohio. Mr. Muller, naturally somewhat perturbed at this unexpected ruling, held a private exhibition, for the purpose of getting a line on what public feeling locally would really be like, and was rewarded by a virtually unanimous report from the private audience that there was nothing objectionable in the picture.

He thereupon voluntarily deleted about 300 feet, out of the thousand or so which the censors had designated as being objectionable, and resubmitted the picture to the board, urging the fact that ordinary people found nothing objectionable in it, and pointing out the heavy losses which the producers would necessarily sustain if the fim were ruled out. Upon reconsidering the matter in this light, the Board very accommodatingly reversed its ruling, which, apparently, had none too substantial a foundation, and the film was consequently scheduled for this week at the Grand.

There is nothing in it calling for such drastic action as that originally indicated by the board. Incidentally, it is stated that the board's radical action in condemning this film, taken in connection with some other rulings believed to be unjustifiable, has given fresh strength to the movement to fight censorship in its present form in the courts, and that an effort will shortly be made to test out the law again.

ASKS RECEIVERSHIP FOR FILM ADVERTISING COMPANY.

Edward H. Thompson, one of the prominent stockholders in the International Film Products Co, of Cincinnati, has filed suit in the insolvency court asking that a receivership be instituted for the company. Mr. Thompson asserts that although he originally leased the premises on Clifton and Dixmyth avenues, he assigned the lease to the company, which has since referred the landlord to him for rent, personally; and he declares, further, that dissensions have arisen in the company, and among the officers, to such an extent that it is impossible for them to agree upon the conduct of the business. It seems that the plant has been closed for this reason, and that the business of the company has virtually been suspended; hence the application for a receivership. The company has for some time been more or less prominent in this vicinity as one of the concerns specializing on advertising films and similar work, and was supposed to be enjoying a prosperous business.

SLUM MOTHERS SEE FRESH AIR CHILDREN IN FILMS.

Moving pictures of an unusual and highly enjoyable nature, judging by the pleasure with which they were received, were the feature of a recent evening's entertainment at the Cincinnati Jewish Settlement, conducted under the auspices of the Jewish Infant Welfare Circle. Before many mothers living in a crowded district of the city, with their children, pictures of scenes at the various fresh-air farms conducted around the city for the babies of the poor were shown. City youngsters at play on the farms aroused high enthusiasm among the youngsters present, many of whom will themselves figure in such pictures during this summer. The organization has found moving pictures extremely useful, not only in inducing the mothers to turn their children over to it for care in the hot months, but in arousing interest on the part of those who can help.

SPOONS WITH THE PLAYERS.

A Cincinnati newspaper has made a big hit with its readers by the sale of souvenir spoons bearing the names and near-likenesses of some of the famous moving picture stars, including, recently, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin. A number of local theaters co-operated in the movement, deriving therefrom some valued publicity. These theaters included the Clifton, the Findlay, the Americus, the Royal and the Pike, of Covington, the Amusement, of Newport, the Norwood Airdome, the Nordland Plaza and the Burnet. Spoons could be had at these theaters, and the managers report that there was a surprisingly active demand for them.

WANT FILM MEN IN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

A special committee of local moving picture exhibitors met last week with Secretary C. A. Norton, of the membership committee of the Chamber of Commerce, for the purpose of going over plans to bring the exhibitors' organization into the Chamber. As a result of this conference and others, plans have been perfected under which a strong committee, representing not only the exhibitors now in the organization, but the Chamber of Commerce itself, will visit every exhibitor in this vicinity, and it is believed that there will be very few who will fail to see the desirability of the double affiliation now offered.

CINCINNATI JOTTINGS.

The management of the Columbia theater, at Marion, O., recently secured added interest in its exhibition of "The Unafraid," by pointing out that Rita Jolivet, appearing in the film, is one of the survivors of the Lusitania, and that she was beside the late Charles Frohman when the ship sank.

One of the best of the new V-L-S-E features seen in Cincinnati so far was shown last week at the Lubin, which has the first-run of these pictures. It was "The College Widow," George Ade's famous comedy done into pictures for the first time, and the numerous opportunities for first-class work, such as the foot-ball game, were taken advantage of so fully that the film was found highly successful.

MANAGERS GIVE IN.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of M. P. W.

THE slight disturbance caused in local motion picture circles several days ago by the demands of the Salt Lake Federated Musicians that managers of motion pitcure theaters at once install union musicians in the orchestra pits or take from the operating boxes their union operators, resulted in a complete capitulation of the managers to the musicians' demand. That is, with the exception of the Rex theater. Manager Wilson, of the house in question failed to see the reasonableness of the musicians' demand that a union man be employed to feed perforated rolls to the automatic music-maker used at that house. The result has been that Manager Wilson, who once was an operator, clambered into his steel box and has been turning the crank of his projection machine. The Mehesy, Broadway and Isis theaters complied with the demands of the musicians' organization.

VISITORS AT SALT LAKE.

Among the notables to visit Salt Lake this week were Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players Company; W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and Mary Pickford.

Miss Pickford was en route to New York from Hollywood, Cal., and her brief visit to Salt Lake consisted of a few minutes' breathing spell on the platform of the Oregon Short Line station. She held an informal reception to a score or so Salt Lake friends and business associates. Accompanying Miss Pickford were her mother, Manager Hammer, Al Kaufman, Allen Dwan, Julian Eltinge and Mr. Eltinge's father.

NEW COMPANY TO MAKE EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

The American Ployscope Company, recently organized in Salt Lake and incorporated under the laws of the State of Utah with a capital stock of $500,000, $200,000 of which has been reserved for future development work, will begin operations early in July with a trip through the Yellowstone National Park and the Snake River valley in Idaho and Wyoming. It is the announced plan of the company to film educational subjects exclusively, and a large market is claimed for this sort of production.

The main offices of the company are in Salt Lake City, and in addition to the ordinary equipment and paraphernalia, the company has a long time lease on Majestic Park, where there are several large buildings suited to the special needs of a motion picture manufacturing concern. Officers of the company are: J. E. Langford, president; J. J. Ford, vice-president and general manager; F. L. Palmquist, secretary, and George W. Derr, treasurer. The board of directors consists of Mr. Langford, Mr. Ford, Mr. Palmquist, Mr. Derr, C. G. Morgan and W. R. Calvert.

BEAUTY SPECIAL MADE STIR GOING THRCUGH.

Salt Lake's equilibrium was considerably disturbed and the waters of the Great Salt Lake were threshed about a bit by a whole carload of beautiful girls who dropped in for a day's visit during the past week.

FILM SHOWS AT EMPRESS.

The Empress Theater, Salt Lake, a Loew circuit house, has gone in for motion pictures in dead earnest—at least during the summer months, and some of the best features to be seen in the city are being flashed on the Empress screen.

HEARD IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Two new theaters are projected for Pocatello, Ida., and, according to the faint glimmerings of plans and specifications which have been wafted into Salt Lake, will be among the finest theaters in Idaho. It is understood that contracts have been let and that construction will be completed within a short time.

The Utah Theater in Salt Lake, which had been looked upon as a motion picture possibility since it closed early last season after a disastrous stock musical comedy venture, will be opened early in August as a legitimate stock theater under the direction of Miss Maud May Babcock, of the University of Utah faculty. Miss Babcock and her manager, D. W. Cummings, will endeavor to present high class royalty plays at popular prices, which, according to past records in Salt Lake, is somewhat a venturesome venture. So far as announced, their plans do not call for the use of motion pictures.

The Garrick Theater, which reopened a few short weeks ago under its old name—the Grand—as a combination motion picture-vaudeville theater, has again come to grief. The usual conclusion to a highly press-agented venture was the disappearance of the manager with a considerable pile of gate receipts—just when the actors were feeling disturbed over back salaries.

STEEL CITY SPARKS.

Fred Zweifel, who has been manager of the Davis theater since it opened about three months ago, has resigned that position and will probably leave Pittsburgh. Mr. Zweifel has made numerous friends in the Smoky City and they all express their sincere regrets in his leaving. He is a well-known showman, being formerly manager of the "Peg o' My Heart" company.

The new owners of the Winner theater, 716 E. Ohio street, Pittsburgh, Messrs. Raeder & Landau, have purchased a Wurlitzer Orchestra Piano, style CX, and had it installed last week. Mr. Raeder said that the audiences are continualy expressing their satisfaction with the music.

Denham Palmer, East-Central division manager of the World Film Corporation, is a very welcome visitor in Pittsburgh this week. He is here for the purpose of letting contracts for the work of the new "World" offices.

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, who was elected delegate to the National Convention in San Francisco July 13 to 16, states that he expects to leave about July 6.

Messrs. Nathan Friedberg and David Adler, owners of the Alhambra theater, East End, Pittsburgh, are president and secretary and treasurer, respectively, of a corporation formed to erect a large and modern motion picture theater in the downtown section of Cleveland, O. These gentlemen are considered the main push in this company, which will be known as the Regent Amusement Company and in the theater, which will be called the Regent.

M. H. Goldstein, of the Morris Amusement Company, 681 Preble avenue, Pittsburgh, has installed a Wurlitzer Orchestra, style G, duplex, and states that he is well pleased with it and that he may buy a still larger style in the near future.

James B. Clark, who has always had an interest in the Cameraphone theater, Bellevue, Pittsburgh, on Thursday of last week bought out the other interests and now owns the theater outright. The theater is one of the chain of "Cameraphone" theaters that were opened by W. C. Beatty, Clark and others several years ago. Several of these have been sold to other parties, but the Beatty-Clark combination still has one at 1600 Fifth avenue and another in Cleveland, Ohio.

The Metropolitan Booking offices are now nicely quartered at 121 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh. Manager Rockwell is pleased with the new quarters. The move was necessitated by the rapidly increasing business.

Manager McAleer, of the Pittsburgh office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, announces that he will soon release a series of four one-reel films depicting Uncle Sam's army and navy. The pictures are issued in co-operation with the United States Government.

Secretary Delves of the Exhibitors' League, states that the membership is increasing at a rapid rate.

Manager Harvey B. Day, of the Pittsburgh Fox Film office, will go to New York this week to attend a convention of the Fox managers, which opens July 1.

The management of the Columbia theater, Fifth avenue, Pitttsburgh, has installed a cooling system that makes the house comfortable on the hottest day.

"Committed an Error"

Erie, Pa., Police Department Makes Anti-Sunday Opening Move—Orders Posters Off Street—Trouble Later Straightened Out by Mayor—Picture Men Think That Incident Has Strengthened Film Theater Position in City.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

WHAT was thought to be the first blow dealt moving picture shows on Sunday came when the Erie police carried out an order, said to come from Mayor Stern prohibiting posters in front of the theaters announcing the attractions.

Mayor Stern happened to be out of town, but when he returned, Police Chief Detzel admitted that when the posters were ordered removed the "police committed an error."

Through this agitation, the Erie motion picture men and the Pittsburgh trade who took considerable interest in the matter, consider the moving picture industry has won a great battle, in the fact that the police kept their hands off Erie moving picture shows last Sunday and allowed the display of florid posters as of yore.

Picture houses will be allowed to display their posters as long as they are kept in the lobbies of the show houses, said Meyer Stern last week, when he returned from Rochester. The mayor said he gave this order two weeks ago before he went away, as a number of the houses had been displaying posters on the streets on Sunday.

PITTSBURGHERS GET THE CUP.

The members of the Exhibitors' League of Pittsburgh were very excited last week by the receipt of a handsome silver cup, which was awarded them at the State convention at Reading, Pa. The cup, which stands eight inches high, is the reward for having the largest visiting delegation from a distance. Secretary Delves says that the cup has proven a very desirable ornament for the office.

POSTER EXCHANGE MOVES.

Austin Bowers, manager of the Poster Exchange, at 417 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, has moved to 121 Fourth avenue, second floor. George Sallaws has purchased an interest in the business, which will be known as "The Poster Exchange." They will handle Metro and Paramount paper, and will also have exclusive control of the paper for the new Kriterion program.

ERIE OPERATORS ASK FOR LICENSES.

The moving picture operators of Erie, Pa., have asked the Central Labor Union to aid them in obtaining licenses. Eugene McManus, business agent of the building trades council, has been delegated to appear before council to request legislation to this end. The operators hold that many accidents have occurred because incompetent men were allowed to run films.

PITTSBURGH UNITED FILM STILL ON THE JOB.

The United Film Service of Pittsburgh has sent out the following communication, which is self-explanatory:

"We wish to call your attention to the press notice issued by the United Film Service of New York, in which it is stated that they have gone into the hands of a receiver.

"We want it known that this company has no connection with the New York company other than purchasing films through them, and the bankruptcy proceedings now pending with the New York company will in no way affect this company, as this is the United Film Service of Pittsburgh, a local corporation.

"We will continue releasing new films every week as heretofore, and have made arrangements with the producing companies direct, under which arrangement it will eliminate the middleman, and afford us the opportunity to purchase only the best, whereas, under the old franchise, we were Compelled to accept everything released by the United Film Service of New York, and we look for even a more rapid increase in business than in the past. Yours very truly, United Film Service of Pittsburgh."

POPULAR LADY MANAGER.

Miss Florence A. Haeppel, the charming young lady who is manager in reality as well as in name of the Garden theater, North avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, is one of the very few lady managers in this district, although there are quite a number in other sections of the country. Miss Haeppel has been employed by W. C. Beatty, who controls the destinies of the Garden, for the past four years, being with him for three years during his incumbency at the Cameraphone in Fifth avenue. Miss Haeppel says there are so many variants to this game that one must be continually "up to the minute" or fall by the wayside. She is authority for the statement that the Garden is about to put in 250 extra seats, making the total seating capacity 1,000.

VANDALISM IN ELLWOOD CITY THEATER.

The City theater in Ellwood City, Pa., during the past week has been the scene of two acts of vandalism, as on Wednesday night when the proprietors, the Badders brothers, on starting the first show of the evening, found that their piano, which is run by electricity, refused to work. An examination was made and it was found that some one, evidently familiar with the construction of such an instrument, had unscrewed the top off the piano and had taken a knife or some other sharp instrument and had cut all the reeds of the instrument and after having cut them, stuffed the reeds with paper. An examination was then made of the whole theater and it was found that all of the carbons had been stolen.

The affair still remains somewhat of a mystery, as the police were unable to find how the entrance to the theater was affected, as all windows and doors seemed to have been undisturbed, and as yet no clue has been discovered which might indicate who perpetrated the deed. The proprietors also state that this is the second time this has occurred within a week, and they are at a loss as to the object of the guilty parties.

PITTSBURGH SPARKS.

The present seating arrangement in the New Avenue theater, Bellevue, Pittsburgh, will be changed this week, the seats being elevated so that every one in the theater will have an unobstructed view of the pictures.

The Garden Theater Company, Johnstown, Pa., lessees of the Garden theater, by M. C. Strayer and H. G. Gardner, through their counsel, Dan L. Parsons, presented a petition last week for the appointment of a receiver and a preliminary injunction. The court appointed Attorney Robert C. Hoerle, fixing his bond at $3,000. The court's order directed that the business of the theater company be continued under the court and a petition was subsequently presented by the receiver asking that the receiver be allowed to continue the business, which was accordingly awarded. Mr. Hoerle is now conducting the business.

Certain stockholders have requested propositions of settlement and if these propositions are accepted the business will be taken out of the hands of the receiver and placed back in the hands of the stockholders.

Prices Asked for Seats

Management of Detroit's New Picture House, the Astor, Decide to Put One Price On All Its Seats—Exhibitor Goldstein Tells Why This Seemed Advisable—the Price Has Been Set at Fifteen Cents.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the important points in connection with the new Astor theater to be erected at Grand River and Bagg streets, Detroit, is that all seats will be fifteen cents, except in boxes. The Astor, as previously mentioned in the World, is to cost $175,000 and seat 2,500 on one floor, the arrangement of seats being on the same order as that of the Majestic theater—amphitheater style. The idea of having all seats at fifteen cents is to do away with reserved seats and a graded scale of prices.

"Instead of having some at 10 and some at 20, we decided to make an average, hence selected fifteen cents as the admission price," said Mr. Goldstein. "As a matter of fact, in my opinion there should be but the one price where all seats are on one floor. As long as a person can see, one seat is as good as the other. Some people do not care to sit down in front at a moving picture theater on account of their eyesight and there is no reason why they should not be permitted to sit further back for the same money.

"I have been in many theaters where prices would be 10 and 15 cents for the first floor; where the ten cent seats would all be taken, and most of the 15 cent seats empty, while the back aisle would be crowded with people waiting for a ten cent seat. My plan of having every seat the same price will do away with any annoyance or complaint of this sort."

CURFEW LAW AT PONTIAC.

Pontiac, Mich. (a short distance from Detroit), now has a curfew ordinance, which became effective June 25. At nine o'clock the bell in the fire station rings as a signal to the boys and girls of the city under 16 years of age that they must get off the streets and return to their homes unless accompanied by their parents. The police officers have been instructed to enforce the terms of the new ordinance, which makes the parents equally responsible with the children and imposes a penalty for violations. The ordinance was aimed principally at the moving picture theaters, it being claimed that many children under age were attending the theaters unescorted and without the knowledge of their parents. The passing of this ordinance has not in the least affected the theater business. If anything, it is helping, because young people still want to attend the theaters and are now accompanied by their parents, which means inereased business.

ANOTHER THEATER ON GRAND RIVER AVENUE.

The Ferry Field Theater Company has opened downtown offices at 1026 Dime Bank building, Detroit. The company proposes to build a hundred thousand dollar theater at Grand River avenue and the boulevard. The property comprises 100 feet on the avenue and has a depth of 162 feet. It is one of the most valuable pieces of business property along the whole length of Grand River avenue. The company will not lease but will own the entire property—land, buildings and equipment. The location is ideal. The neighborhood is being thickly settled and new homes by the hundreds are being built there. In fact, it is one of the fastest growing neighborhoods in the city, having doubled its population in the last five years. Theodore L. Smith, Sr., will personally direct the construction of the Ferry Field theater. He is secretary and treasurer of the Maxine theater, corner Mack and Baldwin avenues. Others associated in this enterprise are Frederick Riddell and Robert M. Drysdale, attorney.

NEW ARTONE FEATURE READY.

The Artone Feature Film Co., comprising W. H. Goodfellow, Francis Reno and Gustav Froebel, with studios at 307 John R street, Detroit, has completed its first picture "5:15." The specialty of this concern is making moving pictures of songs. Letters from exhibitors in all parts of the United States have been received by the company asking for the privilege of showing Artone pictures. A vocalist appears in connection with each picture. The directing of the pictures is being handled by W. H. Gregory, well known in filmdom. Recently the company purchased a Peerless motor truck, with jitney bus body, to transport its people to and from the studio. Roy Walling, who played an entire season as leading man with a local dramatic stock company, is now affiliated with the Artone Company.

LAKIN WILL REPRESENT THE CAILLE BROS.

John R. Lakin, formerly manager of the Detroit office of the Pathe, and previously special representative and publicity man for the Detroit Universal Film Company, is now special representative for the Caille Bros. Co., Detroit, makers of the electric ticket seller, electric ticket choppers and ticket boxes. Mr. Lakin will make his headquarters at Detroit, although he will travel for the company from coast to coast. A. Arthur Caille, through whose genius these various machines were perfected, besides being a member of the firm, is president of the Majestic Theater Company, Detroit's finest photoplay house. The Majestic has installed all of the Caille devices.

MAXINE THEATER OPENS.

Harry S. Goseline has opened the Maxine theater in Port Huron, after weeks of preparation and remodeling. Mr. Goseline has moved his family to Port Huron and plans to make it his future home. The policy of the new Maxine will be feature photoplays, with prices 10 cents for adults and five cents for children at all times. A pipe organ has been installed. The theater will be open from twelve o'clock noon until 10:30 p. m., daily.

HEARING ON FIRE ALARM BOX ORDINANCE.

Fifty Detroit exhibitors operating theaters seating less than 400 gathered at the City Hall on Tuesday morning, June 29, 10 o'clock, and appeared before the Ordinance Committee relative to the measure recently introduced into the common council making it compulsory for minor theaters to install fire alarm boxes, similar to those in the larger play houses. Peter Jeup spoke in behalf of the exhibitors, saying that it was an injustice to require the minor exhibitor to go to such an expense, and that in his opinion such installation was entirely unnecessary.

He said that the minor exhibitors were now being put to enough expense by having to pay $20 annually for inspections by the state fire marshal's office and that the theaters were regularly inspected by the building inspector and local fire department. In behalf of the city, an attorney argued that the reason why a fire alarm box was necessary was to insure absolutely the safety of the women and children patronizing the moving picture theaters, that no precaution was too great that would tend to prevent the loss of life.

After hearing both sides of the case, the Ordinance Committee decided to take further time to consider the ordinance.

In the opinion of some of the exhibitors, it is believed that the ordinance will pass, but that the fees (they are now $25 per year) will be materially reduced.

DETROIT BREVITIES.

The Bijou Amusement Co., of which Col. W. S. Butterfield, of Chicago, is president and general manager, has withdrawn from Port Huron. The Majestic has been turned over to its owners, John G. McNeill and J. W. Butterfield, who has managed it for two years, will go to Rockford, Ill., where he will manage a theater.

Extensive outside redecorating has been done to the Washington theater, Detroit, which has materially improved the appearance of that playhouse. There is not a week that Manager Starr is not making some changes in the Washington—just enough each time to let the public know that the management is progressive.

Mort Hoffman, general manager of the Saginaw Hippodrome Amusement Co., Inc., with offices at 1234 Dime Bank building, Detroit, says that he has practically completed arrangements for two suburban theaters to be erected in Detroit, which will play a combination of vaudeville and feature pictures. Also that the new Saginaw Hippodrome will be started inside of the next two weeks and completed by fall. C. A. Hoffman is now president of the company; William Cunningham, of Chicago, is vice-president; Graham Hoffman is secretary, and Mort Hoffman is treasurer and general manager.

"Nearly a Hero" was an added attraction at the Washington theater the week of June 27. This picture was made by the Fulton Company, of Chicago, for John H. Kunsky, who produced it after the Detroit Journal conducted a three weeks' popularity contest, the winner of the contest taking the leading feminine role in the picture. Large crowds were attracted to the Washington to see "Nearly a Hero," which was taken in Detroit.

A $35,000 pipe organ is now being installed in the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit. It will be operating for the first time on July 12. Harry I. Garson, manager of the Broadway-Strand has a number of unique innovations which he will shortly introduce into his playhouse.

The Detroit theatres now playing big big features an entire week are the Washington, Liberty, Broadway-Strand and Majestic.

The Ferry Park Theatre Co., which will erect a $100,000 theatre at Grand River and the Boulevard, has changed its name to the Ferry Field Theatre Co.

The Harris & Warren Amusement Co., erecting a $50,000 theatre at Wyandotte, Mich., near Detroit, has increased its capital stock from $25,000 to $85,000.

The Elden Small Corporation has been formed in Detroit to book the motion picture film with Billy Sunday in the leading role. Mr. Elden Small, a former newspaper man and member of the school board, reports a lively interest in this film throughout the state of Michigan.

HEARD IN KANSAS CITY.

"The Moth and the Flame" was the picture that recently packed the Apollo theater. The theater is one of the most popular ones in the city and draws big audiences every evening.

The Alamo theater's chief attraction of the season was the picture recently shown. William Farnum, in "The Spoilers." The picture has been shown in the city off and on for the last year, but it has been drawing big houses wherever it has been used.

The Globe theater at Kansas City has closed for the season. The Globe has been showing moving pictures and travel pictures of an educational nature in connection with a vaudeville show. Louis Oppenstein, the owner of the theater, says that he has already begun to make arrangement for booking several good pictures and acts for the reopening of the theater and he promises to make it the largest reopening that it has ever had.

Clyde Wright of Lexington, Mo., was recently in the city. Mr. Wright says that the people are attending the moving picture theaters in that town as well as they do in the winter. It is very notable, he says, that the citizens of the town patronize the theater in the summer while the students at the colleges comprise the audiences in the winter.

KANSAS STATE ITEMS.

August Rehm, manager of the Majestic theater at Baxter, Kan., is installing a new cooling device in his theater. The system is one of cakes of ice with electric fans blowing over them. Mr. Rehm says that since this system has been installed his patronage on hot nights has increased greatly and he expects to draw as large crowds all summer as he does when the weather is more moderate.

The newspapers are trying to influence the merchants of Baxter to put on free moving picture shows at the Majestic to attract the country folk to that town on certain day. The plan is to curtail the advertisements of competitive merchants in other towns who have placed signs along the highways within three miles of Baxter inducing the crowds to go to the other towns. Mr. Rehm is also trying to get the merchants of Baxter together on this subject and will probably make arrangements soon.

Application has been made by the management of the Orpheum theater at Topeka, Kan., to increase the capital of the company from $10,000 to $20,000. The theater will be remodeled and the name changed to conform with the theaters in Kansas City, Joplin, St. Joseph and Springfield, which are known as the Electric theater.

"The Exposition's First Romance" was shown in the Best theater at Topeka, Kan., recently. It was advertised as the first time it had ever been shown east of the Rocky Mountains.

The Novelty theater at Topeka, Kan., recently put on Col. Jones' pictures that caused great excitement among the children as well as the older inhabitants of Topeka. Col. Jones is the keeper of the animals in Yellowstone National Park and lectured on films taken of his fight with a mountain lion, a bear and many other such pictures. Feature films of the General Film Company were also shown there.

IN MISSOURI.

W. W. Bell, a photoplay man of Little Rock, Ark., recently went before the meeting of the Business Men's League at Carthage, Mo., with the proposition of making a photoplay in Carthage with prominent citizens in the cast. The idea is looked upon favorably by the league and they have appointed a committee to look deeper into the subject. Mr. Bell is connected with the Pathe staff of photographers and was sent into the mining districts to take pictures of the mining troubles and disasters due to the high prices of ore.

The wedding of Miss Genevieve Clark to James M Thomson at the home of her father, Speaker Champ Clark, at Bowling Green, Mo., was one of the largest weddings that has ever taken place in the state. Miss Clark had moving pictures made of her life as a girl at the old home, "Honeyshuck," her wedding and then the march back up the old walk—a wife. Miss Clark displayed a great deal of sentiment in the matter and permitted the photographers to take many pictures of her in her bridal costume and so forth. But the films, she declared, were not to be seen by the public and after they were developed she sealed them up and put them away to be saved for descendants in decades to come.

Honest Advertising Law

Missouri Has New Law Forbidding Any Dishonest Advertisement—Is of Immediate Interest to Managers of Shows, Exchange Men and Those Who Send Out Posters—Publishers Not Responsible—Picture Exchanges Do Not Feel in Danger.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE new law known as the Pure Advertising Law went into effect in Missouri June 18. The law was fathered through the legislature by Frank C. Wilkinson and affects all forms of business. A portion of it is: An act relating to untrue, misleading and deceptive advertisements and providing a penalty.

"Sec. 1. Any person, firm or corporation, or association, who, with intent to sell or in anywise dispose of merchandise, securities, service, or anything offered by such person, firm or corporation or association, directly or indirectly, to the public for sale or distribution, or with intent to increase the consumption thereof, or to induce the public in any manner to enter into any obligation relating thereto or to acquire title thereto, or an interest therein, makes, publishes, disseminates, circulates or places before the public, or causes, directly or indirectly, to be made, published, disseminated, circulated, or placed before the public in this State, in a newspaper or other publication, or in form of a book, notice, handbill, poster, bill circular, pamphlet or letter, or in any way, an advertisement of any sort regarding merchandise, securities, service, or anything so offered to the public which the advertisement contains any assertion, representation or statement of fact which is untrue, deceptive or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than 10 days nor more than 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment; providing, that nothing therein shall apply to any proprietor or publisher of any newspaper or magazine who publishes, disseminates or circulates any such advertisement without the knowledge of the unlawful or untruthful nature of such advertisement."

Local organizations in various lines of business have appointed vigilance committees to report on an unfair and dishonest advertising that they might come in contact with. The law was written by Mr. Nims, a New York corporation lawyer. Mr. Nims has made a careful study of unfair business competition, and this is just why the law has been passed. It can readily be seen that if one man or one company was indulging in this kind of advertising he would not be dealing fairly with his competitors in the same line of business.

This law will affect the moving picture exchange houses, home offices, exhibitors and men in all lines of the business. In advertising the various films to the exhibitors or to film buyers the home offices will have to use the utmost care when their advertising comes into the state of Missouri. Exchange men, exhibitors and home offices could easily be entangled in this one little law by simply having a poster in front of the theater depicting a scene or several scenes in the pictures, which may have been cut out by a censor, or employee in an exchange or an operator at some theater. Nearly all the posters are made by the home offices and sent to the branches.

Local theater men have to be mighty careful of the statements that they make on their handbills, programs, newspaper advertising and other advance literature and notes, and pictures that they are continually putting forth.

The film exchanges have to be just as careful with their advance literatures and other advertisements on releases and so forth or they will find themselves in contact with this new law. The exchange men declare that they have as yet had no trouble with the law and that they are not expecting any, although situated as they are they may sometimes unknowingly break the law.

EXCHANGE MEN'S ASSOCIATION FORMED IN KANSAS CITY

Practically all the exchange managers of Kansas City met at the Washington hotel the evening of June 29, and formed the Exchange Men's Association of Kansas City. It rained that night, a blustering, tremendously wet storm—but fifteen turned out, and an enthusiastic gathering was the result. They mean business—not piffling fault-finding, but real constructive, educational work for the advancement of the industry of moving pictures in the Kansas City territory.

One of the first purposes of the body is social; the film men want to get together and become better acquainted, and talk over the problems and the possibilities of the business, such questions as affect all of them. And there will come later the discussion of the various problems on which they all can concentrate, for the correction of conditions that seem needing correction, for the development of enterprises that will advance the interests of films. The West is ripe for educational work; various organizations are ready to co-operate, and it needs only a friendly co-operation on the part of the film men to bring about a real improvement in the public's state of mind. There have been innumerable suggestions to this end. The chief obstacle heretofore has been the disinclination of any organization to treat with individual exchange managers, lest they seem to be playing favorites.

It is, of course, trite to suggest that the general public is eager to see further expansion and development of the moving picture business; the public generally needs only the presentation of a suggestion to render its hearty support to any educational propaganda. What these suggestions will be remains for the developments of the plans of the association. The exchange men recognize the opportunity and they are putting themselves in a position to take advantage of it. Doubtless the question of censorship will be studied, and the conclusions presented in the most effective form. Doubtless also there will be friendly conferences with all the organizations and official bodies, as well as careful preparation of statistics and data that the correct situation may be put before the proper parties. No announcement has yet been made of the plans—only the fact is known that the work will be real work for the best interests of the business.

Only two meetings have been held so far—a preliminary conference, and the session at which the association was launched. Another meeting will be held within two weeks, at which definite programs may be decided upon.

KANSAS CITY NOTES.

The Maze theater at Twelfth and Baltimore avenue recently presented the picture, "The High Road." The Maze is now charging ten cents on Twelfth street and is one of the few theaters that is doing it. A new pipe organ has recently been installed and the theater is well filled every day and evening.

The Gillham theater packed its house recently to the Paramount picture, "May Blossoms." The theater is situated in the residence district and is well attended even through the hot months.

Censors Prepare Exhibit

Secretary of Portland Censor Board Collects a Thousand Feet of Excisions from Censored Films—To Be Kept as Exhibit of Depravity—Rumor That Reel Will Be Shown to Chosen Few Excites Comment.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CONSIDERABLE comment followed the announcement in the Portland papers that Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the Portland censor board, was going to connect up all the pieces of film that had been eliminated by the censor board from pictures submitted to it for some time past in one reel and that she was going to exhibit this reel of naughty, naughty scenes to show what awful, immoral and revolting things the film manufacturers might have foisted upon the photoplay public had it not been for the censor board.

Following the publication of the article, several of the facetious and flippant took occasion to pass comments on it and their letters appeared in the morning paper.

"Is it not about time for the really good people of Portland to take steps to see that our film censorship board does not outrage public decency by having a private exhibition of the violent and immodest scenes which have been cut out of the regular movie shows?" says one writer.

If it had been the intention of Mrs. Colwell to exhibit the film to a select few, it is rumored about the City Hall that her intention was not serious and that the probabilities are that the thousand feet of smut or so-called smut will not be shown.

COLUMBIA CHANGES HANDS.

The Columbia theater, one of Portland's leading picture houses, has been leased by Foster & Kleiser, the owners, and up to this time the operators, to Jensen and Von Herberg of Seattle, the lease to go into effect July 1. The lessees now operate the Alhambra, Liberty and Mission theaters in Seattle, the three leading motion picture houses there.

The Columbia was built two years ago by Foster & Kleiser at a cost of about $125,000 and its equipment and appointments are of the finest. Foster & Kleiser are also the owners of the Alhambra in Seattle and the Valencia in San Francisco.

The name of the theater will remain the Columbia but in place of the World Film service, the new management has booked the Universal Broadway Star features in connection with the regular Universal program commencing July 4.

ORPHEUM TAKES ANOTHER HOUSE.

The Orpheum, P. R. Conlon, manager, has transferred its name and fame to the stand of the Empress and hereafter that house will be known as the Orpheum and vice versa.

Sullivan and Considine control both buildings and it is rumored that the advisability of showing S & C vaudeville in the larger house made the change profitable.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

J. R. Cummock, recently of the Paramount-Progressive company in Seattle, has joined the managerial staff of the People's Amusement Company.

G. A. Metzger, of the Film Supply Company of Oregon, has booked the Universal Broadway Star features from the Portland office to the following theaters: Ye Liberty, Salem, Ore.; Eugene theater, Eugene, Ore.; Electric theater, Hood River, Ore.; Bijou, Tacoma, Wash.; Star, Astoria, Ore.; Arcade, Walla Walla, Wash.; Orpheum, Pendleton, Ore.; Arcade, LaGrande, Ore.; Orpheus, Klamath Falls, and numerous others.

The National theater has been running opera at 10 cents in connection with its usual picture program. "Very successful," says Manager Winstock.

Bob Kane, state right manager for the Prohibition Film Company, was in Portland recently in the interests of his picture.

"The Ski Man," produced at Seattle, has been received by the local Apex agency for distribution.

OUTLOOK GOOD IN EASTERN OREGON.

J. L. Merrick, connected with the Portland office of the General Film Company, recently returned from a ten days' trip through the eastern territory served by the Portland exchange. Mr. Merrick visited The Dalles, Hood River, Baker, LaGrande and Pendleton, Ore., and went as far east as Boise, Idaho. He reports a bumper wheat crop which presages prosperity in the picture business as in everything else in the territory affected.

PATHE MAN PREDICTS.

The writer recently had the pleasure of an interview with L. E. Franconi, whose card states that he is special representative of Pathe Freres, 25 West 45th street, New York, but whose genial manner tells us that he is special emissary passing the greeting of Charles Pathe and Charles Dupre along to every one he meets.

Mr. Franconi speaks with wonderful optimism on the film outlook in this country and predicts prosperous times for the film industry. He predicts a new epoch in motion picture history with the coming of the three, four and six reel colored subjects. Colored travel pictures including views of the Pacific Northwest are also in contemplation.

Mr. Franconi has forwarded for exhibition at the Exhibitor's convention in San Francisco the reel of non-inflammable film recently exposed to a thousand degrees of heat in a projection-booth fire in Los Angeles. Pathe intends using this film stock exclusively in their new pictures and their slogan will be "Safety First."

OREGON NOTES.

Manager Long, of the Star theater, Oregon City, has put in place an attractive electric sign extending across the front of his building.

Architect Ernst Kroner, of Portland, has prepared plans for a new motion picture theater to be erected at Hillsboro, Ore., by J. N. Wall. The seating capacity is about 400.

H. L. Deery and C. L. Chalmers, lately of Spokane, Wash., have purchased the Alta theater at Pendleton from J. P. Stipe.

Ye Liberty theater, Salem, Ore., formerly owned by F. L. Waters, has changed hands.

Hughie J Cummings, formerly of Butte, Mont., has taken over the management of the Sunset theater, Astoria, Ore.

The Star theater, Medford, has been leased from the People's Amusement Company by A. C. Burgess.

The Folly theater, Eugene, Ore., in which C. C. Bryan recently acquired a half interest, is enlarging and has added to its equipment a Powers' 6A Cameragraph supplied by the Service Film Company.

Eugene Brown has acquired the Enterprise Opera House, Enterprise, Ore., and will conduct it as a picture theater.

Lew F. Cullins and his wife, of the Casino theater, The Dalles, Oregon, and F. L. Waters, of the Salem Amusement Company, were recent visitors at the Universal Exchange.

O. P. Leslie, Star theater, Stayton, Ore., and A. H. McDonald, Rex theater, Eugene, Oregon, were recent visitors at the Pathe Exchange.

ST. LOUIS AIRDOMES HIT BY RAINY WEATHER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS has lost its reputation as the best airdome city in the United States. Last summer there were but four or five nights during the entire season when al fresco performances could not be given; this year in the entire month of May there were but four nights that an out-of-doors program would draw a Corporal's guard.

June has been almost as bad as May. More rain fell in June than in May, but it was not scattered over so many days, that is, there were heavy periods of rain for a few days, and then a few clear days and nights.

The weather reports show that the month that has just passed was the wettest June in forty years, the total rainfall for the month was 9.39 inches, the heaviest since June, 1875. The mean temperature for the month has been unusually low. The average for June, 1914, was 81 and a fraction degrees; this year it averaged but 72. This record for coolness has been beaten only six times in the last forty years. June, 1912, was the coldest June on record, the average temperature being only a little over 70, but there was not nearly so much rain as this year, and out-door shows did fairly well. The highest the thermometer has ever registered this year was 90, and one night it got down as low as 54.

If the weather is fine from now on, airdomes may "pull out," but it will take fair weather, and hot weather, hot enough to drive the people outdoors, to give the airdomes anything like an even break.

LONG OR SHORT PICTURES.

Charles Schwartz, manager of the St. Charles and the Broadway, two of the Associated Theaters diagonally across the street from one another on St. Charles street between Broadway and Sixth street, who has been keeping tab on the likes and dislikes of his patrons, says theatergoers in the downtown district do not want pictures above three reels. A four reel picture will go occasionally if the subject is good and strong, but three is about as much as they care for.

Sunday, however, a four, and even five reel subjects will draw well and please the patrons. Mr. Schwartz says that many people in the busy district will drop into a picture show for the few minutes between lunch and time to go to work again, and if they find themselves looking at reel two of a five reel subject when they take their seats and are forced to leave before reel four is finished, they will hunt up a house with a short program next time.

Mr. Schwartz also says he finds that Weekly and Topical films take much better with the male portion of the audience than they do with the female part. He says he increased the patronage of the Broadway very noticeably two weeks ago by adding a weekly events film that has a great many St. Louis items to the program.

BEST JUICE CONVERTER.

Robert Miksicek, proprietor and manager of the Maryland theater, 1860 South 13th street, has installed a single phase motor in the engine room back of his screen, to replace the gasoline engine that he has been using to run the converter that turns the alternating to direct current for his projection machines. Mr. Miksicek believes in giving the people the best projection he can, and with that end in view he is constantly experimenting. The result of his experiments in the juice converter line have cost him over three thousand dollars during the five years he has been managing the Maryland, but he says he has things going now, and the very best arrangement he has tried yet in the single phase motor which is used in connection with the converter. The Maryland, which is very complete, and one of the cleanest theaters in St. Louis, has opened an airdome under the same name this summer for the first time. The open air theater is just a short distance south of the theater, at 1910 South 13th street.

ST. LOUIS GOSSIPY NOTES.

George Plaikos, proprietor of the Marquette theater, 18th street and Franklin avenue, has closed his theater while the alterations planned several months ago are being carried out. The entire front part of the building has been torn down, and the west wall is being set over, to take in the ground occupied by the meat market that formerly stood there. The alterations will be complete by the time the fall season opens, and will add greatly to the appearance as well as to the seating capacity of the Marquette.

The "Only" airdome, which took its name from the fact that it was the only airdome in the downtown district, and which was located on North 7th street between Morgan and Franklin avenue, has closed.

F. B. Steene, a staff photographer for Pathe's Weekly, has been busy making films in St. Louis and neighboring towns for the past month. Among local happenings filmed were the Pan-American Conference, the Catholic War Demonstration, the School Children's Pathescope Picnic, the McKinley High School Athletic Meet, and the Elks' Parade in East St. Louis. As a result of Mr. Steene's activity, the Pathe exchange in this city has had a noticeable increase in bookings for the Weekly.

The new V. L. S. E. exchange, which opened in St. Louis recently under the management of S. W. Hatch, has done an encouraging amount of business in the last few weeks. The exhibitors of St. Louis have fallen into the habit of running big features, and no theater or airdome is too small to run at least one or two features a week.

Scherrer Brothers, owners of the Palace theater at 1310 Franklin avenue, have increased the number of electric fans in their theater to thirty-two. The Palace is a long narrow building, and this battery of fans, which are placed at intervals along the walls, keep up a perfect gale of cooled air in the house.

CALIFORNIA JOTTINGS.

F. F. Ricker, who has conducted the Mosswood theater at Telegraph avenue and Thirty-eighth street, Oakland, for several years, has closed this house and retired from the field.

The new theater being erected by J. L. Loughrey, off Clinton Square, Oakland, is to be opened about the middle of July under the management of C. L. Jacoby, formerly of Napa. The house will have a seating capacity of about 900 and will be known as the Park. Paramount service will be featured and the admission price will be 10 cents.

The Wonderland theater at Turlock, owned by Mrs. Cora Johnson and under lease to George Bailey, was destroyed by fire on June 21 with a loss of about $6,000 to the building and $3,000 to fixtures.

The Empress, at Sacramento, has adopted the policy of changing the moving picture portion of its program each day and of announcing the names of the films to be shown a week in advance.

Julius H. Hirschberg, 17 Ramona avenue, Piedmont, has perfected an automatic projection machine to do away with the necessity of employing an operator.

The Princess theater, at Sausalito, has added a Motiograph to its present equipment.

K. S. Cashin, who recently took over the Wigwam theater at Fresno, has changed the name of this house to the Jitney theater. The house will be remodeled and renovated throughout.

The City Council of Oakland has reduced the annual theater license from $300 to $150, folowing the recent reduction in the moving picture house license.

Big New T. & D. Theater

Oakland to Have Largest Theater on Pacific Coast—To Be Built by Turner and Dahnken Circuit for Pictures Exclusively—No Stage—Will Seat 4,000—Balcony Reached by Inclined Planes—To Have $25,000 Organ.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Turner & Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco has just completed arrangements for the immediate erection of a new theater at Oakland, Cal., San Francisco's most important suburb, to take the place of the Oakland Photo-Play, on which the lease will expire at an early date. A lease for a period of fifteen years has been secured on the property of the James K. Moffitt estate at the southwest corner of Eleventh and Franklin streets, the lot being one hundred feet on Franklin and one hundred and seventy five feet on Eleventh street. For many months past this concern has been negotiating for a site at Fourteenth and Franklin streets, and the change to the location that has been secured came as a surprise.

Plans for a high class motion picture theater are now being prepared in the offices of Cunningham & Politeo, First National Bank building, San Francisco, the architects who designed the Imperial and Alcazar theaters of this city, as well as many other notable buildings. This house will be the largest and most modern on the Pacific Coast, with a seating capacity of 4,000. There will be but one balcony and no stairs will be used, the balcony to be reached by inclined planes only. Between the main floor and the balcony a large mezzanine floor is to be arranged with every convenience for the comfort of the public, reception rooms for ladies and gentlemen, a ladies' dressing room, men's smoking room and a well equipped nursery.

The theater will be constructed exclusively for moving pictures, the stage and flies being eliminated. The organ that will be installed will cost not less than $25,000 and the house will be built to accommodate this instrument. The operating room will be a model of its kind and will be built on the lower floor, thus giving a straight throw to the screen. The interior of the theater will be most modern in design, with special attention being paid to the lighting, heating and ventilating systems. Fresh air will be brought into the building from above, cleansed and warmed and completely changed at least twelve times an hour.

The foyers and lobby will be entirely of marble and tile and will be unusually attractive in appearance. An innovation here will be check rooms where hats, coats or bundles may be checked free of charge. The auditorium will be wider in the rear than it is in front, thus affording an unobstructed view of the screen from every seat and facilitating the planning of the aisles. The aisles will be bordered with white tile through which light will shine in sufficient intensity to enable patrons to see their way.

The exterior is designed in modern art and reflects to a marked degree the influences of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in architecture, a tendency that will be strongly felt in the future. The front will be illuminated by indirect lights, producing a soft effect that will enhance the beauty of the designs and colors that will be employed. Steam will arise from decorated urns producing the same effects that have been secured in the Court of Abundance at the exposition.

The cost of this fine photoplay house is estimated at $155,000, exclusive of equipment, and the total value of the investment will be about $350,000. A careful study is being made of existing theaters, ideas for improvements are being carefully considered as the detail plans are drawn, and when the house is completed it is expected that it will be a model of its kind. It will be the first one of large size erected for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit in which full stage equipment has not been installed and will illustrate the confidence entertained by the members of this firm in the stability of moving pictures as features of entertainment.

EXCLUSIVE CHAPLIN EXCHANGE.

The Standard Film Company, formerly located in the Mechanics Bank building, has moved to new quarters in the Pacific building at Fourth and Market streets. The old stock of films has been disposed of and a number of Charles Chaplin subjects have been purchased, it being the intention to handle these exclusively. The owners of this exchange, J. L. Warner and Ben Cohen, have purchased the All Star theater on Sutter street from the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, and will divide their time between these interests.

AMUSEMENT MAGNATES VISIT SAN FRANCISCO.

E. J. Carroll, a leading theatrical manager of Australia, arrived here from that country last week with his wife and two daughters, and plans to make a stay of three or four months. In addition to operating twenty-six theaters in the Antipodes he has built a "White City" at Sidney, and is here to get what points and ideas the Panama-Pacific International Exposition can furnish for this enterprise.

Fred Niblo, a theatrical man of New York, is here from a three years stay in Australia with his wife and son and states that moving picture theaters there are doing a wonderful business. The government has placed an import duty on films and manufacturers there are now having a better opportunity to compete.

Bert Feibelman, director general of the Cohn & Harris theatrical forces in the East, is here for a visit to the exposition and is being shown around by D. J. Grauman, to whom he is related. Incidentally, he is seeking to close a deal whereby a local theater will be taken over.

BOARD OF TRADE INAUGURATES A THURSDAY LUNCHEON.

The Film Exchange Board of Trade has inaugurated a Thursday luncheon and the initial event of this character was very well attended. At last week's affair J. K. Berger, special representative of the Pathe Exchange, was present and gave a talk on payment in advance for film service, a system that had been contemplated here. He told how this was being successfully worked out elsewhere and gave the local exchange men many ideas that will be considered by them.

TREASURERS' CLUB BENEFIT.

The Theatrical Treasurers' Club of San Francisco, with which many persons in the moving picture business are interested, held its fourth annual benefit matinee this week at the Columbia theater and cleared a tidy sum for its benefit work. The show opened with an Essanay comedy featuring Charles Chaplin, which was followed by talent from the leading theaters of the city.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The Garrick, in the Fillmore street district, has given up moving pictures and will be devoted to dramatic performances.

The Republic is to change shortly from vaudeville and moving pictures to musical comedy.

William Habekoss, formerly connected with the Liberty, on Haight street, is now associated with his brother in the management of the Elite on Sacramento street.

Hold Up Fight Films

Federal Authorities at Portland, Maine, Custom House Seize Willard-Johnson Fight Films on Way from Toronto—Judge Hale of District Court Refuses Preliminary Injunction to Restrain Collector of Port—Will Continue Fight.

By John H Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE attempt to bring into the United States through the port of Portland, Maine, a film of the Johnson-Willard world's heavyweight championship fight at Havana, was blocked by Judge Hale in the United States District Court sitting in Portland last week.

Judge Hale, after a long hearing, refused to grant a petition by the Kalisthenic Exhibition Co. of New York for a preliminary injunction to restrain the collector of the port or his agents from interfering with the entry of the negatives, which reached here by express from Toronto the preceding week. The film is now in the vaults of the Federal authorities in the Portland custom house. It is said that the Kalisthenic Company will continue the fight to get the picture through.

MAINE BREEZES.

At a meeting of the joint standing committees on public property of the city of Biddeford, Maine, it was decided that the City Opera House be continued as an amusement house, instead of turned back into a city hall, as many citizens had expressed the wish it might be, and the property was leased to James P. Rundle, the present lessee, at an annual rental of $3,000.

Mr. F. B. McKeown, manager of the Opera House, at Jonesport, is using features now each week. Regular service is from the Universal, and the big attractions are booked by E. B. Tinker, of Ellsworth. Jonesport is somewhat of a summer resort and business now is very good.

This is from Manager Greely, of Greely's theater, Portland, and it is worth passing along: "Hard times and general depression in business are topics that do not interest Greely's theater; this place is intended to create, not to kill joy—hence, there is always a smile and a happy atmosphere prevailing here. Business is GOOD, thank you."

Dustin Farnum, the gifted Universal actor, has arrived in Bucksport, Maine, his native town, and is proving to be very popular with the townspeople. He is a hail fellow well met among all the residents of Bucksport. He received a fast motorboat last week and gave an exhibition on the Penobscot river. The wharves were lined with people, and the best judges say the boat made at least 40 knots an hour.

Mrs. M. W. Stiner, who has theaters at Winterport, Greenville and East Millinocket, has taken on General Film service.

B. C. Wade, of Damriscotta, has taken on General Film service, one night a week, in his theater, Lincoln Hall.

Tallwood Inn, the moving picture house at Marancook, has just opened, using General Film service, three nights a week.

W. L. Pitman, proprietor of Fairfield Opera House, has closed it for two months.

Clifford Norton, of Milbridge, has started in with General Film service, three nights a week.

W. C. French has started using partial General Film service.

S. H. Cohen, of Brownville, is now using General Film service, showing one night a week in Brownville, and one night in Brownville Junction. H. G. Dillon is in the business with him.

George Ferland, proprietor of Ferland Hall, at East Millinocket, has started in with Universal service, three nights a week.

Mr. E. L. McEvoy, Boston manager of the Phoenix Film Corporation, is expected in this state soon, to go over the territory with the local amnager of the corporation, Earle B. Tinker, of Ellsworth.

H. O. Hussey, of Bucksport, opened his Verona Park theater on Monday, July 5, using Universal service.

Fred Johnson, of Farmington, and Fred Mason, of Livermore Falls, were in Bangor during the past week, arranging for Universal service in their houses.

It is understood that Mr. H. P. Townsend has resigned as manager of the Woodland Opera House. The name of his successor is not known at this writing.

PHILADELPHIA TRADE LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

RAYMOND H. MILLIMAN, one of the best known citizens of East Stroudsburg, has leased the Plaza theater, located on South Courtland street, for a number of years from Frank Fabel and has already taken possession of his new enterprise. Guy Roof, former proprietor, has successfully conducted the amusement establishment since the first of December and recently left for Canastota, New York, where he will assist his father in the condensed milk business.

Mr. Milliman has had five years' experience as an operator for moving picture shows, besides other theatrical experience, which makes him a most capable man for the position of managing the Plaza. There will be no changes made in the building, everything being in the best of condition and insuring the safety and comfort of patrons. However, he has made an entire change in the program and will secure his pictures from the Mutual All-Star Company, whose pictures have recently caused much favorable comment throughout the entire country.

Walter Jacobs, proprietor of the Imperial theater, 215 South 60th street, has recently been elected president of the South 60th Street Business Men's Association. Mr. Jacobs has been affiliated with the moving picture industry since its inception about twenty years ago and is one of the most popular members of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League. Of a most sunny disposition he has acquired the habit of making friends in every walk of life and, when the question of electing a new president for the association was brought to the front, there was nothing to do but to unanimously agree upon the moving picture exponent.

Joseph Sannit has purchased from Alexander Berman for a nominal consideration the two-story brick motion picture theater at 2907-2911 North 5th street, Philadelphia. The property was recently acquired by Mr. Berman for a consideration of $29,000 and it is thought the recent purchasing price is much in excess of those figures.

The majority of Elks and their families residing in the neighbornood of Plainfield, N. J., recently attended the Plainfield Airdome as the guests of Manager Shannon. They were treated to a wonderful exhibition of pictures including "the Nightengale" featuring Ethel Barrymore, and the two reel comic picture, "His New Job" featuring the king of moving picture comedians, Charlie Chaplin.

Eugene L. Keefe, employed by the firm of Williams, Brown and Earle for more than twenty years, has recently started in business for himself at 1325 Vine street. Mr. Keefe has made scores of friends during his daily association with the trade while employed at the Chestnut street address and it is thought that his new venture will meet with instant success. He will carry a general line of supplies and will also operate a film exchange.

The management of the Victoria theater, between 9th and 10th streets, on Market, announces a new admission policy for the summer months. This theater, which is one of the most modern and best known houses in Philadelphia, formerly charged 10 and 20 cents admission and most always played to full houses because their pictures and first class vaudeville had created quite a reputation throughout the city. It has been decided to lower the rate of admission to 5 cents for the balance of the summer season. Frank Benjamin, the well known West Philadelphian of 42d and Chester avenue, has recently been appointed as assistant manager at the Victoria.

A most singular occurrence was noted at the Benn theater, 64th street and Woodland avenue, West Philadelphia, during the past week when the house was practically filled between the hours of 6:30 and 7 o'clock and after that very few applied for admission. Mr. Benn is unable to account for this phenomena.

The Chelten Auditorium, 1209 Chelton avenue, one of the largest theaters in that section of the city, was recently transferred from Mr. Kiefer to Mr. Harmad. Mr. Harmad has arranged to show some of the latest productions and will endeavor to bring the patronage of the theater up to the thousand mark.

The Keystone theater, 11th street and Lehigh avenue, and the Orpheum, Germantown avenue and Maplewood street, have decided to close their doors for the balance of the summer months, but will reopen in the fall with renewed vigor and will endeavor to maintain the high standard of efficiency already established at these institutions.

Philip Adler, well known personage in moving picture circles throughout the State of Pennsylvania, and who was the first man to open a film exchange in this city, is once again in town and has opened temporary headquarters at 1329 Vine street. Mr. Adler is known as the junk man of the industry as he buys and sells most anything connected in any manner, shape or form with moving pictures. Of recent years he has been traveling throughout the State booking his features with the many theaters scattered throughout Pennsylvania.

George J. Zboysky and Mr. Longo, proprietors of the Palace theater, South Bethlehem, Pa., have recently purchased some new equipment from the Calehuff Supply Company, 1311 Race street, Philadelphia, including a new 6-A machine and many frames. This establishment is one of the most progressive amusement houses in the Lehigh region and the proprietors have constantly been installing new equipment in order to provide for the comfort of the patrons.

Charles C. Graul, proprietor of the Airdome theater, Reading, Pa., which is located at Hyde Park, recently complained of an act of vandalism which has caused much disturbance among the patrons of this theater. Large cannon-crackers have been thrown over the fence surrounding the theater and one exploded within several inches of the face of a woman attending the show, frightening her so badly that she had to be taken from the theater. The police authorities have taken hold of the matter and a diligent watch is being maintained in order to catch the culprits who will be dealt with severely.

A new moving picture theater has been opened at Robensonia, Pa., under the management of Messrs. Lauck and Spatz and they have declared that it is their intention to show nothing but first class pictures.

Jacob Goldsmith, of Fredericksburg, Virginia, was a recent visitor in this city and purchased two No. 6-A machines for his Fredericksburg Opera House.

Frank Hill, proprietor of the Lyric theater, Reading, Pa., has taken advantage of the opportunity afforded by the summer months and is making many changes in his theater. Coincident with the alterations he is also purchasing lots of new equipment and has installed a new machine and numerous frames and so forth.

HEARD IN NEW ENGLAND.

The Albert theater at Berlin, N. H., the most beautiful and up to date playhouse in the Granite State, is now showing feature pictures under the management of E. O. Gilbert. The Albert until recently was a legitimate house and was erected at a cost of $72,000. It was recently purchased by Mr. Gilbert, who intends that it shall be a high class picture theater. He is using features released by the Phoenix Film Corporation.

The property at 680 Washington street, Boston, owned by the New England Trust Company as executor and trustee under the will of the late Robert B. Brigham, and occupied by the Premier theater operated by the Automatic Vaudeville Company, may not be sold. Judge George of the Suffolk County Probate Court has dismissed the petition of the trust company for permission to sell the property. Objection was made to the sale by the Robert B. Brigham Hospital, which claimed that its income, now amounting to $15,000, would be reduced by at least one half. The hospital is a beneficiary under the will, and receives a larger income than it would from the sale price of the property.

The construction work of the new photoplay theater to be erected on Maple street, Holyoke, Mass., has been started. This house will be up to date in every detail with a seating capacity of 1,000. Alexander Cameron is interested in the project.

Moving pictures were taken of the new machine gun company attached to the Eighth Regiment, M. V. M. at the summer camp at Lynnfield, during the past week. The company assembled under Captain F. J. Burnham and while the camera was slowly clicking, they packed saddles on mules, loaded their packs, gun cases and other equipment just as is done in regular service. These pictures will be used during the winter for recruiting purposes. Pictures were also made of the company marching on to the parade ground where one of the mules became stubborn, disabling the wireless outfit, thereby cutting out all communication of the camp with the headquarters. Views of the company under drill with the new armored car, driven by Second Lieutenant William G. Renwick, were also taken.

Manager Harry F. Campbell of the Fox Film Corporation spent part of last week in New York City, where he attended the convention of the company's branch managers. Manager Campbell has acquired the reputation of being one of the most capable exchange men in New England and the large number of theaters in the territory which are using Fox features certainly proves this statement. During his absence, Charles Phillips, a roadman, directed the New England destinies of the company's photoplays.

Manager Frank J. D. Ferguson of Keith's Boston theater and Miss Alice M. Sheehan were married last week at St. Paul's Church, Dorchester, where the bride is organist. A large assemblage of musicians and many prominent in Knights of Columbus and theatrical circles were among the guests at the church. Frank Orvitt of the Tremont theater led the singing at the reception musicale, which was held at the home of the bride. The wedding trip will be passed at Niagara and Atlantic City.

John Donnelly, formerly of Kleine's Boston office, is now associated with the New England Pathe Exchange, having charge of the Rhode Island territory. He succeeds Arthur Epstein, who has resigned.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange, has received an invitation from "Bill" Gray of Lewiston, Me., to compete in an automobile race against Bob Burman. Although Sam has a high-powered Cole machine he does not believe he will accept.

J. Genaris, formerly manager of the Dreamland theater, Bellows Falls, has assumed the management of the theater at Barber park for the summer.

Boston Has Free Shows

Municipal Picture Shows in Playgrounds Taken Up in the Hub—Will Be Given Five Evenings Each Week With a Change of Program Every Evening—City Officials and Social Organizations Behind Movement.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MUNICIPAL moving picture shows have been started by the city of Boston. The shows will be given five evenings a week in Boston recreation grounds. The program will be changed each night. It will include pictures of educational, health, and civic subjects, interspersed with comedies and pictorial news films.

Mayor Curley's office, the Boston Police Department and the Boston Park and Recreation Department, with the co-operation of several social organizations, are responsible for the launching of this movement. The resources of the city for recreation, civic progress and good living will be displayed on the screen. The innovation started last Monday and Tuesday nights with picture shows at Franklin Field, Dorchester. Wednesday and Thursday the show was transferred to the Parkman Memorial bandstand on Boston Common, and to the Columbus avenue playground, Roxbury, for Friday's performance. The performances will be continued throughout this month and possibly throughout the summer.

Seymour Stone of the Boston Society for the Relief and Control of Tuberculosis is the chairman of the main committee and the sub-committee in charge of arrangements comprises D. M. Claghorn, Dr. G. W. Tupper and E. B. Mero. Co-operating organizations are the Young Men's Christian Association, Boston Young Men's Christian Union, Public Recreation League, Women's Municipal League, Massachusetts Child Labor Committee, Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, District Nursing Association, Milk and Baby Hygiene Association and the Poster Campaign of the Associated Charities.

RIGHT OF WAY CONTEST.

Loew's Orpheum theater on Washington street, Boston, has been temporarily closed. Work has been started on the razing of the building for the erection of a modern theater with a seating capacity of 2,000.

Charles E. Cotting and Philip Dexter, trustees, and owners of Hamilton place, which the rear of the structure faces, have filed a bill in equity against the President and Fellows of Harvard College, owners of the theater building, the Moving Picture Company of Massachusetts, lessees of the theater, the Fleishmann Construction Company and the Swift, McNutt Company, in which they seek the enforcement of a clause in a written instrument made thirty-three years ago for the use of a right of way in Hamilton place.

They claim that the lessees and the contractors engaged in the work are using the street in a way alleged to be in violation of the terms of the indenture, made on February 22, 1882, under which the then trustees, Edward D. Sohier and William S. Dexter, gave to the owners and tenants of the old Music Hall and those having business with them, now known as the Orpheum theater, the right to use Hamilton place.

A LIVE MANAGER.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England General Film Company renders valuable assistance to the many clubs and social welfare organization which use his program. His efforts to satisfy the exhibitor are untiring. He was recently asked by a woman connected with one of these societies where he spent his summer vacation. He replied that a vacation would be a novelty to him, as he believed business should be foremost in the mind of the progressive film exchange manager. New England exhibitors believe that a short rest would not harm him in the least because, rain or shine, he is always to be found in his office from early morning until late at night.

S. P. C. A. WANTS SCENARIO.

Moving pictures are to be used for the purpose of teaching the public the lesson of kindness to dumb animals by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the American Humane Education Society. The societies through their president, Dr. Francis H. Rowley of Brookline, have offered a prize of $25 for a short scenario upon which to produce a play that can be reproduced upon a moving picture film. The scenario must relate to animals and children and must be submitted to the M. S. P. C. A. officials before September 15.

ALL ITALIAN PICTURE SHOW.

Manager S. H. Levangia of the Automatic Vaudeville Company of Boston, certainly pulled an original one during the exhibition in the Comique and Premier theaters, Boston, of European war pictures. Outside the entrances of the playhouses he had a glass showcase filled with relics of the battlefields, including, swords, hats and rifles and a shoe with a bullet hole in the heel. These pictures played at each theater four days, packing the auditoriums at each show. Mr. Levangia's company also operates the Palace theater in Scollay square, Boston, where he is making a financial success by running an Italian show. All posters and announcements are in Italian and company of Italian performers furnish the vaudeville entertainment.

LESSER NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

The participants in the great peace spectacle, "The Pageant of Lexington," gayly bedecked in their costumes of many kinds and colors, posed for moving picture on the pageant grounds at the Twin Elm Spring Estate at Lexington, Mass.

The Washington School in Melrose is the proud possessor of a moving picture machine, and exhibits of school activities at the end of the year were thoroughly enjoyed by pupils, parents and teachers. It is planned to keep the films in the school library and when any class has a reunion, the films will be shown recalling their many happy days of study.

Charlie Chaplin contests are now featured at the Bowdoin Square theater and the South End theater, Boston. They are proving most entertaining and have had many entries.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange has closed many contracts for the new Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy," in which Lillian Lorraine and William Courtleigh, Jr., are featured.

Manager Charles Hodgdon of the Princess theater, Wakefield, announces that he played to capacity for three days during the exhibition of the picturization of Victor Hugo's famous novel, "Les Miserables."

Considerable progress is being made in the erection of the Olympia theater at the corner of Temple and Crown streets, New Haven, Conn. The contractors have started on the work of finishing the interior of this playhouse, which when completed, will be the most beautiful photoplay theater in the New England States. It is up to date in every respect and has a seating capacity of 2,500. It is planned to open during the first week of September.

Filling Summer Seats

Washington Exhibitor Combines Contest for the Most Popular Woman In His District With Between-Show Advertising Scheme—Gives Valuable Prizes As Consolation Offerings to Almost-Winners in Contest.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE exhibitors of Washington, D. C., operating closed houses are hard put to it to do more than break even during the heated months, in fact, to get a share of the business which goes to the airdomes and other places of amusement. Then, too, there is the matter of obtaining additional revenue or other concessions through the showing of slides bearing the advertising of merchants of the city, for there is not a day that goes by without the exhibitors having from one to a score or more requests for such advertising service. It has been found to be poor policy to combine advertising of this class with the showing of pictures for it is for the latter that the admission is charged, and patrons do not care to sit through even a few minutes devoted to such business.

How to combine these various situations—boosting the summer business, running the slides of well known houses, and interesting the general public in the text of the advertising slides, as well as obtaining additional advertising for the theater has been worked out by Victor L. Abbey for the Lyric theater, on Fourteenth street, northwest, a house having a seating capacity of approximately five hundred, for he is there running "A popular ladies' contest."

A trip to the Panama-Pacific Exposition is something desired by all of the residents of Washington and an opportunity to obtain such a trip merely by the use of perhaps some little personal effort and without any expense attached thereto is something too good to be overlooked. Such a trip is to be given to the most popular lady of the Mount Pleasant district, declared popular through the number of votes daily deposited in the ballot boxes that have been placed in front of the entrance to the theater, the votes being obtained by patrons of the house, two with each ten cent (adult) admission, and one vote accompanying each half (child's) ticket.

The votes are listed each week and the results thrown upon the screen by slides. In addition photographs of the leading contestants are similarly produced upon the screen. If a patron desires to further aid a contestant, the purchase of one dollar's worth of admission tickets, good for any show, carries with it an additional five votes.

Although this prize is so highly desirable, yet it might prove hard to retain the interest of a large number of contestants throughout the entire life of the contest without some other inducements. Such inducements were made possible through the co-operation of a number of the leading merchants of Washington who have contributed really valuable prizes. In exchange therefor individual slides are run for each, and between the different shows. Thus it is made possible for the second highest to obtain a solid silver comb, brush and mirror set, contributed by a jeweler; the Columbia Graphophone has given an Eclipse Grafonola and one-half dozen double records; a well known ladies' wearing apparel shop has donated a $30 suit; a shoe house will allow the selection from among its entire stock of a pair of the latest side-laced shoes; an electrical concern offers a handsome electric lamp fixture; a furniture house gives a cedar chest; two drug stores are also to furnish prizes, and as a tenth prize the theater holds out a season ticket good for two persons.

Naturally, interest in the competition at the present time is at a high pitch; there is a whole string of likely contestants and there is also a possibility of adding more prizes to the list. As long as this interest continues the house will "stand 'em out to the curb," as has been evidenced from the start. It is a good paying proposition and the entire expense of the contest is that incident to the trip.

CHATAUQUAS TAKE BUSINESS.

Numerous complaints are coming in from the more southern states of bad business brought about by the competition offered from the holding chatauquas in the various cities and towns. These chatauquas, according to their programs of events are more in the nature of a traveling vaudeville show and it would seem as though religion was of minor importance. They are held twice daily and for the most part stay in the different places about a week at a time. Each performance is different and it can readily be seen that the attractions are such as to cause the people to desert all other amusements as long as they are given in the neighborhood. Business throughout this territory is far from being as good as could be desired and the houses are barely breaking even.

ON MAKING OF MANY PICTURES.

It is declared by many of the leading picture men in Washington that there will soon be a tremendous slump in motion pictures for the reason that the manufacturers and exhibitors are feeding reels to the public as fast as they possibly can be turned out. It is their belief that "familiarity breeds contempt," and that as subjects are being turned out with such terrible rapidity, the public will soon become tired of them. "It would be a good thing for the business," said a prominent exhibitor, "if the motion picture houses could follow the example of the theaters and close down tight during the heated season. The manufacturers should cease producing and the sign 'Will open September 15' placed in front of the doors of the exchanges and the houses. Give the public a rest and they will come back stronger than ever during the fall.

"The one difficulty which attends such a scheme is the airdomes. As long as they exist, nothing can be done, or at least as long as the exchanges are willing to furnish them service, but I really believe that if the lid were put on tight in the summer it would work to the betterment of the business," said this exhibitor.

HIGH JINKS AT AIRDOME.

A Charlie Chaplin contest at the M Street Airdome threatened to break up the night's performance, so great was the interest manifested in the antics of the participants. Davis Bros., who operate the park, offered a prize of $5 for the best imitation of the famous comedian. More than a score of candidates presented themselves, each dressed in the latest Chaplin fashions. So excited did the audience become that they stood upon the park benches and as a result several of them had to be sent to the bench hospital. It is declared that this was one of the greatest drawing cards of the season. Davis Bros. found it quite difficult to crowd all who desired to witness the fun into the park. They are "wise to the trick" now and should they repeat the performance they would flash a slide requesting their patrons to refrain from allowing their superabundance of hilarity to get the best of them and to retain their seats during the progress of the fun. The amateurs were good, many giving excellent interpretations of Chaplin art, particularly one who was accompanied by a dog of about the size of a postage stamp which was led around the reserved space at the end of a rope an inch in thickness.

CAPITAL CITY ITEMS.

Robert H. Campbell, Jr., manager of the Olympic, 1431 You street, northwest, is bemoaning the loss of his "high-powered" automobile which was last week the victim of a particularly audacious attack of a popularly known car of small power. The two cars met in collision and were very badly damaged, but luckily Mr. Campbell and the driver of the other automobile escaped with little more than a bad shaking up. The fault seems to have been with the other driver and Mr. Campbell stands a fair chance of being reimbursed.

Howard & Wells, who operate the Bijou in Wilmington, N. C., are reported to be erecting another fine house in that place.

Mr. Wertheimer, who operates the Victoria and Grand theatres in Cumberland, Md., was a visitor here last week arranging his service for those houses.

Herbert M. Osborn, the genial young manager of the Pathe Exchange, leaves for Chicago in company with George R. Allison, manager of the Atlanta, Ga., branch, for Chicago, Ill., where they will attend the convention of Pathe managers. En route they will meet G. H. Atwood of the Philadelphia office and the three will take the trip together. Mr. Osborn is also planning a vacation trip which will take him up the St. Lawrence River and through the Thousand Islands.

Plans are being made to film the annual outing of Kallipolis Grotto, M. O. O. E. R., a large Masonic organization, to be held July 28 at Chesapeake Beach. This promises to be one of the events of the summer and a number of the local picture men are taking a prominent part in the preparation of the many unique stunts for which the order is noted. A group of its members last week were visitors at the Lubin plant in Philadelphia.

TWO NEW CORPORATIONS FOR JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

APPLICATION has been made at Tallahassee, Fla., the capital, for the incorporation of the Southern Film Corporation of which D. C. Randolph is president and general manager, capitalized at $3,000, a film distributing organization with headquarters in Jacksonville.

Mr. Randolph is a native of South Carolina, but for the past ten years has been located in New York City, where he has been identified with the motion picture business. He controls the exclusive Southern exhibiting rights to a number of photoplays and has recently returned from New York, where he obtained the franchise of the Gotham Film Co., Inc., The Photoplayers, Inc., and several other big independent feature photoplays. The territory covered by the Southern Film Corporation is North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Florida.

The second new company is the Florida Photoplay Co., a local concern, has received its $10,000 charter of incorporation for the manufacturing of motion pictures.

The company has a capital of $10,000, there being 1,000 shares at $10 each, and is headed by G. H. Hamilton as president, with main offices in Jacksonville and studio located at Riverview, just outside of the city.

According to the articles of incorporation, The Florida Photoplay Co. will engage in the general manufacturing business, will make, create and produce motion pictures and will also conduct and operate a school for training. The highest amount of indebtedness which the company may assume at any time is placed at $50,000.

The incorporators of the company are all residents of Jacksonville and the officers are as follows: G. H. Hamilton, president, 90 shares; W. F. Brown, vice-president, 50 shares; M. Balue, secretary, 25 shares, and W. R. Best, treasurer, 18 shares. All of the officers, together with M. Best, constitute the board of directors.

JACKSONVILLE SHORT ITEMS.

Directors and officers of the Theatrical Club are holding meetings, it is said, with a view of settling up the affairs of the body and reorganizing at an early date. The doors of the club have been closed for some time pending reorganization, it is believed, on account of lack of interest on the part of a number of the members.

The Theatrical Club was organized last March, promising to become one of the most popular Bohemian institutions of the city. The Charter is said to make it necessary to hold a number of meetings before reorganization can be effected, and it is the hope of the officers, directors and actively interested members to have the institution operating again in a short time.

The "Free Round Ticket" plan seems to be somewhat of a drawing card for the Grand theater, which is evidenced by the increase of patronage for the past two weeks.

The Imperial theater is still pulling them with the "Goddess" on Monday and the "Blue Ribbon Features" on Thursday. The Imperial has a seating capacity of seven hundred, but could use many more on these days.

Mr. Byron Bryant, who opened the Pathe exchange here some few months ago, is back with us again, having been transferred from New Orleans. Mr. Bryant came back to relieve "Sir Edwin Baker" who is now in the feature game for himself.

The Pastime theater has closed for the summer, which at least adds a few nickels to the remaining six.

Mr. A. R. Harper of Gainesville, Fla., has taken over the Republic theater and announces a change of policy, second run licensed films at five cents, discontinuing the heavy feature program.

Twelve monster high-speed fans varying in diameter from five to eight feet have been installed; these gather the air one hundred feet above the street level and blow it over ozonators which distribute it equally over the entire house.

While looking over the property of the theater the first day he assumed charge Mr. Harper fell through a trap door in the stage and broke his arm in two places. He was at once removed to the hospital where he is resting until he will be able to take charge again. Mr. W. R. White who at one time was connected with the Florida Ostrich Farm, will serve as manager until Mr. Harper recovers.

INTERCHANGE OF SCHOOL FILMS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

"INDIANAPOLIS ought to get in touch with Philadelphia on the question of an interchange of school pictures" reads an editorial in an Indianapolis newspaper. The editorial peels the hide off the educators for apparently being stone blind to the great advantage of the motion picture as a means of education. The same editorial compliments the film producers for the higher standard work being brought out now, compared with "the dangerous, blood and thunder type of a few years ago."

INDIANA SMALL TALK.

F. H. Wyatt, of the National Motion Picture Company, has closed a deal with Mrs. Ohming of the Starland theater, Michigan City, for a series of moving pictures of local scenes to be shown in the Starland. Wyatt is making similar contracts in Laporte, Niles, and Dowagiac, Mich.

The Brazil, Ind., picture houses threw slides of the national hymn on the screen as part of the July 4 celebration. The audiences stood and sang in chorus, led by the theater musicians.

F. M. Osborn has opened a picture show at Bruceville, Ind., with an up-to-date equipment. The house seats 300.

The Rochester, Ind., folk are very much interested in the "Romance of Elaine" because the wife of Leo D. Wharton, the producer, was formerly Besse Emrick of Rochester.

The John W. Ruskin pictures are getting first page notice in the Indianapolis News by an agreement that a percentage of the receipts shall go to the News Fresh Air Fund.

Several lost children having turned up in the picture houses asleep or contented, the police of Bluffton, Ind., now make it a rule to search all picture houses first when lost youngsters are reported.

E. T. Allen, Sullivan, Ind., has leased quarters and will open a picture theater soon.

F. W. Myers will open an aerdome at North Vernon, Ind

John Pruett has bought the Royal theater, Rockville, Ind., and will remodel it. It is the second house for Pruett in Rockville.

The Majestic theater, South Bend, Ind., is being remodeled.

G. H. Summitt and Isaac Brown of Sheridan, have leased Tucker Hall, Whitestown, Ind., and will open a motion picture theater. Music will be furnished by the Victrola.

R. T. Lyons has bought the New Superba theater from Kiefer Vestal and will run a five cent show each night instead of ten cent shows every other night.

INDIANA NOTES (Continued).

T. O. Ballard and son of Franklin have erected an airdome at Whiteland, Ind.

Last year Covington, Ind., merchants gave a free picture show once a week. It was a big hit and this year the free show is being given twice a week, Tuesday and Thursday. Manager Ford is furnishing good entertainment.

Ira Law, "a good sport," at Terre Haute, bought a thousand tickets of the American theater to treat the boys of the Flora Gulich Boys Club and the Y. M. C. A. The American theater, by the way is being sued by Mrs. Emma Hoberg, who charges that the theater has encroached 22½ inches on her property.

The Starette, Newcastle, Ind., is featuring the Camera Fiend local pictures to big crowds. The Theatorium, Newcastle, is getting its share with the war pictures.

The Columbia Aerdome at Clinton, Ind., staged a wedding, Pearl Stultz and Douglas M Little entering a contract to beat it together henceforth as one. Little is a member of the stock company furnishing part of the aerdome entertainment.

The Bryan theater, Rockport, Ind., has been remodeled. The side aisles have been removed and one bigger one made in the center. The old chairs have been replaced by opera chairs.

The Bell theater, Warsaw, Ind., after having been declared unsafe by the state inspection bureau has been allowed to reopen.

Manager J. R. Denniston of the Grand, Anderson, Ind., was chosen to test the Sunday law. If arrested the other exhibitors of Anderson were to back the case through the courts. Both Denniston and L. L. Richmond, his operator, were arrested. They put up cash bond and were released.

Building Inspector Kerth has notified Evansville, Ind., exhibitors that they can sell only enough tickets to fill the house. The law says that no one shall stand in the aisles except city officials on duty and two employees of each theater. "The law is strict," said Kerth, "and I intend to enforce it. The warning I am sending is the last. Every violation henceforth will be followed by arrest."

Paul Curry of the Habit theater, Tipton, Ind., is giving the local fans a chance to appear in a film, "The Bachelor's Dream," which has been purchased from a Chicago publishing house and will be produced in a Tipton park.

The news is current in Indiana that the Fox Film corporation is to install movies in the transcontinental dining cars en route to the Panama-Pacific exposition.

A. L. Moss, Philip Niccum and C. E. Budrow are the committee in charge of the movie shows to be given free on the public square at Flora, Ind.

D. D. Sherrin, of the Motor Shop, Indianapolis, is using motion picture to illustrate the difference between a Ford without the Gray & Davis starter and a Ford with the starter.

B. A. Radabaugh has sold his Dunkirk, Ind., theater, The Star, to John McAllister of East Liverpool, Ohio.

The Terre Haute Tribune and the Orpheum theater are putting on a local film entitled "The Mysterious Tribune Girl." Prizes are being offered for the best solution of the mystery.

Phil Matz is said to be the new owner of the Jefferson theater, Elkhart. Matz was negotiating for it, the purchase price being mentioned as $35,000. The Elkhart Trust Company acquired the property a year ago at a receiver's sale.

Ed Fouts installed fifty new seats in the Star theater, Union City.

W. B. Sickler is to open the Electric theater, Bunker Hill, Ind.

Manager Smith was asked by colored folk of Terre Haute not to run "The Nigger" in his house, the Grand, but Manager Smith convinced them the show was not objectionable.

Miss Katherine Hartzburg, cashier of the Princess, Vincennes, saved the evening's receipts the other night for Manager Robert Sullivan by quick action. The would-be thief made a quick grab for the cash box through the ticket window, but Miss Hartzburg managed to brush it back and before the stranger could get his hand out, she struck him a sharp blow on the hand with a club she had nearby. She screamed and bystanders gave chase, but without success.

V. U. Young, Gary, Ind., is to manage the Grand theater for the owners. Mr. Young is the Gary pioneer in the movie business and is heavily interested in the Art and the Orpheum theaters.

NEW REGENT TO BE SPACIOUS.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

WHEN completed the Regent theater will, according to the elaborate plans now being carried out, become the finest moving picture house in Ottawa. In draughting the plans it is obvious that the style of the Strand theater in New York has been brought into many advantages and a wonderful system of ventilation, at a great cost, will be installed. In the construction of the exterior of the building white terra cotta will, for the most part, be used, while the material for the interior has not yet been decided upon. Part of the ventilation system will include the installation of mechanism whereby it will be possible to practically raise the roof from the building in hot summer weather or when desired. Large pipes in the basement will also force cold air into the box seats, which arrangement, in co-operation with the roof elevating plan, will prove a means of keeping the house perpetually filled with fresh air.

The site which has been bought out by the promoters of the project could not possibly be improved upon in the city. With a great attractive entrance at the corner of Bank and Sparks streets, the building will extend back on Bank street a distance of 110 feet with a frontage on Sparks street of 72 feet. In the basement will be fitted up a comfortable smoking room for the employees of the house, and, consistent with the ideas of Mr. Finlay in regard to the comforts of patrons, a spacious ladies' waiting room will be provided. To keep within the provisions of local by-laws respecting crowding of theaters, there will be one entrance, but several exits on both Bank and Sparks streets. The contractors have been instructed to provide wide aisles throughout the building and special attention has been paid to comfort in the purchase of the seats. An excellent up-to-date lighting system will be put in and no expense will be saved in making plans for music.

KEN FINLAY RESIGNS.

The change in management of three of the largest moving picture houses of Ottawa has been brought about in the resignation of Mr. Ken E. Finlay from his position as chief manager of the Imperial, Family and Francais theaters. Mr. Finlay has been succeeded by Mr. Erroll Elting, of New York, well known in Ottawa for his connection with the Roma Reade Stock Co., the productions of which were given a successful run, in the old Grand Opera House, of fifty-two weeks, under his capable management two years ago.

Mr. Finlay has severed his association with the company controlling the three above mentioned theaters in order that he may be able to devote his entire time to the promotion of his own interests in the city. At the present time he is looking after the Princess theater on Rideau street, owned by Mr. H. Sugarman, and is also superintending personally the construction of his new theater, The Regent, which will be opened on the magnificent site of the corner of Sparks and Bank streets by the first of October. Mr. Finlay is the head of a company of influential local business men who are building this theater at an estimated cost of $200,000

Exhibitor Ken Finlay is the oldest moving picture house manager in Ottawa. He is only thirty years of age this month, but also celebrates the fifteenth year of his association with the business. He conducted the first theater in the city, the old People's theater on Rideau street, fifteen years ago, and the popularity of the pictures in Ottawa is in a great measure due to his connection with the industry. This week he returned from a tour of American and Canadian cities, including Montreal, Toronto and Detroit, and claims that the conditions in Ottawa are much better than in Montreal and away ahead of Toronto and Detroit.

ANNIVERSARY OF FLOWER.

The anniversary of the opening of the Flower theater on Sparks street, Ottawa, took place this week with a special program of pictures. The house was opened a year ago under the management of Mr. Allan Cooper, of Ottawa, and has met with all kinds of success.

NEW COMPANY FORMED.

The National Amusements Co., Ltd., has recently been incorporated by the Dominion government, with a capital of $100,000. While it will likely increase its capital for the construction of additional moving picture and playhouses, the officials have announced that for the present it will confine its financial resources to the building of a large moving picture house on George street, near Dalhousie. The work on the proposed project will commence early in the fall.

MIDNIGHT AT MAXIM'S—("Broadway Favorites"—Four Parts—July 12).—Shye, seated under a tree near the seminary, is not so wrapped in his studies as to fail to see the trim ankle displayed by Tottie as she stoops to tie her shoe lace. His eyes stray upward until they rest upon her face. At once Shye forgets all about his studies. The love-sick young man follows Tottie, who hapens to be on her way to Maxim's, where she is due to take part in a Saturday matinee performance. Returning home, he suggests to his three friends (much to their amazement) that they make a trip to Maxim's that evening. Anxious to see the girl who has made such an impression upon him, Shye waits for midnight, when the cabaret is due to commence, with extreme impatience. The sight of Tottie in the various numbers fills him with ecstasy.

The first part of the performance over, Shye collects the flowers from the holders on the tables and then endeavors to enter Tottie's dressing room. A man guards the door, however, and Shye is compelled to grease his palm before he can gain admittance. Tottie appears glad to meet him and promises to have supper with him after the show. Unknown to Shye, his friends are also smitten with the little blonde and like him, get Tottie's promise to have supper with them. The men hasten around to the rear entrance and the sight of each other waiting for the same girl fills them with ire. A fight is about to take place, when out walks Tottie, clinging to the arm of the individual whom all had to bribe before they could see her. Calmly introducing Tottie to the love-stricken youths as his wife, he and the little blonde walk away.

A FLASHLIGHT FLIVVER—(July 13).As a photographer, Ham convincingly proves himself to be the unluckiest man in seven counties. Bud is to blame for most of Ham's difficulties. For instance, while Ham is talking to some prospective customers, Bud places a seltzer bottle in the camera. As the result, when Ham attempts to snap some pictures, he douses his patrons with water. The sight of Bud doing a war dance in the next room, arouses Ham's suspicion. Without further ado, he aims the camera towards his assistant and almost drowns him. Later, a delegation of firemen visit the studio, but, just as they are ready to pose, the fire bell rings. With one accord, the red-shirted heroes dash madly out of the studio, using Ham and his camera as doormats.

Angelica Footlights visits the studio with her son Billie. In reply to Ham's queries as to what pose she desires to assume, Angelica removes her cloak and stands before the photographer clad only in tights. In an effort to recover his self-possession, Ham stalks out of the room, takes a kick at Bud, and then returns to the scene. The kick makes Bud anxious to square accounts. Filling a flashlight pan with nitro-glycerine and gunpowder, he gives it to Ham and hotfoots it to safety. Unaware of the trick Bud had played upon him, Ham poses Angelica and then puts a match to the explosive. What follows, ruins the studio and buries Ham and his camera under the wreckage!

THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW PATH—(Special—Two Parts—July 14).—Harris' lustful eyes have long noticed Frances, one of the employees of the Dominick store, but the girl has steadily resisted his advances. The sole support of her mother, her heart is filled with fear lest she be dismissed. The proprietor of the store seeks the assistance of Leonore, in his effort to solve the mysterious thefts which cost him thousands of dollars annually. The special investigator, aided by Talcott, a headquarters man, tackles the case. They speedily discover a weak spot in Harris. The sleuths learn that the general manager has compelled Frances to promise to attend a stag party he is to give that evening. Calling upon the girl at her boarding house, Leonore finds her clad in a gown which Harris had taken from the store's stock and sent to her. Fearing dismissal, Frances turns a deaf ear to Leonore's plea not to attend the affair.

In the meantime, Talcott has succeeded in winning Harris' friendship. The sleuth is invited to the stag party. He finds a gay crowd of men and women present. At the proper moment, the attendants enter bearing a huge urn. This is placed on the table. When opened, Frances is found within. The leering eyes bent upon her, frighten the girl. Evading Harris' outstretched hands she rushes from the place. Talcott helps her escape. Back home the girl goes. Humiliated at what has occurred, Frances attempts to slay herself. Leonore saves her in the nick of time. Filled with indignation, the sleuths lay a trap for Harris. As the result, Leonore catches him in the act of rifling the safe late next night. The thief turns the tables upon her and locks the girl in the safe, but the timely arrival of Talcott saves Leonore's life and results in Harris' capture.

FOR HER BROTHER'S SAKE—(A Carlyle Blackwell—Alice Joyce Re-Issue—July 16).—Carried away by a landslide Bob Graham finds gold at the foot of the hill. The mine proves a rich one and nets Bob a fortune. Mary, his wife, receives a message from her brother Allen, in which the boy informs her that he is wanted by the police on a smuggling charge. Allen begs her to send him enough money to make his escape. Mary asks Bob for the money. In her desire to keep the story secret, the girl refuses to tell Bob what use she intends to make of the cash.

His suspicions aroused, the husband refuses his wife's request. Later, while Bob is at the mine, Allen calls. Returning unexpectedly, the husband sees the two. Ignorant of their relationship, he believes Mary guilty of a clandestine love affair. Mary conceives the idea of hiding her brother in the mine. Unknown to the girl, work has been suspended because a cave-in is feared. Bob follows Mary and Allen. To his horror, they enter the mine. The cave-in, which occurs a few minutes later, blocks up the entrance.

Deeming the accident a "judgment of Heaven upon the guilty pair," Bob returns to his cabin where he commences packing his belongings. While thus engaged the man comes upon a photo of Allen. On the back of this picture, Bob finds an inscription which reveals the boy's identity. A further search brings to light the letter received by Mary. Filled with remorse, Bob summons his men and hastens to rescue his wife and her brother. The two are saved in the nick of time. When Allen recovers his strength Bob gives him money and aids him to escape. When the sheriff and his posse arrive shortly afterwards, they find their man safely across the border.

A DEED OF DARING—(Episode No. 36 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—July 17).—Upon learning that a gang of smugglers are using freight cars to bring Chinamen across the border, the railroad officials order all employees to keep a strict watch for traffic of this nature. Daniels, Helen's relief, is a member of the smuggling band and keeps in touch with his chief by means of messages concealed in oranges. Helen gets one of the fruit by mistake and in opening it, discovers that a number of Chinamen are due to be smuggled across the border inside a freight car that morning. Daniels, learning that Helen is aware of his gang's operations, reports to his chief. The smugglers descend upon the station and bind and gag the girl before she can give the alarm. Helen is thrown into the baggage room. Casey, her dog, tries to aid his mistress and finally leaps out of the window. His antics cause several trainmen to follow him, and the animal leads them to the station. Helen's predicament is discovered and she is freed.

By this time, the smugglers have loaded several cases containing Chinamen, into a freight car. Seeing Helen and the trainmen approaching the criminals hold up the engine crew of the freight and compel the men to pull out of the station. Nothing daunted, Helen and her men commandeer a locomotive and go in pursuit. In accordance with Helen's plan, the locomotive overhauls the freight and passes it. Reaching a bridge Helen makes a leap for the brace bar and then climbs hand over hand until she is directly above the center of the parallel track. The freight approaches and Helen drops to the roof of one of the cars. Taking Daniels by surprise, she wrests his revolver from him and holds up the rest of his band. The freight is halted and the smugglers placed under arrest.

THE CROOKED PATH (Special—Three Parts—July 19).—Lynn and Alan both love Mary. Because he deems it his duty to support his widowed mother, Lynn hides his love although he is the favored suitor. Piqued, Mary becomes Alan's wife. Both boys work in the village bank. Lynn comes upon Alan while the latter is intoxicated and helps him home. Thus Lynn meets Mary for the first time since her marriage. Alan witnesses this meeting. His jealousy aroused, the man orders Lynn from his house.

Obsessed by a desire for revenge, Alan steals a sum of money from the bank and falsifies Lynn's books so as to make it appear that the latter had committed the crime. The defalcation is discovered and Lynn is sent to prison for two years. Upon his release from the penitentiary, Lynn returns home and succeeds in securing a position. Lynn learns that only Mary's kindness saved his mother from starvation. Alan comes upon the two while Lynn is expressing his gratitude. In his jealousy, Alan tries to shoot his foe. Mary comes between the men and receives the bullet in her arm. The injury is slight and she soon recovers.

Dade, an ex-convict drifts into town. Alan sees an opportunity to abscond with a large sum of money. Dade observes the scoundrel placing this money into a traveling bag and trails the thief home. While Alan is getting ready to flee, Mary discovers what he has done. Her frantic pleas fall upon deaf ears. Mockingly telling his wife that he is leaving her to her lover, Alan turns to go. Dade, determined to possess the bag containing the money, blocks his path. While the two are struggling, Mary runs to summon Lynn. When the latter, accompanied by the police, reach the scene, they find Dade and Alan, their fingers clutched about each other's throats, dead.

THE SPOOK RAISERS—(July 20).—Chased by a Limb of the Law in the shape of Patrolman Doolittle, Ham and Bud take refuge in the house occupied by Madame De Shivers, a spiritualist. Mrs. Doolittle, a seance "fan," is present. Ham and Bud are scared speechless at first, but when they discover the nature of the fake, and how easily Madame De Shivers gathers in the cash, they resolve to get into the game. The first step is to get the necessary paraphernalia. This they do by stealing the stuff belonging to Madame De Shivers. Renting a house they advertise their forthcoming seance. Among the dupes who attend, is Mrs. Doolittle. But for the fact that Bud falls asleep just as he is supposed to do some tall and lofty ghosting, the seance might be a success. As it is, Ham finds it necessary to give his pal a swift kick. This wakes Bud up and makes him get on the job.

In the meantime, Patrolman Doolittle arrives home to find a note written by his wife informing him that she is at Professor Ham's ghost emporium. Forthwith, the policeman departs to bring his better half home. Unable to get into the house via the front door, Doolittle tries the kitchen entrance. As a result he gets into the room where Ham and Bud keep their spiritualistic paraphernalia. The realization of the manner in which his wife is being duped arouses the policeman's ire. Presently, when Ham summons his ghost, Doolittle stalks in. The seance busts up right then and there!

THE STRANGLER'S CORD—(Episode No. 1 of "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Special—Two Parts—July 21).—A series of remarkable attempts are made upon the life of Don Louis, who is stopping at the Grand Hotel. About to retire, he finds a cobra coiled in his bed. Later, a strangler's cord swishes through the air and encircles the Spaniard's neck. The man escapes death by a miracle. The third attempt occurs when a huge chandelier suspended directly above the table at which Don Louis sits, crashes down. Unnerved, the Spaniard begs Hilton, one of the hotel detectives, to spend the night with him. A few hours later, Hilton is found bound and gagged. He tells of a mysterious visitor who overpowered him and kidnapped Don Louis. No trace of the culprit and his victim can be found. Renee, daughter of Valdez, the cigarmaker who supplies the hotel with his wares, informs Hilton that her father has disappeared. The sympathetic detective accompanies the girl home. The two hear strange noises in the curing house back of the cottage. Investigating, Hilton comes upon Valdez and Don Louis. The latter is buried neck deep in the ground.

Hilton, attempting to interfere, is overpowered by Valdez, who appears insane. The man informs him that years before, Don Louis had him kidnapped, after which the scoundrel stole his wife. The woman later died in want. From the hour he learned the truth, the wronged man lived only for revenge. His story told, Valdez kneels beside the don's head and slowly shoves a cobra toward the man's face. Frances Ballou, summoned by Renee, arrives just in time to save the don's life. Hilton tells her the story while liberating Don Louis. The terrible ordeal has revealed to the latter the depths of his infamy and he slinks away. Her heart touched, Frances resolves to keep the matter from the police.

IN DOUBLE HARNESS—(Special—Two Parts—July 23).—Although Thomas and Marjorie are determined to marry, they keep this secret for the time, fearing objections on the part of Mrs. Manning. In fact this fear is so great that Marjorie is inclined to back down when she and her sweetheart go for their marriage license. To settle the matter, Thomas picks her up bodily and carries her before the clerk in charge. The lovers later inform Thomas' mother of their approaching marriage. Mrs. Manning appears flustered and the sweethearts mistake this for anger. They are finally wed and leave for Savannah. It is Thomas' intention that he and Marjorie shall live with his mother. Fear of "mother-in-law" trouble mars the happiness of the newlyweds.

While in Savannah, the couple meet the famous "Waving Girl" and learn her pitiful story. It makes them vow never to leave each other—and in taking the oath the thought uppermost in the minds of each is lest trouble with Mrs. Manning shall come between them. Returning home, the two approach the Manning cottage with heavy hearts. They find Thomas' mother gone, but a note on the table informs them that she will return shortly. When Mrs. Manning finally does arrive, she is accompanied by a man whom she blushingly introduces to her children as their new father. Thomas and Marjorie then learn that Mrs. Manning's peculiar conduct prior to their marriage was due to her fear lest they discover her secret!

THE GIRL ON THE ENGINE—(Episode No. 37 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—July 24).—When informed by Helen that the rival railroad proposes to cross the Salt Lake's tracks, McKay, Division Superintendent, rushes a guard of men to Lone Point. This temporarily blocks the rival road's plan, but only until its force of men has been strengthened. A freight pulls into the Lone Point station. Although the water in the locomotive tank is almost exhausted, the engine crew decide to have their lunch before filling up. Word comes to Helen that the Salt Lake's men have been attacked and overpowered by the rival road's forces. She immediately tries to get in touch with headquarters, but finds that the wires have been cut.

Knowing that unless the rival road's men can be blocked, they will throw their line across the Salt Lake's tracks, Helen desperately tries to find a way in which to best the intruders. The freight in front of the station gives her an idea. Leaping into the cab of the engine, she opens the throttle and sends the train dashing toward the spot where the intruders are at work. Knowing that the water is all gone, Helen climbs out on the swaying engine and opens the exhaust valve so as to allow all the steam to escape. As the result, the freight comes to a dead halt just as it reaches the spot where the rival road's men propose to cross the tracks.

Although Helen is captured, word of what has taken place reaches McKay and he rushes to the scene with more men. The tracklayers try hard to shove the blocking train out of the way, but meet with no success. With the arrival of McKay's men a hot hand-to-hand fight ensues. It ends when the rival road's men are beaten and made prisoners.

VITAGRAPH.

THE HIGHWAYMAN—(July 19).—Farmer Hawkins has strenuous objections to Billy as a would-be son-in-law, preferring John, a big, husky farmhand of 300 pounds or so. Billy is little, but before he gets through, shows the others, that size counts little against gray matter. Billy arranges with Lucy to elope but father overhears their plans and locks Lucy in her room. Again agility and cleverness triumph, for Billy helps her escape, and the two get away on a couple of big draught horses. John and Hawkins pursue in a buggy. The elopers are held up by Dusty Rhodes, a tramp who has stolen a shotgun from a farmer, but Billy succeeeds in overpowering the tramp and binds him to a tree. Then partly disguised, he holds up John and Hawkins as though he meant business. He forces the frightened John to tie Pa up to a tree, then ties up John alongside of him, treating him a little roughly in the process. Without being recognized, he takes the buggy, picks up Lucy and the pair drive to town where they are married. On their return, Billy and Lucy get out of the buggy and stroll along on foot until they "discover" Pa and John, who are now reduced to helpless rage. Billy pretends surprise, then remarks, "John's a big, husky fellow, why didn't he break the ruffian's neck?" Hawkins looks at his companion in disgust, while Billy announces HE will get the scoundrel. Retiring to a distance he fires the shotgun, tears his clothing, then comes back with the proper triumphant air, exclaiming, "I got him!" Pa Hawkins slaps him on the back, calls him a hero, then Billy announces his marriage to Lucy. John wilts completely at this, but Hawkins is too busy giving the newlyweds his blessing to pay any attention to him.

THE LODELEI MADONNA (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—July 20).—Brought up in the atmosphere of the convent, Malcolm's one great ambition is to paint a Madonna worthy to be placed in the great Mission Chapel. His wealthy and wordly Uncle Morrison introduces the boy into the life of the world, the boy's lack of sophistry proving a great source of amusement to him. In Tahiti, they visit Vesey's "Palace," a notorious dive where a beautiful girl called Alma, or "The Lorelei" is the premiere danseuse. King La Farge, the richest pearler in the South Sea Islands, is favored above the other habitues of the place, so that when Malcolm becomes fascinated with the dancer and shows it, he nearly kills the young man. Malcolm's artistic soul is set ablaze when the Lorelei to add variety to the entertainment, impersonates the Madonna, and his reverent admiration awakens in the woman a desire to know the only man who had never looked upon her as his lawful prey. She conceives a genuine love for Malcolm, and he knowing nothing of her mode of life, learns to love her. But he finds her dancing for La Forge's edification, understands the situation at last, and his idol shattered, Malcolm turns against her. But she has proved the neccessary inspiration for his painting of the Madonna, and through it, he is led to believe that the woman's reformation is complete and that she truly loves him. He is about to take her in his arms when La Farge, in a frenzy of rage shoots—intending to kill Malcolm, but instead kills Alma. Malcolm returns to the little Mission town and there finds happiness with Alice, the companion of Convent days, as his wife.

"FOLLOWING THE SCENT"—(July 21).—Deeply infatuated with the Widow Stuyvesant, a society matron, Mr. Astorbilt, a millionaire, neglects his charming young wife, who cares nothing for society's artificialities. Count Hasno-Coinsky, a Russian nobleman, almost comes to blows with Astorbilt over the widow, and an account of the affair, greatly exaggerated, appears in the morning paper. Deeply hurt Mrs. Astorbilt now goes into society herself, and by reason of her charming personality, becomes the center of attraction. Astorbilt finds he has quite a bump of jealousy and tries to get back into his wife's good graces, but she has determined on a plan to teach him a good lesson. After letting him smell her latest perfume, "Breezes of the Orient" for which she has purchased exclusive rights to use, she tells him when he finds the one who uses that perfume by her leave, he will know the only man she loves. Wild with jealousy, Astorbilt makes himself ridiculous among his friends and acquaintances in his wild goose chase after the evasive scent. He fails, however, to find the guilty man. The idea becomes almost an obsession with him until he has a fistic encounetr with Percy Vanderpool; then his wife decides that he has been punished enough, so she plays the trump card. When Astorbilt returns home, and goes towards a closet door she frantically stops him. Of course that strengthens his desire to see what is in there, particularly when he smells that wonderful scent of the Orient he has so long sought. Yanking open the closet door, he prepares to pounce on the despoiler of his home. There stands his little son with the perfume bottle, laughing as hard as he can laugh. Then it dawns upon Astorbilt that this is the only other little man whom his wife loves, and all ends in sublime happiness.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF TOWSER"—(July 22).—When it came to keeping the coalbox full, Towser was certainly a handy dog. He had evolved a scheme whereby, at his master's order, he would run alongside the trains which went by their home, barking at the train crew who would try out their skill throwing coal at the pestiferous animal. After it had gone by, old man Scranton, the dog's owner, would collect the coal. But Towser one day went a little too close to one of the big engines, and departed this life very suddenly. Scranton nearly takes the lives of the trainmen, but Phelps, the young express messenger, comes to their rescue, and handled the enraged Scranton pretty roughly. The old man's pretty nieces Gladys and Bessie accuse Phelps of being a ruffian. He is very humble but falls in love with Bessie, "The little Tartar," and attends the next dance in town in hopes of meeting her again. He finds the girls, but they cut him cold. He sends Bessie a very contrite note, so comically worded, she cannot help smiling, and they are soon friends. Pa Scranton, however breaks up the affair and takes both girls home. Gladys and her beau elope, with Bessie as chaperone. After a thrilling chase by Uncle and the startling use of three coffins, the three are safely stowed away in the baggage car on the 9:15. There Phelps discovers them and succeeds in persuading Bessie to follow her sister's example and elope. In the next town, the minister performs a double marriage ceremony, while Uncle's ruffled feelings are later soothed by the present of a handsome dog as near like Towser as possible. He is completely won over when, on seeing a train roaring by, the new dog gallops after it barking wildly, amid a rain of costly anthracite.

"BIXBIE'S DILEMMA"—(July 23).—An early riser and eager for news of the War, Bixby, in his nightshirt and slippers steals downstairs to the piazza for the morning paper. He steps out, and—Snap! goes the spring lock on the front door. Finally deciding to take a desperate chance, he climbs in the only open window. It happens to be an old maid's bedroom, and Mr. Bixbie is promptly chased out again. He runs to the barn for refuge, but the milkmaid sees him and goes for him with a pitchfork. The racket arouses the people in the house, but all they see is Bixbie scudding across the lawn in his night-shirt. On the street he jumps into a carriage, and the sleepy driver, thinking his fare has arrived, whips up the horse. Then follows a thrilling man-hunt, during which Bixby manages to collect—literally on the fly—a silk hat, a Prince Albert coat and vest, a pair of shoes and even a shirt and collar. The Jew from whom he stole the coat and vest tells the police, who join his pursuers. Apparently the whole town is after the fleeing Bixbie, but he manages to elude them all by climbing a high fence and getting up into a tree. There he puts on his stolen garments, then drops from the tree, properly clothed. Meanwhile, the detectives have been busy, and just as Bixbie walks in for breakfast, they pounce on him. A struggle follows in which the dining room table is overturned and the boarders thrown into a state of wild consternation but the detectives triumph. At the police court the Captain compliments them then, as all the owners of the various garments which Bixbie is wearing are in court he has him stripped to his nightshirt again and thrown into a cell, to meditate on his crowning dilemma.

A PAIR OF QUEENS (Special—2 Parts—July 24).—Jimmie Page and Ed Armstrong are bunkies in Company E, stationed near the Nueces River, Texas. Deep, abiding friendship such as only men know, exists between the two, which is strengthened, when, on a fishing trip, Ed rescues his friend from drowning. Page is very grateful and tells Ed whenever he can serve him not to fail to call on him. Twenty years later, Armstrong, now a widower, living in Arizona, is told he has but a few months to live. He accordingly sends a note to his old friend Jimmie Page, entrusting his daughter, Anita to his care. Page is not overjoyed as he believes the girl to be a mere child, but for old times' sake, accepts the guardianship. Shortly afterwards, he visits New York. There, by a strange turn of fate, he saves Anita, a beautiful 19-year-old girl, from a couple of thugs, but does not learn her identity. He finds a handbag she dropped, containing only her photograph, and falls in love with the picture but can find no trace of its owner. Anita's father dies and she is sent to her guardian, Captain Page. When she arrives, the Captain is out, bemoaning the fate that saddled him with a ward and no mother to care for it. Mac, the Captain's aide, recognizes the girl from seeing her photo in his possession, and arranges a little surprise. Page returns to find the girl playing the piano. Needless to say, his joy knows no bounds on learning the girl of the photo and his ward are one and the same. She soon becomes his wife, and at the wedding feast, Page offers a stirring toast to his old friend and Bunkie, Ed Armstrong.

LUBIN.

THE DISCONTENTED MAN (July 19).—Rodney Blake, a young author, tired of society's artificiality, and believing his sweetheart, Miriam, is faithless, seeks seclusion in the quiet of the country. Still moody, he finds that he cannot write, and he is almost discouraged. Then one day he sees a scene enacted between three of the primitive people of the mining country. Jim Allen and Pete Barton, young miners, court Mary. She leads them to blows, and Jim the stronger and handsomer, bests his adversary. Mary walks off with the victor. Pete, enraged, is about to stab Jim from behind, when Rodney shouts warning, and is the means of saving Jim's life. Thus a strange friendship springs up between these two different men.

Rodney envies Jim's happiness, and one day, when his publishers return his manuscripts with a note that there is the "elusive something" lacking in them he tells Jim that he would gladly exchange his brain for Jim's brawn and happiness. The idea grows upon him, and he finally determines to lead Jim's life for a while. The next day he secures work in the mine. Down in the shaft Pete, still nursing his vengance, attacks Jim. Rodney runs to Jim's assistance, steps on some matches that Pete dropped, and there is a fearful explosion. Rodney and Jim are brought up, and it is discovered that both will be crippled for life, but Pete escapes uninjured. This is indeed the hour of darkness. Jim, big and helpless, his greatest asset—his strength—gone, is spurned by Mary, who now turns to Pete. Rodney sees this, and realizes that he still has something left for the inspiration has come while he reclined alone in his room, and he has written his greatest work. The check he receives brings visions of his book carrying its message to a little family circle, to prospectors in the wilderness, and to young lovers. He thanks God for His divine gift, and then is made supremely happy by the coming of Miriam, who has read of the accident and experienced remorse for her actions. Rodney brings good cheer to Jim by promising to take care of him for life.

A BARNYARD MIX-UP (July 20).—The chicken thieving of Rastus is discovered by Farmer Corntossel who pursues the thief through the haystacks. They have several encounters, but Rastus has peculiarly elastic legs and a strangely bullet-proof body. The farmer's shots roll off his back like marbles, but finally an axe lays Rastus low. He is buried in the garden, but is resurrected in the strangest manner by an explosion of dynamite. The sudden appearance of a ferocious white goat causes the two to forget their enmity and unite against the animal.

"A NEW WAY TO WIN" (July 20).—It's the same old case of mother-in-law trying to run things, but this time John Black thinks he can hire her out of the house and get away with it. Babe (John's wife) and her mother are so surprised that for a few minutes they let him run things. Babe has an idea and tells her mother to wait. Mother goes to visit friends. That afternoon, John gets home and finds that the breakfast things are still in the dining-room and kitchen. Babe comes along and explains that she forgot to get supper in time. Several other little things have happened also because mother is not there.

John goes out on the steps to think things over. Babe uses about seven cents worth of salt in cooking their simple supper and John misses mother's cooking. He decides to go and bring mother back and is overjoyed to find that she is just visiting the Smiths. On his bended knee he coaxes her to come back and she reluctantly consents. To make things interesting, she fills her suitcase with bricks and makes him carry it for her. Once more on her native heath she reaches for John's familiar neck to discipline him but Babe interferes and John comes to mother's relief. The three decide to start all over.

"WHEN THE LIGHT CAME IN" (Special—Two Parts—July 21).—The engagement of Tom and Julia meets with the approval of everyone. Julia and her mother prepare the simple trousseau and later her mother dies. It is the first shadow, and plunges Julia into deep gloom. Even Tom's return from his business trip fails to brighten her, and their wedding is postponed for a year. In contrast to Julia's sadness is the girlish gayety of May, her friend. She has tried to persuade Julia to come out into the sunlight and enjoy the awakening of spring, but Julia refuses to leave the house. Once again the wedding day of Tom and Julia approaches. Tom realizes suddenly that it is May he loves and must marry. She says that they must part forever. Tom is in honor bound to marry Julia. Julia quietly and soberly prepares for the wedding. Her sadness irritates Tom and May's winsomeness fills his mind. Once at Julia's Tom comes upon May kissing his photograph and fighting back her tears. He impulsively embraces her and lets her cry herself out in his arms. Julia enters. Explanations are forthcoming and Julia upbraids them for not telling her of their love. She sends them away to seek their own happiness. In her room Julia breaks down. She draws the shades and falls on her bed. Grief has stupefied her.

Tom and May marry. From her home across the street Julia watches through the shutters. The happiness she sees is too much. Julia orders her servant to close every blind in her house—light has gone from her life for all time. Greater happiness comes to Tom and May. Their baby is their greatest joy. Julia, in the dark house, sees all, and her misery increases. Then Tom dies. Julia is both exultant and sorrowful. Day by day May droops. Julia gloats over May's grief. One morning when the boy tries to wake his mother she does not answer. Small as he is, the little fellow knows that help must be obtained. After getting no response to his knocks on neighboring doors, the child crosses the street and taps Julia's door. The child silently grasps her hand and draws her out. Julia allows herself to be led into May's home by the child. She discovers her dead rival. The neighbors decide that the boy must be sent to an orphanage. One woman asks Julia if she will care for him that night. She agrees, and when morning comes and the little fellow opens the shutters to let in the light, Julia, who has begun to recognize the outside world, refuses to part with the boy when the neighbors come to take him away. The change in her nature was brought about by the loving embraces of the child, who permitted the light to come in.

"DESTINY'S SKEIN" (Special—Three Parts—July 22).—Earl Fortier considers the medical profession his mission in life, but his father wants his son to join him in his lumber business. A quarrel follows and Earl, disowned, goes his own way under another name—Earl Calmet. Later, down South, Fortier employs Tom Green, who lives with his sister Ormi, and is in love with Bertha Hubbard his housekeeper. Both girls realize that Tom is not well mentally, for he is subject to peculiar attacks, during which he is the direct opposite of his normal self, afterwards forgetting everything that has occurred. While under the influence of this change he robs his employer and escapes to the woods. There he hides the money, and later, finding himself wandering about goes home utterly unconscious of any wrongdoing. Fortier, who has witnessed the act but failed to catch him, gets the sheriff, and Tom is arrested. Ormi and Bertha refuse to believe Tom guilty and Ormi makes a public threat to some day "get" Fortier. Soon after she manages to effect Tom's escape and hides him under the house, reached by way of a trap door through the living room floor.

About this time Earl Calmet, now a doctor, goes South for his own health. While out hunting he loses his way and is directed to town by Ormi. Both are deeply interested and Earl is soon haunting her neighborhood in the hope of seeing her. An injured foot gives him an opportunity to assist her and their acquaintance rapidly ripens into love. Ormi's great fear for Tom and Bertha's chance discovery of him with the stolen money at the tree during one of his incomprehensive moments keep both girls in a state of great anxiety. Earl cannot help noticing it, but can get nothing reassuring from Ormi. Finally to save herself and Tom, and not knowing him to be Fortier's son, she agrees to marry him providing he will not question anything and stand by her. He agrees and they go to town for the ceremony.

Tom, under another spell, meets Fortier and in a struggle Fortier is killed. A sash ribbon of Ormi's that Tom wore about his face is found beside his body and Ormi is suspected. Tom returns home in his right mind, not knowing what he has done. Previously Ormi had again publicly threatened Fortier and when she is accused in Earl's presence, the latter recalls her constant agitation and the fact that she was alone in the woods when the supposed murder happened. Earl believing that she married him in revenge, returns to her home where he believed she lived alone. There he encounters Tom. A quarrel ensues without either man's knowing who the other is, and as one of Tom's changes comes over him, Bertha bursts into the room and is forced to tell all she knows. Earl calls into practice his medical skill and gets the truth of both the money stealing and the death while Tom is not himself. He is able to cure him and naturally it results in clearing both brother and sister, and a happy future opens for all four.

"HER IDOL" (July 23).—Hedda, a young Italian girl, is the ranch cook. The boys of the ranch tease her until one day she decides she won't stand it any longer. She leaves them in the midst of their dinner and goes out to her favorite spot—a massive rock, in the hills to think it over. McMurtrie, the ranch boss who has been trying to close a land deal with Chief Red Eagle at the Indian agency, returns about this time. Hedda comes back and says she is going to quit and McMurtrie says she is not, threatening to thrash the first man who teases her again.

Ever after that McMurtrie is Hedda's idol, but she keeps her love for him a secret. The owner of the ranch brings McMurtrie a bag of gold to pay the Indian for the land and leaves. McMurtrie becomes fascinated by the gold and battles with a temptation to get away with it. Hedda sees what is going on and her heart is broken, for she realizes that McMurtrie is a thief at heart. She goes to her favorite rock to try and figure out whether she should tell the boys or go to McMurtrie and try to dissuade him. McMurtrie meanwhile decides to hide the gold and does so under the big rock, Hedda watching from concealment. She leaves the money there and goes back to the ranch without disturbing it.

Meanwhile the owner has discovered a flaw in the Indian's title and returns that evening to get back the money. McMurtrie is ready to fly, and Hedda is too late to warn him. He cannot explain where the money is, except to tell the owner that it was stolen during the day. The owner will not believe him, and Hedda enters and takes the crime on her shoulders to shield McMurtrie. She talks so fast that McMurtrie has no chance to tell otherwise, and one of the ranch men coming in at the moment with the bag of money that his dog unearthed, the owner accepts her statement, and telling her she is fired, suggests her quitting the country as well. Out at the rock McMurtrie finds Hedda and tells her that she must stay, which she agrees to do when he suggests that it be as Mrs. McMurtrie.

WHEN WIFIE SLEEPS (July 24).—Bill and wifie pay a visit to the shore. Everything goes well until Bill spies a couple of girls. Seeing that wifie is very busy preparing the lunch, Bill sneaks away. Wifie discovers his absence, and looking sees him in conversation with the girls. Wifie appears, interrupts the tete-a-tete, and chases Bill about the beach. She soon captures him and makes him do penance by wheeling her in a rolling chair. But this does not last for long; wifie goes to sleep, the two girls pass again and flirt with Bill. Bill hires a man to push the chair about and follows the girls to a place of amusement, where he makes himself a general nuisance, until he is finally thrown out on the boardwalk, where he encounters wifie still asleep in the chair. Seeing that wifie knows nothing about his absence, he at once takes charge of the chair and wends his way down the boardwalk, a sadder but wiser Billie.

MINA.

THE FIGHTING KID (July 15).—Jerry, asleep on a park bench, is happy in his dream wherein he brick balls four policeman—police are his Nemesis—when he is rudely awakened by an officer really in flesh, and compelled to move on. In a quiet corner of the park dozing on a bench he spies two tramps, between whom Jerry drops wearily after his run and is soon in the arms of Morpheus. His dreams take him to a harem where he is surrounded by beauties, one of whom he takes into his arms and kisses soundly. In the midst of his osculatory performance he awakens to find that he has been kissing one of the tramps who, offended, sets to punch him. Jerry ducks and the other tramp gets the blow while Jerry scampers away from the scene of action.

Nellie, out for a stroll, is accosted by a bully from whose attentions she flees to Jerry's protection. Jerry fells the masher with a convenient brick and then triumphantly escorts Nellie to her home where he is introduced to her father and mother. Meanwhile the bully revives and passing Nellie's home spies Jerry, for whom he lays in siege. Jerry makes many efforts but cannot escape the bully's vigilance, so finally stretches himself on the lawn for a night's rest. In the morning he finds that the bully, though asleep on a bench, is still on the job. To thwart the bully's purpose Jerry procures a box of tacks, removes the bully's shoes, sprinkles the tacks on the ground around the bench, then proceeds to pummel him. Satisfied with the result Jerry leaves to meet Nellie while the bully obtains re-enforcements. While Jerry is serenading Nellie the attacking party arrives, but before they can complete their plans of vengeance the police come and quell the disturbance. The last scene shows an officer dragging the unwilling Jerry to jail.

How would YOU feel upon receipt of a letter like the one written to us by Messrs. King & Gaynor of Delaware, Ohio? Here it is:

"Replying to your letter, will say 'nothing doing' on a new machine. You should not have made the old one we have on hand so good. It has been running night and day for two and a half years; we hope it will continue two and a half more."

When you consider that some STANDARDS have been in service for six and seven years and are still in use, it will appear that we have some wait before we sell these gentlemen again. But we know that as soon as they require other projectors, they will purchase the American Standard MASTER MODEL.

"THE LITTLE PROSPECTOR"—(July 2).—Broncho Billy has exhausted every foot of ground which might have held gold for them and he makes ready to strike new territory. Their little boy gets his hands on some nitro-glycerin. He has dreams of discovering some gold where his father could find none. He "plants" the explosive but it doesn't go off. Then his sister resets it and it explodes in her face. She is knocked unconscious. The girl proves not to have been seriously injured. Out on the ground, by the newly blasted hole, lies the little son, sobbing because he has hurt his sister. The parents come out rejoicing over the girl's recovery and find the ground strewn with gold.

"THE REV. SALAMANDER UNATTACHED"—(July 12).—The Rev. Salamander was a minister by parentage. That is, when his yearnings for the future ran along the line of professional baseball, his mother took an inventory of his capabilities and determined to make him a minister. She died. He was given a parsonage in a small town and got along very nicely except that Charlotte Bingham the town belle, refused to have anything to do with a country minister. Then one day the manager and catcher of the town baseball squad nearly lost the league pennant. Three pitchers had been knocked out when the Rev. Salamander swung his college arm in the box and struck out two men and won the game on a first bag put out, and a homer. Of course after the crowd finished cheering, the minister and Charlotte drew aside and kissed. No one objected for the town now held the pennant.

BRONCHO BILLY WELL REPAID—(July 9).—Broncho Billy wins out over his rival for the hand of a sweet country girl. Later he meets a girl from the city and falls in love with her. He goes to his fiance and asks her for his ring back. She gives it up, though she is broken hearted. Then Broncho goes to the city to visit the girl who had flirted with him while she was on a vacation to the country. He finds that she is immensely wealthy. She merely laughs at him when she sees him in his countryfied clothes. He then returns to reclaim his old sweetheart only to arrive in time to see her wedded to his rival.

A WOMAN (Special Charlie Chaplin Picture—Two Parts—July 21).—Charlie Chaplin takes a stroll in a park where he sees a man, his wife and daughter seated on a bench. The husband sees a pretty girl passing and smiles at her. She smiles back and he makes an excuse to his wife to get away and follows her. The girl inveigles him into playing a game of blind man's buff, and when he is securely blindfolded robs him of his pocketbook.

Chaplin offers to lead the man back to his wife but instead takes him to the sea and pushes him in. He then introduces himself to the wife and daughter and they take him home with them. When the husband gets back he is introduced to the new found friend. He recognizes Chaplin's voice and a fight is started. Chaplin, after losing part of his wearing apparel, escapes by running upstairs.

Presently he reappears sans moustache, dressed in the daughter's clothing. The flirtatious husband then tries to make up to Chaplin and stirs the wife's jealousy. Another battle is started and the wife discovers that Chaplin is not a woman. He finally is hurled out into the street and wends his sad way homeward.

A BAG OF GOLD (July 19).—John Elliot, a poor inventor, steals 200 pounds sterling from a bank he finds open and perfects his invention. He becomes very rich but savagely irritable, as the crime preys on him. The cashier serves a lengthy term in the Colonies, returns and goes to work in Elliot's engineering department. Believing the cashier to be a labor agitator, Elliot determines to crush him and buys his note for 200 pounds. Elliot's son loves the cashier's daughter. He borrows 200 pounds from Elliot to pay off his sweetheart's father's note. Elliot learns the cashier is the man his theft sent to jail. He undergoes a change of heart and offers assistance to the cashier.

JABEZ'S CONQUEST (Episode No. 3 of "The Adventures of Dominica"—Special -Three Parts—July 20).—Jabez Slocum, American farmer, plans to "do" Europe with his half million fortune not neglecting to tell Braga, an international crook, of his plan. Braga and his assistant, Dominica, scheme to get the half million and nearly succeed—until a third accomplice foils their plot by privately trying to take a hand in the affair. Slocum has delivered a draft for $30,000 to Dominica on her plea that it is to save her brother from jail. Returning to town in a machine the chauffeur, the accomplice, attacks him. Slocum becomes suspicious and returns to the girl's apartment, where she returns the draft.

THE FABLE OF "THE HOME TREATMENT AND THE SURE CURE" (July 21).—Once there was a leading citizen with a daughter named Bernice, who was some offspring. One day Bernice found something out in the sunshine and put it on the rug for father to look at. He called himself Kenneth. Father said he wouldn't stand for any puss willow being grafted on the family tree. Then they planned to give her an overdose of Kenneth. After dinner the turtle doves were given unlimited opportunity for cooing. When Kenneth began appearing for breakfast he ceased to be a romantic figure. On the third day he was just the same to Bernice as the steering wheel. The next day Kenneth had no more chance than a rabbit. While they were still groggy father induced the amateur comic to pull one of his convulsing anecdotes. That was the last straw. Bernice locked up her hope box and was open for other engagements. Moral: Don't get acquainted too soon.

OTHERS STARTED IT BUT SOPHIE FINISHED (July 22).—When his wife dares to buy a new hat, the husband beats her. She receives a telegram from her mother stating that she will arrive that morning to "look the new husband over." Mustang Pete dresses like the mother-in-law and beats the husband as well as Slippery Slim, who takes the husband's part. Having been kicked out of the house, the two rope around him. They, too, catch in the rope kidnap Todd and push him over a cliff with a and dangle in the air, the rope having caught on a tree stump. The husband falls to the ground and, returning home, is beaten by the real mother-in-law, who has arrived. He attempts to kill himself but is saved by his apologetic wife and mother-in-law.

THE SKY HUNTERS (Special—Three Parts—July 24).—Walt Benton, leader of a mysterious band of moonshiners and theives calling themselves "The Sky Hunters," vows to raise his daughter as a boy because he had wanted a boy to perpetuate the Benton reign. Fifteen years pass. The father dies. The girl is put in his place—as a man, called Konkawa. The Secret Service sends Steve Jackson into the mountains to rout out the Sky Hunters. He meets Konkawa and arouses her suspicions. They struggle in the darkened room. Steve realizes he is not struggling with a man and turns her cheek to his and laughingly kisses her. With the woman in her awakened and with Steve's stories of the women back in the city in her mind, she loses her bitterness and her face melts into the softness of a woman's. She allows Steve to get away because of this feeling. His coming has disrupted the band, however, as the leaders destroy their haunts, fearing the return of more officials. Steve wires Washington that he has failed in his plan and is coming in to plan a new attack. He takes the train that night. The remnants of the Sky Hunters, revengeful and armed, head off the train, and bind and gag Steve at the side of the road. In the meantime the girl is having the first woman's battle of her life. She wants Steve but she also respects her oath to her father. However, she finally gives in to her love, having learned that the Sky Hunters are hopelessly disbanded. At the railway track she unbinds Steve. Later the girl is shown in feminine clothing back in "their" home at Washington.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE CUP OF CHANCE (Special—Three Parts—July 21).—Jack Evans, ambitious clerk for a wealthy broker, Wilson by name, meets Estelle, a butterfly widow. After several calls a romance between Estelle and Jack culminates in an engagement, which is followed by a hand-to-hand combat between Jack and Estelle's lover, Brandon, resulting in a serious injury to little Hope, the widow's four-year-old daughter. Hope wins the heart of Jack, an incident which helps to keep the new home together after the marriage of the butterfly to the ambitious clerk. Miserable months pass, during which Estelle sees that she made a grave mistake in marrying Jack. Her love for Brandon returns, wine parties are again indulged in, Jack's treasury diminishes, little Hope is led into dangerous influences, and all ends in Estelle taking Hope and eloping with Brandon. By the firelight Jack fondles a toy ship of Hope, dreams of the child he loved and settles back in loneliness.

A few years later Jack becomes manager of the firm and the confidante of the owner, Wilson. Hope is now a girl of eighteen. Estelle and Brandon, nearing the margin through their life of sin, bedeck Hope with all the finery possible, anticipating profit through her disposal. Money passes into Brandon's hands from a slaver, who poses as a man of wealth, while the boys who are outdone discover his identity and he is arrested. A theatrical manager, seeing in Hope a possibility for his opera, makes her a promising offer and takes her home. In the home of Estelle and Brandon a fight results, as Estelle claims part of the money given by the slaver. The fight ends in Estelle shooting Brandon and her own death. Hope, accompanied by a mission worker, followed by the theatrical manager, comes on the scene, and Hope sees a new chance for life. She at first pledges herself to the mission worker, but later experiences a revulsion in feeling and becomes "Circe" in an opera.

Jack, freed by the death of his wife, Estelle, is engaged to a society girl, but the engagement is broken by the girl's mother, who learns he is only a clerk. On the day of the cancelled engagement, Jack inherits the wealth of his aged employer. Hope is true to her "Circe" role, acting the same when off the stage, to the chagrin of her admirer, the theatrical manager. The city rings with the name of "Circe." Jack, not knowing it is Hope, refuses all inducements to meet the famous star. Jack, bored by persistent women, escapes to the seashore. Hope in the meantime has reached the limits of her physical endurance, and a huge cabaret affair ends in her collapse, resulting in her secret escape from the theatrical manager to the same resort at which Jack is stopping. Jack and Hope, neither identifying the other, meet. A romance ends in their marriage and a honeymoon is followed by a great reception when Jack introduces his wife into society. Suspicions are awakened and gossip spreads the rumor that Jack's wife and "Circe" are identical. Hope pines for her old life. The opera company returns with its old manager, the old love of "Circe" awakens, she fits in the role of "Circe" owing to the sickness of the star, while Jack is supposed to be far away. Jack, having suspicions confirmed, awaits the return of Hope and her old lover, and as they revel in Jack's parlor, Jack appears as "Circe's Ulysses." Jack places poison in one glass of wine. Hope, still in her "Circe" gown, is forced to serve the two men at the pistol point. One cup is the cup of chance, the other death. The theatrical manager drinks his death, and Jack leaves for the seashore, giving all to Hope, who collapses.

Later, in her wheel chair, Hope sees Jack by the shore. Jack refuses forgiveness. She, in desperation, hands him a picture of herself at the age of four. Her cry startles the nurse; Jack turns to forgive, knowing she is his own "Hope," but the wheel chair accidentally carries Hope over the cliff to her death.

BIOGRAPH.

THE CHADFORD DIAMONDS (July 19).—Dick Willard, a society crook, and Helen, his wife, read a newspaper announcement that interests them. Walter Kenyon, a wealthy widower, has purchased abroad the famous Chadford diamond necklace, and, with his daughter, is staying at the Hotel Palms. Helen goes to stay at the hotel, where she attracts great attention. Her husband attacks her in the guise of a footpad one day when Kenyon is near, and she is "saved" by the widower, whose acquaintance, thus formed, she proceeds to cultivate. The Kenyons invite her to spend a week at their home. She communicates with Dick and admits him to the house late at night. He burglarizes the safe in which the diamonds are kept, and they make their getaway. A slight noise awakens Kenyon, and he rushes down to find the jewel case gone. His daughter and her sweetheart, his secretary, enter and astonish him by producing the jewels from a hiding place. They had suspected Helen and, removing the diamonds from the case, substituted two pendants from an electrolier. The case being locked, Willard is unable to open it until he and his wife reach home. Then they discover their failure.

A DAUGHTER OF EARTH (Special—Two Parts—July 20).—Grown to womanhood, she has never known any other life than that of the farm, where she abides with her father and brother. The village doctor is the most wonderful man she has ever met, and he loves her, so she consents to marry him. Then a well-to-do city broker visits the homestead, hears her sing, and predicts fame for her if she goes before the public. For fame she turns her back on home, father, lover. In the city, the broker finds apartments for her and arranges her debut. The home folks read a newspaper account and go to hear her sing. At the stage door, after the concert, they are thrust back and not permitted to see her. Returning home, the old man dies of grief. His daughter, summoned by telegram, arrives too late, and is coldly received by her brother and the doctor. Back in the city, she learns the real purpose of the broker who pretends to be her friend, and, disgusted with the shallowness of life, returns to implore forgiveness from her brother and her lover. They find it hard to believe that she is really penitent, but her lover, first to be won over, pleads with her brother and induces him to forgive.

UNDER TWO FLAGS (Special—Three Parts—July 21).—Bertie Cecil, of the Guards, loved but two things—his horse, Forest King, and his young brother, Berkeley. True, he had an affair with Lady Guenevere, but he did not love her. At the height of his career, fate dealt him a cruel blow through all three of these affections at once. His brother forged his name to a note, with that of his friend, Lord Rockingham, as endorser. The money lender settled an old score by "painting" his horse just before the great race on which his fortunes were staked and Forest King was beaten. Through an indiscretion, Lady Guenevere's honor was compromised. The note falling due, Bertie shielded his brother by owning to the forgery and fled the country. Rake, his soldier valet, went with him. Their train was wrecked, and men thought them dead. But they escaped, went to Africa, and joined the French chasseurs, who were fighting the Arabs. Here Bertie met Cigarette, a strange girl, "the Daughter of the Regiment." She loved him. He incurred the enmity of his chief, the Black Hawk, by interfering when the officer would have insulted the wife of the Arab chieftain. For striking his officer he was sentenced to be shot. Cigarette rode through the night with a reprieve, and arriving too late, flung herself upon him as a shield as the rifles spoke. His honor vindicated, he returned home.

HIS SINGULAR LESSON (July 22).—After the wane of the honeymoon, Smith took to going out of nights. Returning from the club, he saw a man apparently leaving his home, and, unaware that the convivial stranger had merely mistaken the house, indulged in suspicions, which were heightened when he found on the mantel a half-smoked cigar left by his bride's father that evening. Mrs. Smith tearfully denied his charges, and he became more than ever convinced of her falsity. The following night he resolved to watch. Leaving the house, he waited down the street and presently saw a man approaching the place, enter by way of a French window. Resolved to catch his erring wife red-handed, he rushed in—and found her alone. Her indignant denials he brushed aside, and started in to look for the man. Suddenly there came from a closet the sound of something falling. Opening the door, he covered with his pistol the man who was crouching there. The intruder was a gentleman burglar, who, hearing Mrs. Smith moving about, had concealed himself in the closet. Smith was convinced that he had found his wife's lover, but subsequent developments of a highly amusing character revealed the truth.

MAN'S GENESIS (July 23) (Re-issue No. 7).—A short prologue shows two children settling a quarrel by resort to force. Their grandfather stops them, and tells how, when the world was young, brute force gave place to brains after the first weapon was invented. When the bare fist was the only weapon Weakhands was not popular as a suitor, for any man stronger than he could rob him of his bride. Lilywhite, a maiden of the tribe, was forced, after her mother's death, to go out from the ancestral cave to where danger lurked on every side. She met Weakhands and, won by his gentleness, threw in her lot with him. But Bruteforce, the terror of the tribe, drove Weakhands away and took Lilywhite to his lair. Poor Weakhands tried hard to save her; then, disconsolate, retired to his cave. Here, by accident, he inserted the end of a stick in the hollow of a stone, and hit himself on the head with the weapon thus produced. An idea was born. Sallying forth, he gave Bruteforce battle, vanquished him, drove off other strong men of the tribe, and resumed possession of Lilywhite.

HIS CRIMINAL CAREER (July 24).—The argument at the club resulted in George Green wagering that he could impersonate a convict, obtain a position and hold it for a month. A deputy sheriff arranged to get him into jail, where he met Soapy Jones, professional. Professor Bryson, criminologist, visited the prison to select a secretary, and took Green. Jones, released, recognized his old cellmate and tried to persuade Green to rob his employer. Next day the boys sent Green the five hundred dollars he had won on the wager. The professor missed a large sum of money and, on the prompting of Carson, a detective who loved his daughter, had Green arrested. The money found on him seemed to confirm his guilt. But the girl, entering, explained how she had changed the hiding place of the money through fear of burglars, after she had seen Jones prowling about the grounds. Carson retired in discomfiture, and Green discovered that he had won, not only his wager, but a wife.

EDISON.

FOR HIS MOTHER (July 17.)—At twenty Jim Brennon is pretty much of a ne'er-do-well. Coming home in an intoxicated condition he is ordered out of the house by his father, who tells him he need never return until he has made a man of himself. He goes, leaving behind an angry and disappointed father, an almost heartbroken mother, and a little brother of five. Within a short time, he enlists in the army and finally, helped by the strict military discipline, straightens himself out and stops drinking.

As his second term of enlistment is drawing to a close—just when he is looking forward to an honorable discharge—a recruit arrives at the army post. Upon his arrival, he is subjected to some very rough treatment at the hands of the older men, especially by one who has the reputation of being somewhat of a bully. Jim Brennon protects him from this man, and makes it plain to all concerned that he will see to it, in future, that "the kid," as he is known, is not abused. But in spite of his championship, the kid comes in for a great deal of hard knocks and degradation when Jim is not around. One night, long after "taps" has sounded, he gets up and prepares to make his escape—to desert. As he is about to get out of the window, he thinks of his benefactor, occupying the next bed to his. He feels in his pocket for some paper, but finds only a small photograph of himself and his mother, seated together. On the back of this he scribbles a note to Jim, saying that, unable to bear the abuse longer, he is going to go back home. Jim finds the photo in the morning, and is astounded to discover that the woman pictured on it is his own mother. He instantly realizes that the boy he has befriended is his younger brother, and the message on the back of the card tells what he has done.

The kid is captured and locked up to await trial. In prison uniform, he is sent out under guard to clean up the barrack grounds. Jim, realizing how the boy longs to be away from the hated army life, and having seen letters from his mother saying how she longs for "her baby" gives the kid a suit of civilian clothes, which he has hidden under a bush, compels him to change his attire, supplies him with money, and hands him a sealed note, tells him to return to his mother at once, and then to get out of the country. Back home, the kid is told what he has never guessed before, that his own brother has saved him. Bidding his mother a fond farewell, he hurriedly leaves to get out of the country, promising to send for his mother "when he has made a man of himself." And at the army post, Jim, returning without his prisoner, pays the penalty of his sacrifice by facing a term of imprisonment to be followed by a dishonorable discharge from the service. But he is happy, notwithstanding; he has done it "For His Mother."

A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER (July 21.)—Mrs. Hobson, a widow with two eligible daughters, and Mr. Beck, a widower with two sons of the marriageable age, both decide to seek new apartments. Both families finally decide upon houses that suit their respective wants. The drivers of the two wagons meet outside a saloon, and are there accosted by two vagrants, who ask them to stand treat. The moving men send the vagrants about their business, and to get even, the two hoboes change the horses on the vans—which are exactly alike, being from the same company—and also turn the vans about so that when the drivers come out—not quite so clear-headed as when they went in—each drives off in the direction he was heading for but with the wrong van. Mrs. Hobson's maid is waiting to superintend the unloading of the vans, but when the men start to unload Mr. Beck's belongings on Mrs. Hobson's new front porch, the maid objects. Her objection is overruled by the moving men. This same performance is repeated at the new home of the Becks. Objections on the part of Mr. Beck's cook have no weight with the moving men.

Meantime, both families have started for their new homes. Mrs. Hobson slips on the sidewalk and sprains her ankle, and while her two daughters are assisting her, Beck comes along in his auto, with his boys. Seeing Mrs. Hobson's predicament, he invites her to enter his car, offering to drive her to her home. She thanks him, but says she prefers to walk the short distance remaining. She gives him her card, on which she pencils the new address, and invites him to call with his two sons. Arriving at their respective homes, the two families find a general mixup. It is too late to make any change that night—the furniture moving company has closed for the day—and finally the ladies are compelled to retire, wearing the Becks' sleeping apparel. At the Beck home, father and sons go to their more or less restful beds wearing the ladies' nightgowns. Mrs. Hobson's maid, one of the thinnest of the thin, retires in the nightie belonging to Mr. Beck's cook, who is "built like a battleship." In the morning, however, everything is straightened out when Mr. Beck finds out who the things really belonged to. There is another moving and another meeting of the parties concerned, as a result of which a third moving is soon brought about, when Mrs. Hobson becomes the second Mrs. Beck and after the girls and boys make it plain to papa and mama that they, too, are anxious to enter the matrimonial state.

ON DANGEROUS PATHS (Special—Four Parts—July 23.)—Eleanor Thurston, of Sterrettsville, and Roger Sterrett, son of the wealthiest resident, are in love. Strangely enough, Eleanor has not imbibed the philosophy of her father, a minister, who believes always that the Lord will provide. Consequently, when Joan, her businesslike sister, arrives from the city for a stay, Eleanor sees no reason why she shouldn't take advantage of an offer made by an uncle in the city to help her all he could if she decided to become a business woman. When Roger calls with a perfect blue-white solitaire, that evening, he is almost knocked speechless by Eleanor's statement that she is going to the city. The advice of Eleanor's family and Roger is not heeded and she leaves for the city. Although chagrined at Eleanor's refusal, Roger still remembers that faint heart never won fair lady and determines to go to the city and bring her back to the country. Eleanor becomes a nurse and while doing night duty is attacked by an insane patient. She is rescued by Dr. Sinclair, whose fatal good looks have been the cause of many an imbroglio. They are infatuated by each other, the doctor winning another point when he transfers Eleanor to day duty. The doctor is neither an angel nor a bad sort, his chief fault being in knowing women too well and oftentimes encouraging them beyond propriety.

"HEINIE & LOUIE" COMEDIES

Roger arrives in the city to investigate some difficulties in the New York office of his father. His arrival is celebrated by him and other gay young rounders with the result that early in the morning he is picked up intoxicated by Dr. Sinclair and taken to a hospital. In the morning Eleanor, now doing day duty, recognizes him. Roger earnestly pleads with her to go back to the country, but Eleanor is practically in Dr. Sinclair's power and refuses. When Roger learns of her love for the doctor, he leaves in a rage and in full view of Eleanor flirts with a stranger and leaves with her in an automobile. Eleanor has a dinner engagement with Dr. Sinclair. They arrive at a wayside inn and are seen by Roger, who is there with Miss Montgomery, the flirt. Eleanor and the doctor get a private dining room, much to Roger's discomfort. They have been inside some time, during which the doctor has, by cajolery and insincere promises, practically won Eleanor over, when a note is handed to the physician. Soon he is on the veranda arguing with Roger, who finally convinces the doctor of his sincere love for the girl. The doctor leaves and Roger greets Eleanor, telling her what has transpired. Miss Montgomery, deserted, enters the private room and at once starts a tirade against the man who "passed her up" for another. A bill curtails her volubility. Eleanor and Roger are back in Sterrettsville the following Sunday, the happiest persons in the world had seats in the front row in the little church.

THE SECRET OF THE CELLAR (July 24).—In the West, Mr. James Travers is known by quite a different name, and many cities west of Chicago have his rather handsome features in their local "Rogue's Gallery." His wife is as notorious as he, and Fogarty, his companion, is well known at headquarters in New York City. After arriving at a fashionable hostelry in the latter city, they receive a visit from a well-known jeweler, who has come to them after being requested to bring with him a valuable necklace. Once in their apartment, a blackjack in the hands of Fogarty drops him unconscious into a chair, and the crooks make their escape from the hotel with the stolen jewels. But in the struggle following the first blow on the head, the jeweler has torn Fogarty's collar from his neck, and Revelle, from headquarters, who has been assigned to the case, eventually finds the laundry, where the New York crook has been having his laundry done, and in that way traces the nefarious trio to Fogarty's house. Coming there in the evening, after he has seen the three crooks leave together he lets himself in with a skeleton key. He is surprised by the crooks, who return unexpectedly, and is made a prisoner. He is left tied up in the cellar.

Revelle's daughter, Bessie, is on her way home from the telegraph office where she is employed. She meets Tom Merriwell, her sweetheart, and stops to speak to him. While they are chattering, Bessie hears some tapping on the stand-pipe which rises from the ground and passes the outer wall of a nearby house. Listening, she discovers that someone is tapping out a message in the telegraph code, on the pipe. "Help! Help! Help! The cellar," it calls repeatedly. Tom calls another policeman, and the party bursts into the house. In the cellar, they find Bessie's father bound and gagged. Acquainted with the telegraph code, he had sent the message of distresss, with the lucky result shown. Examining some old letters in the room above, Revelle finds a signature that gives him a new clue. He finally discovers the house in which the three crooks are hiding, and makes his way into the cellar. Here, hiding in a barrel, he sees them come down and take the corks from a couple of wine bottles standing on the shelves against the wall. Out of these bottles they take two or three splendid necklaces, the proceeds of former robberies, and they indicate that other bottles also contain stolen jewels. They are about to slip their latest haul into a bottle when the detective springs up and covers them with a revolver, firing one shot to attract the attention of the young policeman, Tom, who is waiting outside. The three crooks are made prisoners, and taken to the station house. Bessie, come to inquire as to her father's whereabouts, finds him there, and after the jewel robbers have been safely locked up, Revelle, his daughter, and his future son-in-law, their day's work done, stroll home together.

THE CURSE OF A NAME (July 21.)—Mr Rawsberry had no particular talent except pure, unadulterated nerve. He was a janitor, but from his clothes he could have passed for Lord Chesterfield. He eloped with some kopecks from the boss' safe and went to the swellest hotel in town. There he met a pretty girl, and in order to impress her with his importance, he hires a page to bawl his name through the lobby and corridors.

As luck would have it, his boss was stopping —And He Who is Deceived Thereby is NOT Wise!

DID YOU EVER count the telegraph poles? While they seemingly flit past your car window, in reality the poles are standing still!

It is you who are speeding past on the up or down grade!

The Exhibitor who digs down and pays out his good, hard earned cash for doubtful film resembles the telegraph pole. He stands still! His eyes deceive him; he is buying stuff that really is stationary in the march of progress.

Do you labor under the impression that you are moving forward when you may be going backward? The telegraph pole stands still, ofttimes slightly bent and tottery.

Don't be a stick; be a live wire. The wires strung along the poles do the business; they furnish the essential spark. The poles have about served their purpose. They will soon be removed to make way for better conditions.

Prepare to get down upon terra firma with the live wires, speeding up grade by the motive power of quality pictureplays.

Don't count the poles! Figure on material advancement. Selig Red Seal Plays released regularly through V-L-S-E, Inc., are the live wires!

"A Texas Steer," with Tyrone Power, released July 26th, is dependable.

It is Charles Hoyt's rollicking romance, in five reels, a refined comedy guaranteed to make 'em laugh and grow fat.

"The Rosary" is another Red Seal Play, released June 28th, that is crowding the theatres. Kathlyn Williams enacts her greatest part.

"The Millionaire Baby" a Selig Red Seal Play in six reels, features Mr. Harry Mestayer and Miss Grace Darmond. An adaptation of Anna Katherine Green's best novel. Released May 31st.

Every Selig Red Seal Play is enjoying long runs and return bookings. "The Carpet from Bagdad," released May 3rd, is no exception.

On August 23rd "The House of a Thousand Candles," by Meredith Nicholson, will be released. Another unusual production.

Other Red Seal Plays coming include: "The Circular Staircase," September 20th; "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," October 18th; "The Ne'er-Do-Well," November 15th.

DON'T STAND STILL. Join the march of progress. Get into the advancing procession by booking Selig Red Seal Plays, in four or more reels, released regularly through V. L. S. E., Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York City, and branch exchanges.

"The Blindness of Virtue" Sounds Note of Warning To Girls and Mothers

Every girl in love will be eager to see "The Blindness of Virtue!"

Every mother who has the welfare of her daughter at heart should see this great Essanay photoplay.

It sounds a note of warning that checks the girl about to take the step that leads to the path of tears.

It tears away the blinders of ignorance from her eyes and sheds the light of clear vision on the path that leads to a glorious womanhood and motherhood.

Cosmo Hamilton's masterpiece is presented in a setting that is wholesome, pure and sweet, and as intensely interesting as it is instructive.

Edna Mayo, as Effie, the curate's daughter, brings out all the charm of joyous girlhood and awakening womanhood with a beauty and interest that is a delight to all.

Bryant Washburn, as her sweetheart, portrays the role with a strength and clear understanding of the character, that grips every one with its intensity.

It is a photoplay that will appeal to all. It is intensely entertaining; its scenic beauty is unsurpassed and its great moral lesson is good for all to know.

This six-act feature is being booked through all the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

JOKER.

BOBBY'S BUMPS GETS PA'S GOAT (July 10).—In this animated cartoon picture Bobby follows pa to the ocean. He finds pa on the beach hugging a barrel, tight asleep. Bobby jumps into the barrel and teases pa by tickling his bald spot with a bug. Bobby buys some paint and paints the barrel to look like the back of a woman, with pa's arm around her. Ma sees sight from window of cottage and throws iron which hits pa and knocks him in the water. Bobby finds a rowboat and runs away with pa pursuing him in a motor boat. Bobby overturns pa's boat, escapes and leaves pa in the clutches of a crocodile. Pa hypnotizes the crocodile, rides off on his back and catching Bobby, licks him.

A TRIP TO THE PYRAMIDS (On same reel as foregoing).—Homer Croy visits the pyramids and with the help of three natives climbs to the top. Later he visits the Sphinx. Several interesting scenes of the African desert, highly instructive, are also exhibited.

A DUEL AT DAWN (July 24.)—Shultz has a stomach ache. He goes to Doc for relief, and Doc prescribes a tonic. It is to be taken in teaspoonful doses, but after leaving the office, Shultz's continued stomach ache and his liking for the tonic leads him to thrown the spoon away and tackle the contents of the bottle without heed to consequences. He happens to meet the consul from France, who is out strolling with his wife. Shultz's actions towards the latter's pretty wife arouse the ire of the hot-blooded ambassador and he challenges Shultz to a duel to be fought the next dawn. He does not even take it seriously when he later meets the consul from Russia, who also is out for a stroll with his wife. Again Shultz is challenged to fight at dawn.

He goes home in a mighty hilarious condition and dreams. In his dreams he meets the clever foreign duelists, and decidedly gets the worst of the fray. He awakens and, finding the consul's cards, breaks out into a horrible sweat of apprehension. He calls on the doctor to help him out of the mess. The doctor promises to do his best. The next morning, bright and early, they go to the proposed meeting place, and hide under the dirt and fallen leaves, a metal mat that is connected to a hidden spot behind a nearly bush by a powerful electrical shocking device. When the hot-blooded foreigners put in their appearance and take their places in succession before the composed, nonchalant Shultz, they prove their ability very nicely, but the fatal stab never takes place. The doctor, from his point of vantage, merely presses the button and the powerful electrical current does the rest.

THOU SHALT NOT LIE (Two Parts—July 22.)—Fred Harnett, a bank teller, is addicted to gambling. One night he loses heavily and, upon the insistence of the boss gambler, gives a check dated two days ahead. The next day he learns that certain funds on which he had counted for meeting the check will not be available. Fearing that if his check is dishonored his gambling will be brought to the attention of the bank officials and cause his discharge, he takes bank funds and covers it by altering the books.

That night he goes to the gambling house and takes up the check. He is persuaded to play and wins heavily at roulette. He plans to make restitution of what he has stolen, but, on arriving at the bank in the morning, finds that a bank examiner has appeared and is to start work at his post. In a panic of fear, he flees and makes good his escape. The story now moves forward some ten years. Fred, under the name of Harrington, has become a prosperous farmer with a wife and a son. He decides to pay the bank and send the money in currency in a mail package. The bank detective, remembering the reward offered, takes the postmark as a clue and starts after him.

Fred and his wife have insistently impressed upon their child the necessity of absolute truthfulness. While Fred is away, one day, the detective, who is fishing near their home, is rescued from peril by the wife and taken to their home. While drying his clothes, the wife learns the detective's identity and errand. Meanwhile, from an album, the detective has identified Fred. Fred returns and hides. In a dramatic scene the detective learns his hiding place from the boy. Out of sympathy, however, the detective leaves them in peace.

A HAPPY PAIR (July 20).—A young married man develops the fault-finding habit until every one connected with his home and office finds life unbearable. His wife tries in every his every wish. To their friends they are "A Happy Pair." One day a friend visits them and way to please him by waiting on and anticipating discovers the true state of affairs. She writes a letter to the wife telling her she is foolish to stand such nonsense, advising her to tame the brute. The wife takes a walk to think the matter over and sees another woman taming her husband by throwing frying pans at his head.

This gives her an idea and she hurries home to put it into practice. When hubby returns from the office that evening she greets him in her usual loving manner, and he, as usual, is the same gruff brute. When he calls for his slippers she tells him to get them himself, and as he tries to discover the meaning of her changed attitude, she lets fly cooking utensils at his head. He discovers the note which has caused her change and decides to use a litttle strategy. He pleads with her, but to no avail. Then he tries a few tears, and finally wifey relents and embraces her loving husband. He then produces the note, whereupon the wife upbraids him in earnest, tells him what a selfish brute he is, and ends by having hysterics. Finally the husband sees the error of his ways, and the picture fades out on a really happy pair.

BOUND ON THE WHEEL (Three Parts—July 25).—This story deals with two tenement families named Gertz and Coulahan. Mr. and Mrs. Gertz are happy together though poor and live with their daughter, Cora, in the tenement room below that occupied by the Coulahans and their son, Tom. The life of the Coulahans is a direct contrast to that of the Gertzs. Fighting, quarreling and drunkenness mar the happiness of Tom's parents. Tom loves Cora Gertz and asks her to marry him and live with his parents. She tells him she could never stand the continual quarreling and refuses to listen to his pleading. That night she dreams of herself as married to and living happily with Tom and their children, while Tom in the room above decides to leave the parental roof and ask Cora to come and live with him in a little home of their own. Next morning Tom tells Cora of his decision and she promises to marry him, although her parents warn her that Tom's father is a drunkard and that Tom is likely to follow in his father's footsteps. Tom's parents are very much upset at the idea of his leaving them. His mother weeps in protest while his father threatens him and is about to throw him out when Cora suddenly appears in the doorway of the Coulahan home and announces that she has decided to accede to Tom's first wish and come and live with his parents.

After the marriage Cora's parents return to their former home in Germany. Tom's father dies shortly after. Mrs. Coulahan continues to take in washing, assisted by Cora. Tom follows in his father's footsteps and spends the bulk of his time in saloons. Cora's parents have a German friend named Hans who is coming to America and they charge him to look up their daughter and find out her true condition, at which her letters only hint. Mrs. Coulahan is taken ill and the doctor leaves a medicine, a dose of which is one drop, with the injunction that one drop cures while three will kill. Cora is about to give her mother-in-law the required amount when the latter dies. She slips the medicine vial into her apron pocket and runs to the saloon to summon her drunken husband. After the death of Mrs. Coulahan the entire burden falls upon the shoulders of Cora, who loses her position in the sweatshop and is forced to spend her time over the tub.

Hans locates Tom and Cora, explains his mission and intimates that he would like to know of some good thing to invest his savings in, showing a large roll of banknotes. Tom plans to rob Hans of his money. Hans shakes hands and goes, but Cora has seen the look in the eyes of her husband and fears the worst. Cora, as she is washing, comes upon the medicine bottle in her apron pocket and puts its contents in a glass, intending to end her trouble by suicide. Her husband enters and lays before her the plan he has perfected, which is that she shall exert her charms upon Hans and rob him of his money. Cora refuses, but, being abused by Tom, finally sets out after Hans, but she can do nothing but warn him falteringly and tell him of Tom's threats against her. Back in the tenement Tom's liquor parched throat calls for water and he tosses out the filled glass upon the table and fills another which he drinks. Cora at last breaks away from Hans and returns to the tenement, where she finds her husband's body lying against the door, preventing her from opening it. Later she and Hans are happily married.

LAEMMLE.

ACCORDING TO VALUE (July 25).—Arthur Graham is confidential clerk to Edmund Stewart, and he and his employer's daughter are very much in love with each other. He receives a letter from his brother, James, who has just finished serving a prison term, telling him that he intends to live a straight life hereafter. There is a happy reconciliation between the brothers and Arthur manages to secure a place for his brother in the same office in which he works. Edmund Stewart is in hard straits for money and realizes that some bonds that he holds in trust would tide him over his financial trouble. He is sorely tempted.

Next day at the office he gets a note from a friend telling him that James Graham, who is now in his employ, is an ex-convict. Stewart calls James into his office and while he is questioning him strikes upon a scheme to overcome his monetary difficulties. He tells James that he has some bonds in his safe and that if "some one" were to steal them he could get ready money for them in Europe, and James reluctantly consents to do the deal. That night he makes his preparations and slips to the house. Edmund Stewart has fixed things so James will have an easy time getting in. Arthur and his sweetheart, Mabel, have selected this night to elope, and she is impatiently waiting for his arrival when she hears the noise of an explosion. She runs in with a gun in hand just as the burglar is dropping out of the window and shoots him. He drops to the ground. Stewart has been watching things from the garden and sees his daughter. He runs to them and arrives just as Arthur Graham comes up, having heard the noise of the shot. There is recognition and Mabel stands back in horror, thinking the man she was about to marry is the brother of a thief. James, believing he is mortally wounded, tells them of the agreement between Stewart and himself. Arthur corners Stewart and forces him to tell the truth of the matter. James is found to be only slightly wounded and some time later Arthur and Mabel come to visit him. Stewart pleads for forgiveness, which is freely granted, and the story ends happily for all concerned.

NESTOR.

THERE'S MANY A SLIP (July 19).—Three boys love the one girl, and when they all call upon her at the same time she becomes befuddeled and tells them to come back on the morrow. The boys leave and stop on the way at a cigar store. Neal makes a sneak back, but is missed and they chase him to the door, dragging him back.

Next day they are all in suspense. Ben is a believer in the old adage, "The early bird gets the worm," and leaves early for the house. As he is reconnoitering around he sees a man tacking up a big yellow diphtheria quarantine sign nearby. He gets a brilliant scheme and stealthily removes the sign, placing it on the girl's door. He then goes in and pleads his cause. The other boys come around, see the sign, and retreat in haste. After hearing Ben's story of mistreatment by the boys the girl finally consents to marry him.

Meanwhile, the health office guards have arrived at the house reported as quarantined, but find an error in the number, so take it for granted that the girl's house is the one meant to be quarantined. They surround the house just as Ben and the girl start out. They are halted at the door and ordered back. The same treatment is given them at the rear. Finally, in desperation, the boy, in order that the girl will keep her promise, gets her out the window and they make a getaway, closely pursued by the guards and the boys, who have wandered back to the scene. The old doctor arrives at his patient's house and finds the sign removed. He is in a rage when he learns that the sign has been placed on another house. Just at this time the guards arrive with Ben and the girl. The other boys, realizing that he has "double crossed" them, manage to lay the blame on him and the doctor orders him to be taken in and given the extreme penalty. The girl decides she didn't want to marry after all, and celebrates her freedom by taking both boys to the ball game, while her erstwhile lover is being cast into the dark dungeon.

BEHIND THE SCREEN (Two Parts—July 23).—Mr. Christie and his company arrive at Universal City. Mr. Christie calls on the Scenario Department for a story. Next we find him in consultation with the general manager relative to the story which he has decided to put on, "Getting a Square Meal." Leaving the general manager, he rounds up the members of his company, gets his sets lined up, costumes for the different members, and they set to work on the rehearsal. The company is followed through in the making of each scene, the members all made up take their places, the action starts and the making of a "movie" is begun. The story is as follows:

Eddie and his partner, Victoria, a vaudeville team, are in hard circumstances. Their landlady demands that they either pay up their board bill or no more eats. She calls on the janitor, Lee, to help her enforce her orders. The janitor willingly takes a hand and is about to handle them roughly, when Eddie resists. By this time they have arrived near the dining room, where a meal is in progress. Eddie gets an idea, and tells his partner and each sneaks away a different route. Outside they call "help! murder! fire!" and all the inmates of the house run out pell mell. Eddie and his partner sneak back and voraciously fall to the meal on the table. The landlady misses them and one of the boarders says, "Let's look in the dining room." Here they find the missing couple and they are at last put out, but not until they have had their "square meal."

The picture is finished, we follow it into the large developing room, see it developed, put on the revolving drums and dried, then all go to the company's theater where it is run. The director and his company all file in and take their seats, the picture is run and discussed. At the close the picture is taken to the cutting room and placed in its proper shape. We see the director cutting the film, then it goes to the pasting room, where it is put in shape for the final inspection. Again the picture is run. The members of the company are not satisfied and begin to blame each other, the camera man is "balled out" and they all lay the blame of the picture not being good on Lee. He is insulted and indignantly tells them he will quit. They assist him to keep his word, tell him it is good riddance, and in fact the members are about to give a miniature of the present European calamity, when the general manager comes on and asks about the picture. A sudden change comes over all. They insist the picture is the best they have ever made. The general manager is delighted, and as he goes into the theater, the "Nestor" company silently fade away, "while the going is good."

VICTOR.

THE WEIRD NEMESIS (Two Parts—July 21).—Inez Alvarado is studying under Prof. Raymond Alvarado, a celebrated student of psychology and hypnotism. She is engaged to Bob Duncan, a young engineer. Her sister, Dolores, is betrayed by Page Ulrich, a wealthy young idler. He deserts her and she hides her shame in the sea. Inez has no clue to the identity of her sister's betrayer except a kodak picture, snapped by Carlos in a spirit of mischief. Later she meets and recognizes him, and, finding that she can control him hypnotically, lays her plans to punish him.

She breaks her engagement with Bob, but cannot give him the reason. She says "Long ago when a girl came to the altar as a maiden, she let her hair down. Trust me, dear, no matter what happens. Some day I will return to you that way." He is greatly disappointed, but promises. Inez lures Page on and finally leads him to the altar. Then as he ardently approaches to embrace her, she gains hypnotic control and, to his horrified eyes, she is the dead Dolores. Every time he attempts to approach her she repeats this action. He becomes frantic and tries to kill her, but even while he holds her by the throat, she changes to Dolores, and he flees from the house in terror.

Bob reads of Inez's marriage and is greatly upset, but finally decides to await her explanation before condemning her. A few quiet weeks at the club having restored his courage, Page again seeks to prey upon innocence. His intended victim is Betty, a pretty telephone operator. Inez learns of it and determines to save her. She arrives at the ferry just after the boat has left, so hurries to Bushy Point, near which the boat must pass. There, unseen, she secures control and as he turns he is horrified to see Dolores beside him. He starts back and falls overboard and disappears. Inez is shocked, but feels that it is no more than he deserved. Bob goes to see her and as he turns and sees her approaching with her hair falling over her shoulders, he understands and his heart is filled with a great joy.

JEANNE O' THE WOODS (July 23).—Jacques Fournir, a Canadian guide, receives a letter from Hugh Travers that he is coming to spend several months in the woods, as he had done five years before when Jeanne, Jacques' daughter, was twelve years of age. It is decided that Jacques is to act as guide to members of the Canadian police, who are on the trail of diamond smugglers. Meanwhile, Jeanne, who is now a wide-awake young woman, runs off with her dog to meet Hugh at the railroad station. The dog runs ahead and while in the woods is captured by the smugglers, who hide the stolen diamonds in the dog's collar. After meeting Hugh, Jeanne and Hugh enter a canoe which glides gracefully along down the lake as a panorama of picturesque views is reproduced on the screen. On leaving the canoe, they take a stroll through the woods, and run across the smugglers, who overpower Hugh, but Jeanne succeeds in making her escape.

During the night, Jeanne stealthily crawls into the camp where Hugh is sleeping. She cuts the ropes with which Hugh has been firmly bound and Jeanne's dog gets loose from the tree, and follows them out of the camp without rousing the smugglers. While resting on some rocks in the woods, Jeanne secures the diamonds from the dog's collar and puts them in her pocket. In attempting to descend from the rocks, Hugh has had a fall, spraining his ankle, and sustaining other painful injuries. Thus the young couple seek refuge in a log-wood cabin from which Jeanne dispatches her dog with a note calling for help. The dog meets Jacques and the mounted policemen who read the message. Meanwhile, the smugglers, on missing their captive and the dog, rush to the cabin and surround it. A desperate fight ensues, in which Hugh and Jeanne return their gun fire until the smugglers break in and overpower them. The mounted policemen arrive in the nick of time. Some of the smugglers are shot dead and the others are captured, the diamonds are recovered, and the young couple fall into each other's arms with wedding bells instead of musket shots ringing in their ears.

GOLD SEAL.

HOMAGE (Two Parts—July 20).—Abdiel O'Day has been convicted of a felony and sent to prison for a term of twenty years. On the day that he is taken to prison his wife dies, leaving a small boy, their only child, who is taken care of by Nathan Peck. Many years pass by and Abdiel's term is up. In the prison he has made the acquaintance of Bill Quinn, a crook, and they have many talks together. Quinn's term is up also on the same day that O'Day is released and the two ex-convicts meet outside the prison walls. Nathan has kept close tab on O'Day and when he got his release from prison, he was also given a letter from the former, containing a goodly sum of money. Quinn offers to take O'Day in and get a drink, but the old man refuses him and takes him instead to a place where they get soft drinks. He learns of Quinn's wife and child, who are almost on the verge of starvation. O'Day, realizing what a hard struggle the crook will have, gives him a large part of his roll and tells him to use it in the right way and "go straight." Quinn thanks him and goes home to his family.

O'Day finds that his son has grown up and married a nice girl and that they live in the suburbs. He decides to try and locate there unknown to the young couple, and watch over their welfare. Accordingly he gets a job from Nora, the wife of his son, as gardner. In the days that pass he sees his son as he really is, selfish, brutal, domineering and regardless of others' feelings. The girl wife turns more and more to the silent comfort of the old gardener. Quinn has bought a stock of goods, leased a store and tried to make a living, but in vain. Business is poor and he is forced by his landlord to pay up or leave. Erwin O'Day happens to be the landlord, and while Quinn is trying to raise the money Erwin has the goods thrown out. Quinn's wife and child are exposed to the rain and snow. The wife develops a serious illness, and Quinn, mad with passion, seeks out Erwin to kill him.

Erwin has arrived home in a rage and quarrels with his wife, who leaves him, seeking comfort from the old gardener in the barn. Quinn slips in the house and is about to kill Erwin when the timely arrival of the old gardener saves him from murder. He recognizes his benefactor, and Erwin, taking advantage of the interruption, tries to cover them both and sends for the police. The elder O'Day, in a rage, tears the gun from him and tells him to go to his wife in the barn, telling of his parentage and how his father has only recently been released from prison. The son, dazed by his father's revelations, stumbles out of the room and unconsciously obeys his father's command. He seeks his wife, who is cowering in the old gardener's room. The old man's revelation has been the turning point in his son's life and from then on he tries more and more to be the ideal that his father has wished him to be. The old man reaps his just reward and lives happily with his "two children."

BISON.

THE MAD MAID OF THE FOREST (Two Parts—July 24).—"The Mad Maid of the Forest," that is what the people down at the village called her. No one knew from whence she came; nor of her identity. Richard Lacey, a noted physician, and his friend, Addison Graves, on the way to their hunting lodge, encounter the mysterious maid of the forest, but, as she does from everyone else, she flees at their approach. Lacey learns that she lives the life of a hermit. The following day Lacey and Graves set out for game, and incidentally to look for the girl. They encounter her, but she flees to her cabin, barricades herself within and they are forced to go away disappointed. Repeated attempts on Lacey's part to see her prove futile. While Lacey is out alone looking for the girl one day he mistakes her for game and wounds her. She hides herself from him and manages to reach her cabin. Here Lacey shortly after finds her and first learns of the accident. He nurses her out of danger and places her in the care of Mrs. Reynolds, a widow who resides in the village. Lacey, who has fallen in love with the girl, is hopeful that with the return of health will also come return of reason, but in this he is disappointed. He determines to remove her to the city and to operate in the hope of restoring her reason. Graves reminds him of his responsibility should the operation prove fatal, but Lacey, sure of success, prevails upon his friend to help him.

During the evening the girl dresses and slips away. In the morning as Lacey and Graves arrives to carry out their intention, they learn of her disappearance. Lacey at once proceeds to her cabin, but does not let her become aware of his presence. He is determined to save her in spite of herself and with the aid of Graves carries her away by force to the city. Lacey's skill results in an operation which completely restores her reason. With the returning reason also comes a remembrance of the events which caused her to lose her mind. She returns Lacey's love, but feels she cannot become his wife until she has told him of her past. Despite his protests, she tells him this story: After the death of her mother, she, as the oldest, secured work, while Dorothy, her sister, kept house. A young man came to live with them as a roomer. He took a fancy to Dorothy, and she, believing him honorable, approved of the growing friendship between the two. Several months passed. One day she returned home from work to come upon him in the act of packing up his things. She confronts him and begs him to do right by her sister. He refuses. She has a revolver and in the struggle the weapon is discharged. The youth is wounded. After that everything went blank and she fled to where Lacey found her.

The story fails to change Lacey. Shortly after their marriage, Lacey receives a letter from his brother, Frank, advising him that he, his wife and child are passing through the city on their way home and will stop off and get acquainted with the new Mrs. Lacey. His brother, Frank, proves to be the man she thought she had killed, and his wife, her sister, Dorothy.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Episode No. 5—"At the Signal of the Three Socks"—July 22).—The mysterious Lady Baffles sees the postman deliver a package at Mr. Higgins' home. Neither Higgins nor his wife knew that she was spying on them when their package was being delivered. They rejoiced exceedingly over its contents. The curiosity of their butler, an accomplice of Lady Baffles, was also aroused. The Higginses find in their mysterious package a letter. After reading it they exhibit still more joy. The butler is piqued. Later, Mr. Higgins accidentally tears this letter. One-half of it falls into the butler's hands. It reveals to him the fact that, without question, the package received at the house contains a great amount of money and valuable jewels. He is amazed and loses no time in communicating with Lady Baffles with the signal of the "Secret Code of the Sock." Lady Baffles comes. The house must be cleared of its occupants in preparation for the raid. The maid is captured and with a sheet is fixed up to represent a ghost. She is then turned loose. The maid scares Higgins and his wife out of their wits. They rush pell mell out of the house with the maid after them. Then Lady Baffles and her accomplice start a frantic search for the hidden valuables, turning the house topsy-turvey.

Meanwhile, the famous Detective Duck, with his clever scientific applicances, becomes aware of the distress of his old friend, Higgins. He pulls his strings and works his buttons, determining to go to his friend's aid. When Higgins and his wife, in terrible fright with apparently a ghost at their heels, stumble and are caught by the self same ghost. Pulling the sheet from the object's head, the famous detective is revealed. He reassures the frightened pair. Then his retainers bring up the poor maid. Her explanations make Detective Duck suspicious. He takes charge of the matter, allowing them to peep into his wonderful "rubberscope," where the actions of Lady Baffles in wrecking their home, are revealed. Detective Duck soon learns that Lady Baffles' search is based on the contents of the torn half of the letter which her accomplice, the butler, secured. So he captures the butler and, disguising himself in the latter's place, reveals to her the contents of the mysterious package. Puzzled, she finds a book containing pie receipts. She then finds the other half of the torn letter. She joins the two parts together and discovers to her disgust and chagrin that its contents are a simple reference to the little pie receipt book. Then the jubilant detective sarcastically reveals himself, but Lady Baffles retains her wits and as he is about to close in on her she calls her mysterious powers to her aid and manages to again slip through his fingers.

THE HONOR OF KENNETH M'GRATH (July 24).—Howard McGrath is a Wall street broker with few scruples. His nephew, Kenneth McGrath, the son of a deceased brother, is his chief clerk. Doris Van Ness is an heiress whose fortune is left in the hands of Howard McGrath, her guardian. Mrs. Wheeler Van Ness, her mother, does not share this fortune, for she is anxious that Doris marry Baron Von Zeller, an impoverished German nobleman with a couple of debt-ridden castles. Howard McGrath attempts a corner on the stock market and is tightly squeezed. He realizes that a marriage between his nephew and the heiress will solve the trouble. Kenneth, though he secretly cares for Doris, is, at the same time, incensed at the idea of marrying any woman for money. He takes the latter course and his refusal to enter into the plan arouses the anger of his uncle, who decides upon other measures.

Accordingly he sends one of his clerks with a letter to Mrs. Van Ness urging her to permit him to invest a sum of Doris' inheritance on his speculations, promising a big return. He signs Kenneth's name to the letter. Mrs. Van Ness persuades her daughter to sign a check for the amount asked. Kenneth and Doris have, in the meantime, become interested in each other, Kenneth refraining, however, from showing his regard for the girl because of his uncle's proposition. The speculation fails and Doris loses a large portion of her fortune. Mrs. Van Ness accuses Kenneth of treachery and he, for the first time, learns of the investment. He is shown the letter with his forged signature and denies any knowledge of it. His uncle in turn accuses him of lying. Kenneth leaves the employ of McGrath and secures a position as reporter on a daily paper. Doris secretly believes in him. She is pressed to marry Baron Von Zeller, whose estates are heavily mortgaged, the elder McGrath promising to rehabilitate the fortunes of Doris on the consummation of the match. Doris urges Zeller to press his suit, promising him in turn his fortune will be rehabilitated by such a union, keeping the financial straits of Doris from him.

McGraths' plan is to use the names of both of the contracting parties in the organizing of a new stock jobbing scheme, securing investments on the alleged backing of the supposedly wealthy pair. Kenneth is sent to interview his uncle and is refused admittance to the office. He calls on Mrs. Van Ness and is told that Doris will not see him. Angered at both his uncle and the girl, he threatens his uncle that he will write a complete exposure of the scheme. He gives him the alternative of dropping the scheme or being exposed as a fraud. The uncle gives in. Zeller learns from Howard McGrath that Doris is no longer an heiress and takes ship for his country. McGrath is forced to tell Doris the truth about the note urging her investment in the stock deal. Kenneth is thus reinstated in the good graces of the young woman and their marriage follows. His uncle is forced to quit his crooked dealings.

THE BURDEN BEARER (July 22).—Ruth Chalmers, head saleslady in a department store, is in love with Harry Edmonds, architect. Rather than wait until Harry has made good, they decide to wed at once, and both work and save to buy a home. One evening after work they are married, and the next morning Ruth returns to work. The female employees are informed that all married women are to be discharged, and Ruth and Harry decide to keep their marriage a secret. They plan to save and buy a home of their own. Harry is visited by Henry Allison, a wealthy business man, and ordered to prepare plans for a large residence. In the course of his business with Allison, Harry meets Alice, his daughter. To keep up the appearance of not being married, Ruth still resides with her grandmother.

Some months pass and Gardner, the floorwalker, falls in love with Ruth. Harry's calls upon Ruth become less frequent, and she finds that he is paying attention to Alice. The work on Allison's house is about to start, and Harry is waiting for the final plans to be approved. Ruth calls at the office and tells Harry that their baby will soon arrive. Alice enters as Ruth leaves, and Ruth overhears Harry tell her that she is the only one he loves and that Ruth is nothing to him but a friend. At this she is heartbroken. Finally the baby arrives, and Ruth returns to the store to make money to support herself and the child. The girls shun her, not knowing, of course, that she is married.

Gardner, the floorwalker, is in love with Ruth, and, despite her supposed misstep, treats her in the same kindly manner that he did formerly. Ruth finally knows that she loves him; but still she does not tell of her marriage to Harry, who has virtually passed out of her life. Harry, who has not seen Ruth for some time, goes to the Allison house, which is under construction, and is injured in an accident. He is taken to a hospital, and, knowing that a grave operation is confronting him, calls for Ruth, realizing at last that he loves her and not Alice. Ruth leaves the store, being summoned to the hospital, and comes to Harry's bedside. He begs her forgiveness, which she grants, telling him that she has ceased to love him. Harry's injuries proves fatal. Ruth returns to the store, where she shows that she is under great excitement over the affair. Gardner offers to walk home with her after work, and asks her to let him share her troubles. Then Ruth tells him of her marriage. Later, after the last vestige of grief has vanished, Gardner proposes to her and is accepted.

SCANDAL (Five Parts—July 19).—The story opens with the male gossips inside the club gazing from the window and making comments on the passers-by. Green, a member of the club, lives in the apartment beneath that of William Wright, a broker. Wright is in business difficulties, but his business associates have not yet learned this, as his wife's father has promised to relieve the situation with a loan. Daisy Dean, Wright's stenographer, is in his confidence. Daisy has her foot caught in the elevator of the building and Mr. Wright takes her home in his car. As he passes the club window, the gossips and Green see him with Daisy and slander is started. Green, coming home, tells his wife of Wright's joy ride with his office girl. Their servant overhears and quickly calls the news up the dumbwaiter to Mrs. Wright's maid in the flat above. Mrs. Wright enters in time to hear the discussion and her slumbering jealousy is fanned into a flame.

In Daisy's neighborhood her ride in Mr. Wright's car has occasioned some comment, especially from Susan, an old maid aunt next door, whose brother, Robert, has long loved Daisy in secret. Daisy is engaged to Austin Clark. Mrs. Wright has particularly noted that the stenographer always has a bunch of daisies on her desk. In the most innocent fashion, Mr. Wright comes home with one of the flowers in his button-hole. The fact that Daisy is seen morning and evening in Mr. Wright's car gives color to the lies that are now freely circulating. Daisy and Austin quarrel and part. Mrs. Wright haunts Daisy's neighborhood in a taxicab and has her worse suspicions confirmed in the fact that her husband is seen outside. Without giving him a chance, she leaves him. The father withdraws his financial support and ruin overtakes Wright. One morning the newspaper has an item which reads: "Wife of broker leaves him on eve of his bankruptcy. Mrs. William Wright returns to her father's house. She will apply for divorce from her husband, naming his stenographer, Daisy Dean, as corespondent."

By the time the gossips get through with Daisy Dean, she is glad to marry Robert, next door, for protection. On the day of her wedding, Austin repents his hastiness and writes that he has never ceased to love her, but it is too late and Daisy hides the letter with his photograph. Wright, broken and penniless, is saved from suicide by his old mother. Time passes and the old trouble seems forgotten. In their new happiness, Daisy and Robert and their baby go to a seaside town for the summer. Robert's work calls him away and his sister, Susan, in spite of her dislike of Daisy, comes to stay with her during his absence. In the meantime, Austin, who is now engaged to a girl in the town, comes down for his vacation. He and Daisy meet and he introduces the two women. Daisy remembers his photograph and letter hidden away; gets them out and burns them, but Susan recovers the end of the letter, which was burned and which reads: "I have never ceased to love you. Austin." She sends the letter to her brother. Daisy is included in many of their engagement festivities in a perfectly innocent way, but to Susan's suspicious mind there can only be one conclusion placed upon their intimacy.

The letters and insinuations to Robert breathe such suspicion against Daisy and Austin that he is driven almost mad. Finally, unable to work, he returns home without notifying his wife. The same evening, Daisy has joined Austin and a party of their friends in an auto ride out of town for dinner. A series of accidents to the car, miles from nowhere, detain them until dawn. A cottager, who proves to be Mr. Wright, assists them. Robert reaches his home about daylight in a condition bordering on insanity. He is met by Susan with the news that Daisy has been out all night with Austin. The auto party, having stopped at the sweetheart's home, drops her and her parents first and Austin then escorts Daisy to her cottage. On entering the house, Daisy is confronted by Robert and Susan. A terrible scene takes place, during which Robert's self-control is entirely lost. Austin, returning from the garage, passes the house and is shot dead by Robert, who is taken into custody. Daisy, terror-stricken, takes her baby and hastens as far from the town as her strength will carry her. At last, more dead than alive, she sees no hope for herself but death and is about to end her life and the baby's when she is saved by Mr. Wright, who takes her to his mother. The shock of the tragedy kills Robert's sister, while Daisy receives the following letter: "Do not come home, I am disgraced enough. Your Mother." News reaches the clubroom that Mr. Wright and Daisy Dean are living in the same house and the scandal goes on.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 4—Two Parts—"The Face at the Window"—Released week of July 12.)—Kitty is about to open the package containing the half of the coin she had taken from the palace when Frederick tries to stop her, realizing that if the King sees the coin, he will realize its value and beat him, Frederick, to the hidden wealth of Gretzhoffen. Kitty opens the package only to find it empty. She looks at Frederick, thinking he has taken it before it was delivered to the palace, but the surprised expression on his face proves to her that he knows nothing of its disappearance. The ball proceeds and while dancing with the King, Kitty sees Sachio watching her with a very strange expression, and she immediately associates the stolen coin with him. The King, remembering Frederick's treachery in trying to get him intoxicated, and his secret meetings with the peasants outside the palace, treats him coldly. Frederick resents this as he realizes his chances for tracing the hiding place of the wealth of Gretzhoffen will be injured if he is in the bad graces of Michael. Trying to find some way to gain the good will of the King again and also to make his own treachery seem imaginary. Frederick hears the tramp of many feet on the palace steps, and, looking out, sees the peasants who had gathered to revolt, should the King be intoxicated. At first he smiles, thinking he will be the ruler should they succeed in dethroning Michael. Then his smile changes as he realizes that without the other part of the coin, he will be no better off, and unable to satisfy the starving peasants. He succeeds in getting the crowd to promise to wait a couple of months, promising them money to live on out of his own pocket, thereby gaining their good will, and, at the same time, that of Michael. Michael, on the inside of the palace, sees the peasants leaving and rushes to the door to greet Frederick and thank him for saving his life as he believes. Kitty, entering the room at that minute, is disgusted with the weakness of Michael. Kitty, leaving the room, sees Count Sachio plotting with one of the diplomats of Grahoffen. Kitty hears them mention a coin, and feels sure it was Sachio who got the coin she sent to the palace. She also hears them mention "plans" and "fortifications," and, from their other conversation, she realizes they are government spies, in the diplomatic service of Grahoffen. She starts toward Michael, and then realizes the folly of telling him anything of importance, as he would not believe it or take the trouble of doing anything to prevent the trouble. The only other one interested would be Frederick, but she will not tell him. It is none of her business if Grahoffen starts war with Gretzhoffen, but she feels sorry for the peasants and decides to try some means to save them at any rate.

Looking into the room, Kitty sees Sachio take out a paper and read it to the man with him, which tells of the hidden treasures of Gretzhoffen and that a coin, broken in two parts, is the only clue to it, also giving Sachio instructions to find this coin, both parts, and locate the torture chamber of the palace, and the plans of the fortifications of the same. When Sachio takes from his pocket the coin she had sent to the palace to herself, telling his man he knows where the other part of the coin is, and for him to meet him, Sachio, at his hunting lodge the next day at five o'clock. Hearing them coming, she leaves for the ballroom, not noticing a strange face looking in at the window of the room occupied by Sachio and his man. As they leave, the face appears for an instant, and then disappears, giving one who had seen it the impression that it was also interested in the coin, and would also be at the lodge. The next day Kitty and Roleau start out for Sachio's lodge to be there before he arrives. On their way they pass Frederick's house just as he and Sachio come out and drive away in a cab. They are about to pass on when they see the man, who was talking to Sachio at the palace the day before, sneak into Frederick's apartment. Realizing he must have been sent there by Sachio to search for Frederick's coin, they follow and gain an entrance through a narrow hall. Listening at the den door, they hear him send the valet away, telling him he will wait there for Frederick. As the valet leaves, he starts to search for the coin. Kitty and Roleau succeed in getting into the room, gag the man, and, fixing him so he cannot reach Sachio, they make a hurried exit for his lodge.

Arriving a few minutes before Sachio they get into the lodge through a window. The man whose face appeared at the window of the palace, the day of the ball, also arrives and tries to gain an entrance. In the meantime, Frederick has returned to his apartment, found Sachio's man tied and released him. After he is gone, Frederick finds the handkerchief Kitty dropped and raises the piece of linen to his lips. The mysterious stranger goes to the outside of the window entered by Kitty and Roleau, sees them hiding behind a curtain in the small room, watching Sachio and his friends in the larger room. Realizing that they will learn the whereabouts of the coin, the man sneaks into the room, and raises a knife about Kitty's head.

FIFTY YEARS AFTER APPOMATTOX (July 4).—Over the graves of her brother and her husband, on Memorial Day, Dorothea, the little old lady, lives again in the days of her young womanhood. When war was declared in '61, John, her only brother, went to the front. Anxious to do what she could for her country, Dorothea became one of that band of brave women, who as secret service agents, risked their lives within the hostile lines. On one occasion, she was arrested and incriminating papers found in her possession. She was sentenced to be shot. A young Southern officer, touched by her beauty and youth, personally appealed to Jefferson Davis and won her release. Later, while nursing in a Federal hospital, Dorothea again met the Southerner. He was wounded and a prisoner. In the act of aiding him to escape, she was detected by her brother. When, however, she reminded John that it was to Randolph Serviss that she owed her life, he no longer opposed the means that she had taken of repaying her debt. At the close of the war, Randolph came North and married Dorothea. Little by little, the Southerner and Captain John forgot their old enmity and became close friends. Now they lie side by side in the family plot. And Dorothea, "with a touch impartially tender," strews with flowers the resting places of "the Blue and the Gray."

back word that he has interested the representatives of two great powers, and that special envoys will call upon the manufacturer and draw up contracts with him. Wright, the maker of guns, is elated. He tells Dolly, his daughter. But she does not share his enthusiasm. In due time, the guns are sold and sent abroad. As time passes, however, the manufacturer becomes uneasy about his son. At last, David's valet returns alone. The son, his father now learns, for the sake of Leonie De Lisle, with whom he had fallen in love, while abroad, has enlisted in the French army. The valet also had volunteered, in order to be near his master. During an attack on a certain fort, guns of great power, bought in America, swept away their company. David Wright was among the first to fall. "Fort Z——!" repeats the maker of guns dully, "Those were my guns which killed my boy."

OLD JANE OF THE GAIETY (July 18).—"Old Jane," the wardrobe woman, was an institution of the Gaiety theatre. A little girl joined the chorus of the Gaiety. She was a shy, quiet little thing, far different from her gay companions, and the wardrobe mistress, strongly drawn to the child, "mothered" her and in many ways made her life in the theatre easier and more pleasant. The girl was clever and the stage manager promised her advancement in the near future. At the opening night of the play the little girl attracted the attention of a wealthy "man about town," who sent a note behind the scenes inviting her and two of her girl friends to a little supper after the show. The other chorus girls openly envied her, and the girl, influenced by their attitude, would have accepted the invitation if "Old Jane" had not intervened.

So while the admirer and her two companions waited patiently outside the stage door the little girl was listening intently to "Old Jane." The wardrobe woman knew that a young clerk loved the child and wanted to marry her, and to bring this about she told the story of her own life, a very dramatic history Jane came from the country, a young, good-looking girl, and forgetting her sweetheart, plunged into theatrical life and achieved success. For a time she was a great favorite and enjoyed the gay life but as time passed she was forced to the background, and soon became just "Old Jane of the Gaiety." "And the man I loved and shall always love," she concluded, "married and is a good husband and father. Another woman enjoys the happiness which might have been mine. Little girl, don't give up love and happiness of a lifetime for a fleeting period of stage success." And the little girl, realizing the value of true happiness gave up her theatrical career to wed the man she loved.

"A MESSAGE THROUGH FLAMES" (July 25).—The little blind girl lived in a home for those who could not see. The girl was very cheerful, however, and under the guidance of her teachers, learned to make her way around the grounds almost as well as a person who possessed sight One morning she wandered through the gate of the asylum and into the great world beyond. She gathered flowers by the road and was very happy until she discovered that she had wandered away from the home and was lost. A kind old countrywoman found the girl, brought her back to the asylum, and touched by the girl's pathetic plight she adopted her. The girl was very happy in her new home, for her adopted mother and the latter's son, the station agent and telegrapher at the little country railroad station, were very kind to her. The young man taught the blind girl the telegraph code, and as the months passed the girl became a proficient telegrapher.

It was a cheap little oil lamp and a cheap little rickety chair which brought death very near to several hundred people, for the rickety chair broke when the station agent stood upon it to place the lamp in its socket; the young man was hurled to the floor, his head struck against a table and he lost consciousness. The lamp, flying from his grasp, fell to the floor and set fire to the station. The little blind girl had just brought the station agent's supper to him. Half mad with fear she dragged him out of the station and as they reached safety she heard the telegraph key clicking out a call. The agent was unconscious, but the blind girl fought her way through the smoke to the telegraph key and learned that two trains were in imminent danger of collision. Down the railroad track she made her way, unlocked the switch and swung it open. The freight train glided in to the siding, the passengers slept on, while the express thundered by. When the railroad officials heard of the girl's daring deed she was given a position in the city office of the company, for, as one of the executives expressed it, "She is one of the best telegraphers I ever met, even if she is blind." And so, sure of the love and protection of her adopted mother and brother the blind girl found happiness.

OUTCASTS OF SOCIETY (Two Parts—July 27).—The case was worth only a couple of lines in the police news. A young girl had been arrested for shoplifting. She had gone to the big department store for a job Failing to secure it, she loitered about the store, and was seen "acting suspiciously" by an alert saleswoman. This employee noted the disappearance of several pairs of stockings. When a search was made the stockings were found on the girl. Naturally she denied her guilt, but the judge was experienced in police court, and sent her to the county penitentiary for three months. In prison the girl was assigned to the laundry, and was treated with gruff kindliness by some of the other convicts. Her cellmate was a woman of middle age, who took a great interest in the unfortunate girl. "You remind me of my daughter, she's a lady," she said and then with pride, she told her about her child. According to her, the daughter had been reared in luxury, and never suspected that her mother earned her livelihood by a life of crime. The prisoner's one fear was that the daughter might learn her secret and then, she feared, they would be parted forever.

One day a new convict came to the prison, and some of the captives who saw her before she assumed the drab uniform of the lawbreakers, remarked how "classy" she was. Gossip was revived when she was sent to the laundry and the old prisoner was as much interested as the others. Then she saw the new convict closely and a great sorrow came into her life, for the prisoner was her daughter, the one whom she had proudly proclaimed was "a lady." Unknown to her mother, the girl had been leading a life of crime, and had finally been detected. In course of time she met the other girl, and broke down when she saw her leave the prison with the convict taint upon her, so she confessed to her mother that the girl was not guilty of shoplifting, adding: "I stole those goods myself. The store detective was close upon me. I had to get rid of the stockings, so I slipped them into that girl's pocket, then they apologized to me and locked her up." By the time the mother learned the truth the girl had left the prison, and the mother and daughter were helpless to aid her, but they determined to keep watch for her. One day they did meet her, coming from the side door of a saloon, in the company of two bad men and women. The mother rescued the girl and took her home to live with her and her daughter. The girl told them how she sought position after position, but each place they found out that she had been in prison and discharged her. "It was either the street or the river." The daughter realized how she had spoiled a life and in an agony of remorse, confessed the wrong she had done to the girl. At first the girl was not inclined to forgive, but the pleadings of the mother won her over, she stretched out her arms to the other two women and said, "We will begin a new life together." And with a determination to make good, despite the odds against them, these outcasts of society resolved that they would fight their way back, and compel people to recognize that they were entitled to another chance.

FALSTAFF.

P. HENRY JENKINS AND MARS (July 23).—According to old legends the Helmet of Mars, the God of War, was the most wonderful headgear ever made. Any mortal who wore it no matter how cowardly he might be, immediately became as brave as a lion. Mars frequently amused himself by locating cowards, and making them brave for a while by secretly loaning them his magic helmet. On one occasion this unexpected honor fell upon P. Henry Jenkins, a middle-aged clerk, who according to the attendant of Mars, was the most cowardly man in New York. When he got up his servant gave him an appetizing breakfast; his wife took the morning paper away from him and scolded him; all day long his employer reviled him and his fellow clerks jeered at him. In the evening after his work, his wife nagged him until bed time, and then when he fell asleep he had frightful dreams, so he never had any comfort at all.

The Helmet of Mars came to him at a restaurant. The attendant of the God made the substitution, thoughtfully changing the appearance of the headgear so that it was a present-day hat, but unfortunately failing to secure the correct size of P. Henry Jenkins. The result was that his ears were very useful to him, acting as a support for the hat; but few people paid any attention to that, they were so busy marveling at the change in P. Henry Jenkins. In one short day he demanded and secured a raise in pay, forced his wife to let him smoke in the house, and compelled all his tormentors to treat him politely. Then all unknown to him, the helmet was wafted back to Olympus and his old hat restored to him; but one day's aggressiveness carried him through the rest of his life.

GETTING THE GARDENER'S GOAT (July 30).—"Love," said the old gardener "is like a flower garden. Somebody must look after the garden, or weeds will choke the flowers, and in love, unless there is some level-headed person around, happiness will never result." The old philosopher knew what he was talking about, for he had proved it. For years he had been employed as gardener and the "baby missus,"

Brass Frames and Rails

DO YOU KNOW? that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS?"
WHY?
Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."
Insist on that name and save money.

It pulled so well it packed the Orpheum Theatre of Portland, Oregon, to the doors — proving the importance of co-operation between the Mutual and its exhibitors.

IT is conclusive evidence that exhibitors appreciate our efforts to supply them with the kind of advertising copy that tells — in the box office — and sufficiently in advance of release date to make it of practical value.

WITH every Mutual Masterpicture booked, we furnish the exhibitor with an AD SHEET carrying proofs of advertisements that feature the most striking incidents in the picture which the exhibitor is to display prominently in his advertising.

IF you are showing Mutual Masterpictures at your theatre, take this AD SHEET to your local newspaper and ask the advertising man to tell you what it will cost to run a series of advertisements, of different sizes, similar to the one on this page. Our Branch Manager will furnish you with a CUT SHEET from which to select appropriate illustrations. You will be surprised to discover how much advertising you can do for a little money—the kind of advertising that brings results.

IF you are not booking Mutual Masterpictures, we want to say right here that the AD SHEET is only one of the many ways we can help you increase your box office receipts. Other ideas are yours for the asking. Write us today.

who had played about him, had grown into a beautiful young woman, much admired and with many suitors. Unknown to her, the old gardener looked them over and classified them. It would have surprised the young lady to know that the handsome and youthful financier was classified as "a weed," while the lawyer who also courted her came under the head of "a choice blossom."

"The weed" had excellent manners, but the gardener found he was mean to children, overbearing to servants and trampled upon flowers. His conduct was so unpleasant that he got the gardener's goat, and he, rather than keep him on the paths, decided to dispose of him, and give the "choice blossom" a chance. From that time on "the weed" met with one tribulation after another. He escorted the young lady to a hammock, and it broke down. When he sat on the garden bench he found, too late, that one-half of it had been painted, and on taking the young lady he admired out for a boat ride, he did not discover that the plug had been removed until they were in deep water. Then it was a case of swimming ashore. His conduct under these various misfortunes was such that it displayed him in the worse possible light, and the girl gave him his conge, finally marrying the "Blossom," as the gardener had intended she should.

COURT HOUSE CROOKS (Two Parts—July 5).—Judge Grey starts out to buy his wife a birthday present. He happens into District Attorney Ford's office, and nearly catches Ford flirting over the telephone with his (Grey's) wife. The judge buys a necklace and loses it on the street. Ford finds it and presents it to Mrs. Grey. Meanwhile a boy has picked up the box which Ford has thrown away. The judge catches the boy with the box on his person, and accuses him of having stolen the necklace. Under the judge's orders, Ford convicts the boy who breaks jail and runs home, pursued by the police. Ford has gone to the judge's home, where he is trying to explain about the necklace to Mrs. Grey, who is locked in the bathroom. Ford hears the judge returning and hides in a closet. The fleeing boy enters the house by a ladder, and hides in the same closet. The police arrive, demanding the fugitive. Ford tells the boy to give himself up promising that he will free him at his next trial. The boy is arrested. When the judge leaves the room, Ford comes out and makes a thrilling escape. At the trial, the judge compels Ford to prosecute the young offender to the fullest extent. The boy's sister, by means of a mirror, flashes into the courtroom a message—"Brother, District Attorney fixed." Consternation reigns. Then the judge's wife enters, wearing the stolen necklace. Ford confesses and is marched off to jail.

A CHASE BY MOONLIGHT (July 18).—Mr. Fliver deserts his wife in the park and flirts with Fay. Fay thinks him rather fresh and calls Maloney of the motorcycle squad to send Mr. Fliver about his business. Maloney's services are hardly needed, because Mrs. Fliver arrives on the spot and leads her fickle husband off by the ear. Maloney is very attentive to Fay and escorts her home. Fay'h papa doesn't like the idea of Maloney paying attention to his daughter, so he roughly orders him to beat it. Fay manages to slip a note to Maloney, which hints that he must call again. That night Fay's papa and mama order Fay to bed and then set out in their auto for a picture show.

Shifty Sadie, a notorious thief, sees the auto in front of the picture theater. She gets in and rides away with it. Maloney, always on the job, sees her and sets out in pursuit. Sadie sees Fay's home darkened and quiet and decides to do a little second story work. She leaves the stolen auto and enters the house. Maloney sees her and follows. Fay sees Sadie with drawn revolver in the hall. She is frightened to death, and clad in pajamas, gets out of the window, runs to the front of the house, gets into the auto and sets out to find a cop.

Sadie is frightened out of the house by Maloney. She misses the auto, but manages to get away on Maloney's motorcycle. Maloney gets another motorcycle from a fellow officer and goes after Sadie. Fay's auto breaks down. She dreads being seen in her pajamas. Some one approaches. Fay ducks into the first house she sees. It happens to be the home of Mr. Fliver. She hides under the bed in Mr. Fliver's room. Sadie gives Maloney the slip, and ducks into a convenient cellar door. Fay finds herself in a tight fix when Mr. Fliver enters his room, soon followed by Mrs. Fliver, who finds Fay under the bed. In the excitement Fay manages to get into the hall, where she barely escapes bumping into Maloney, who is still hot on the trail of Sadie. Maloney arrives, still tracing Sadie. They round up the thief in the basement. Maloney exonerates Fay to Mrs. Fliver, and takes her home in the machine. And Papa and Mama are so glad to have their auto and their daughter again that they receive Maloney into the family.

THE MOUNTAIN GIRL (Two Parts—July 11).—In a primitive log cabin buried among the rugged pines deep in the California mountains lives the Mountain Girl with her grandfather, a man of hoary age. Few visitors ever come to the cabin, but there is one who is almost a daily visitor—young Ned, a mountain ranger, who loves the Mountain Girl. The old grandfather looks forward each day to Ned's visits almost as eagerly as the girl does, for Ned always proves a good listener, and the old man's one amusement in life is relating anecdotes of his own youth. As a young man he was renowned far and wide for his prodigious strength, particularly in the grip of his hands and he never wearies of relating tales of his early prowess. One day a strange visitor is brought to the cabin by Ned. He is a dashing gambler from the mountain settlement at the head of the valley, who has been forcibly ejected from the settlement because of his too great skill at cards and because of a suspicion on the part of the rough mountaineers that his game was not always too straight. Ned had found him delirious after a terrible night spent alone in the mountains.

The girl and the old man care for him until he has partially recovered from his shock and exposure. Devoid of gratitude, the gambler cast covetuous eyes upon the Mountain Girl. Taking advantage of Ned's absence on a trip across the mountains, the gambler makes forcible love to the girl. The old man, helpless and paralyzed, is powerless to interfere. The girl fights for her honor in the cabin, while the old man sits helpless outside hearing the sounds of the struggle within. He prays for strength, and in answer to his prayers, strength is given him to drag himself to the door. The gambler, springing to bar his entrance, finds his throat caught in the clutch of the man whose grip was once the most powerful in the countryside. Desperately he tries to break it, but his efforts are of no avail. Slowly it squeezes the life out of him. A few moments later, Ned returning to the cabin, finds the old man dying with his head resting on his granddaughter's lap, and the body of the gambler dead on the cabin floor.

RELIANCE.

A BREATH OF SUMMER (July 14).—Agnes, a garment maker in a factory which manufactures khaki outing suits, is tortured by the oppressive heat in a great Eastern metropolis. She toils for a small wage, which goes for the support of an old mother. The doctor informs Agnes that if she does not arrange to remove the mother to some cool place she will succumb to the heat. As a desperate resort, Agnes writes a pitiful appeal for aid in getting her mother away from the city to some cool resort. She sows a number of copies of the appeal in the outing shirts at the factory. A wealthy bachelor, who is a philantrophist, buys one of the shirts and departs on a fishing trip in the mountains. Agnes' mother grows weaker and the girl anxiously inquires at the office for mail, hoping to receive some answer from the appeals sewed in the shirts. The only replies are a vulgarly written scrawl, trying to date her up, and a suggestion from a "charitably inclined" person that she place her old mother in a certain well-appointed poor house. In despair, Agnes steals money from the factory cash drawer, but in doing so, drops her handkerchief, which is initialed. The factory manager accompanies the police to her tenement that night, and they find part of the money, the rest having been spent to get things for her mother.

Meanwhile the wealthy philanthropist on his fishing trip discovers Agnes' appeal sewed in the shirt. At first he does not give it serious thought, but that night his imagination pictures to him the old woman suffocating in the garret, and he cannot sleep. The next morning he leaves for the city to find the girl and save her mother. At the store they give him Agnes' address, and he arrives at the tenement just as Agnes is pleading with the police not to take her to jail, as she is her mother's sole support. She tells them that she stole the money to save her mother's life, but they do not believe her. The philanthropist stops the police and reimburses the manager. He displays Agnes' letter as a proof of her statement that she stole for her mother's sake. The philanthropist takes Agnes and her mother to the cool mountain resort where he was fishing and the old lady's life is saved. Stimulated by the refreshing out-of-doors, Agnes is transformed from the sullen factory slave to a joyous carefree girl. The bachelor's tender affection toward Agnes is suggested in the concluding scene.

THE AMERICANO—Two Parts—July 17).—Robert Hammond is the manager of the Mexican branch of the Manhattan Oil Company, in Tionana, Mexico, where he lives with his daughter, Elaine. He discharges from the oil works a worthless Mexican named Tonio. Shortly before a new superintendent, in the person of Boyd Norton, is sent from New York to take charge of the oil wells, under the direction of Hammond. Norton meets Hammond's daughter, Elaine. They are mutually attracted and ultimately engaged to be married. Norton is suddenly recalled to New York, and during his absence a group of bandit soldiers, under the leadership of the discharged Tonio make a raid upon Tionana, in the course of which Hammond is slain and Elaine is kidnapped by the bandits. She manages to escape, however, and takes refuge in an old inn, which is conducted by an ancient couple whom Elaine had formerly befriended.

Norton reads of the outrage in Tionana and decides to enlist as a scout in the army of General Ferranda, the Constitutional leader. Norton proves to be very expert in his work and attains to a position of trust. The bandit soldiers are gradually reduced in numbers, and their ammunition is nearly gone when Gen. Ferranda learns that a pack train of arms and ammunition is to be sent to them, and that a bandit officer named Captain Arato is to meet an emissary from the bandit chief in the inn, where Elaine happens to be, with a

"The Fox Woman"

A Four-Part Majestic Masterpicture, featuring

Dainty Teddy Sampson

"THE FOX WOMAN" is a vivid romance of modern Japan, by the celebrated author, John Luther Long. Presented with exquisite Japanese settings and a strong cast, headed by Teddy Sampson, Signe Auen and Elmer Clifton.

A Play of Thrills and Heart Interest

"The Fox Woman" is full of beautiful scenic effects—there are big dramatic moments and a splendid climax. The story is forcefully presented, and the picture will grip and hold you by its very intensity. Teddy Sampson as the Japanese wife is an inspiration, and Signe Auen an ideal "Fox Woman" who "steals the souls of men."

map showing the direction this pact train is to take. General Ferranda realizes that if he can secure that map, he can capture the train, and so put an end to the rebellion. Norton is selected for this dangerous mission. He goes to the inn, disguised as a monk, and unexpectedly meets Elaine, who immediately offers to help him secure the coveted map. The messenger arrives at the inn, and proves to be none other than Tonio, the murderer of Elaine's father. Later Capt. Arato arrives with the map, and by a clever ruse it is made to appear that Norton is the messenger who is to receive the map, and Tonio the American spy. Norton escapes with the map and Elaine, and gets safely back to his own lines, while Tonio meets a just retribution in being stood against a wall and shot.

THE ZACA LAKE MYSTERY (Two Parts—July 12.)—Slippery Joe, an outlaw, is tracked into a mountain fastness by a fearless sheriff, who goes alone on his man-hunt mission. In the mountains, John, a miner, strikes it rich. Overjoyed, he holds up for his daughter's admiration a bag of nuggets which he washed from his pay dirt find. Slippery Joe is an unseen witness to this act, and when Nell, the daughter, is alone in the house, the outlaw enters, binds and gags her, and makes away with the chamois bag of riches. Mounting the miner's horse, Slippery Joe makes his escape in the highlands.

A lonely ranger comes upon a man canoeing, who gives the name of Mr. Bond of San Francisco. The ranger invites him to stay over night at his quiet cabin in the mountains. John, the miner, and Nell, in search of the man who robbed them, stop at the ranger's home. Nell at once is struck by the resemblance of Mr. Bond to the man who stole their gold. The ranger then tells her that Bond is in the mountains in search of a twin brother, who doubtless is the outlaw. Meanwhile, the sheriff finds the horse the horse of John, the miner, which the outlaw had stolen, then abandoned. The sheriff, too, is struck by the remarkable resemblance of Mr. Bond and Slippery Joe. Mr. Bond and Nell go canoeing. While they are gone, a man, half conscious, staggers into camp. He names himself as Mr. Bond of San Francisco. He tells of being attacked by an outlaw and compelled to change clothing with the lawless man of the mountains. Then the outlaw's plot is revealed. The Mr. Bond, out canoeing with Nell is in reality the man they seek! The sheriff and the others make to arrest him. On the shore of Zaca Lake they find Nell and her companion. She has him "covered" with her revolver. In her hand she holds the stolen chamois bag of nuggets. She, too, had learned the desperado's ruse, and forced the issue.

TO MELODY A SOUL RESPONDS (July 14.)—Krieg, an old master at the violin, is dying. His last days on earth are embittered by the fact that he has been called upon to make good certain promissory notes which he once had endorsed for a friend. Payment of the notes is demanded. The life savings of the old violinist are consumed. It means that Elsa, his daughter, will be a penniless orphan. Here Edler, the manager of a phonograph company, steps in. He proposes to Krieg that the latter play his masterpiece, "The Sunbeam Path," for the making of a phonographic record. Krieg agrees, then summons all his fast ebbing strength to play the great piece once more. He is sure that his royalties will keep Elsa from want. In gratitude the old man promises to guard ever the agent from the heavenly world to which he (Krieg) soon is to journey. After the old man's death, Elsa and Edler are married. They are blessed with a little daughter, Agnes. Their domestic happiness is complete until Dehoff, a famous pianist, comes between them. Coming home one night Edler discovers Elsa in the pianist's arms. Through the power of his talented fingers upon the piano, Dehoff worked evil influence on the young wife. With drawn revolver, Edler advances into the room. There is murder in his heart. Ere he can raise the gun to fire, the strains of "The Sunbeam Path" strike sweetly on his ears. The sound comes from their little daughter's bedroom. She has placed the record on the instrument, and a vision of the white haired old master has appeared. Elsa, too, hears the strains, and she is awakened to a realization of Dehoff's subtle intent. She repells the man who would destroy her home. Edler, all thoughts of violence driven from his mind, by what he has witnessed, takes his wife in his arms. Together they go to their child's bedroom. As they embrace near the sleeping child, again the vision of Krieg appears, thankful and rejoicing. The old music master has kept his promise, and repaid the debt of gratitude.

THE HONOR OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY (Two Parts—July 19).—John Mortimer has been elected district attorney. As he takes office he declares he will enforce the law as he sees it irrespective of what it may mean to friends or kin. Dora, his daughter, encourages him in the rigidness of his principles. Soon after her father takes office, Dora leaves for an extended visit with her "granny." After seeing his family away, Mortimer hurries from the station and in passing through a desolate part of the city sees what in his mind is actual murder. He comes upon a young man over the prostrate body of another. Mortimer attempts to arrest the murderer. A lively struggle ensues, the young man breaks away, but not until Mortimer has chanced to see an ugly scar on the face of his opponent. This scar is the one means of eventual identification which Mortimer possesses. Meanwhile at "granny's" estate in the mountains, Dora becomes an enthusiastic equestrienne. On one of her special jaunts in the mountains her horse becomes frightened and bolts. The frenzied animal carries her far into the mountains directly into the path of a blast, to the fuse of which some civil engineers have just applied a match. Among the engineers is Philip Storey, who sees the danger of Dora and by an almost superhuman effort and to great personal risk he stops the runaway horse. A moment later and the blast explodes. There is a shower of stone in pieces large and small, but Dora and her rescuer are unscathed.

From the day of the rescue Philip becomes a constant visitor at "granny's" home. At length he declares his love for Dora and she reciprocates and they become betrothed. Then comes an appointment for Philip who must leave at once for Manilla. This means separation for a hasty marriage. They decide upon the latter. John Mortimer, busy with the many duties of his office is delayed and reaches "granny's" home after the ceremony has been performed. He offers to the happy couple his hearty congratulations. Then he looks at Philip aghast for there on the young man's face is a livid scar, the same that Mortimer saw on the day of the murder. As Mortimer stands astounded the happy couple leave on their honeymoon. Mortimer and his wife return to their home in the city. A terrible situation confronts Mortimer. He knows that duty orders him to arrest his son-in-law. He is torn between love and duty. At length, after wrestling with his problem from early evening until dawn, duty triumphs and Mortimer wires the bridal couple to return. Scarcely does Philip step foot into Mortimer's library when he is arrested and handcuffed, charged with the murder of one, Gean Baptiste. Philip is dumbfounded, then realizes that he is woven fast in a net of circumstantial evidence.

Then Philip unburdens his heart. He tells of early days of prospecting when he had staked a claim. That claim had been stolen by Baptiste, who took also the papers of record. Philip, followed the thief, but to no avail; he never laid eyes on him, until one day in the city when he came upon the man lying in the throes of death in an out of the way part of the town. Baptiste had been stabbed in the heart. As memory of the theft flashed through Philip's mind he searched the body for the papers proving his claim. While engaged in this act Mortimer had come upon him and hence the suspicion of murder. Mortimer shook his head in doubt. "No jury would believe your story," he said, and men of the plain clothes force were ordered to take the captive away. Just then there came a telegram to Mortimer. Mortimer opened the message and read. Wheeling instantly toward Philip he raised his hand. "Stop," said the District Attorney, "the man is innocent. The telegram from a Western state declares that a man executed that day had confessed to the murder of Gean Baptiste. Philip's innocence was proved. He and Dora fly to each other's arms.

WAIT AND SEE (July 21).—Beth Manners is a young woman who paints china for a living. The money that she earns is never great, although enough to buy her the necessities of life. Rodney Norton is wealthy. Rodney sends his valet to his shoe shop to have a pinching shoe stretched. The valet meets a pretty nurse girl and in ensuing devotion loses his master's shoe. Beth Manner's finds it. At length Rodney learns who has his patent leather property and calls on Beth to redeem it. He promptly falls in love.

A rich estate is left to Rodney with the condition that he must relinquish it if the lost heir or heiress is found. Through a combination of circumstances Rodney learns that Beth Manners is the rightful owner of all his wealth. A battle with his conscience ensues, shall he relinquish the girl when she comes into possession of her birthright, or shall he declare his love, an action which he considers against his principles. The money and property are turned over to Beth, but Rodney does not lose. The girl has awakened to realize that all the estates in the world are not worth an honest love. A quiet wedding is the closing scene.

APPLIED ROMANCE (July 13.)—Lucia Norman, a wealthy and prominent young woman, is besieged by fortune hunters. She always has been accustomed to having her own way. With her family and friends her word is the law. She has never known an opposition or countenanced interference. The control of her vast riches and income therefrom, is in the hands of two unscrupulous lawyers, who plot to rob her gradually of all her possessions. Circumstances throw Lucia into association with Oliver Weston. Like Lucia, Oliver is independently wealthy. Oliver discovers the plot of Lucia's attorneys. He comes into the scene in the nick of time, and prevents Lucia from signing a paper which had she affixed her signature to it, would have meant the loss of her birthright.

Oliver explains the situation to Lucia. She, of course, is astounded. Then, in her usual dictatorial manner, Lucia tells Oliver that he must marry her. For an instant Oliver is angered for he dislikes being handled as though his mind were not his own. Upon reflection, however, in the meantime having taken stock of Lucia's flashing eyes and unusual beauty, he assents to her proposition. He insists, however, upon a provision which he draws up in written form. He demands that the wedding take place at the expiration of two months, and that during the interval he be placed in absolute charge of Lucia's affairs. Two months elapse. Oliver has fallen head over heels in love with Lucia. During the two months, however, he always had maintained a strictly business attitude in his relations with the girl. At this fact Lucia has become irritated. Then Oliver adopts different tactics, writing highly romantic letters to Lucia. He leaves them where she may find them. He signs no name, however. The ruse is successful. Lucia, woman-like, falls in love with the anonymous writer. Then Oliver makes the writer's identity known and they live happily ever after.

HIS COLLEGE WIFE (July 20).—Billy and Helen have been secretly married while both are away at school. They have planned to keep their wedding secret. Billy's father's partner dies and Billy is called home. He leaves with a promise to have Helen join him soon, but alas! when he reaches home he finds that his parents have laid matrimonial plans for him. Aileen has been invited to spend a month at the Webster home. She has been chosen by his parents as his wife to be. Billy's father, a gay old fellow, is caught in the act of kissing the maid. Of course, the maid is discharged at once. A new maid must be hired. An idea strikes Billy and it is arranged that Helen, his college wife, be installed in that capacity. Helen arrives, sees the condition of affairs in which Billy is placed and resolves herself to circumvent the contriving Aileen.

Billy discovers Helen flirting with the chauffeur. He writes a little note saying she must meet him (Billy) and they will go away together. She is to put an answer in the pocket of his coat. Through chance Aileen gets the note. She writes an answer and drops it into the pocket of what she thinks to be Billy's coat. Alas!—it is the coat of Billy's father. Billy's mother discovers the note in father's pocket. She knows his weakness and plans revenge. Then comes a telegram to father from a group of Brother Elks. He must meet them at the train. Seeing father depart to keep his appointment, mother arranges a little date with the police department. Then Helen finds the note that Billy had written to her in possession of Aileen. In her capacity as maid it is a simple matter that Aileen be locked in a closet. Helen taking Aileen's coat and hat runs to the train to meet Billy. She accuses him of loving Aileen. He explains that the note was "BUILT BY BRAINS"

TO THE FILM MANUFACTURER:

Why should you spend thousands of dollars constantly improving the quality of your negatives and positives to make the best film possible, if the film is to be reeled off in a theatre where good projection is impossible?

To the Camera and Projector Maker:

Why strive for better lenses, smoother action and more light when you know that poor projection surfaces may absorb all the light, or flare it back in a blazing glare and thus destroy all the efforts of your experts?

To Directors and Authors:

Why cudgel your brains planning beautiful light and scenic effects, or plotting tense, gripping action, if the screen which receives the result of your artistic efforts buries them all in smudgy pictures?

To Actors and Actresses:

Why rehearse for days those swift emotional facial changes which stamp you as artists, and make the distinction between stars and supers, if these swift changes die on the screen, never reaching the audience who expect them when you appear?

To the Exhibitor:

Why waste the combined efforts of all these workers and defeat your own ends, denying to your audience the effects for which thousands of brains are working?

THE BURGLAR'S BABY (Two Parts—July 15).—Bill Slade, an ironworker, with a wife and child to support, loses his job when the works shut down. Bill has not laid aside any money, and it is not long before he and his wife are in desperate needs and actually want food. Bill is unable to secure work of any kind. His grocer shuts off the credit. His family in desperate need, Bill stifles his pride and applies at the bureau of charities for help. The bureau is bound up, red tape and indifferent officials, and the best that Bill can get from them is "One of our agents will be sent to investigate and if your case is found deserving, you will be helped." Bill waits a week and, as there is no help forthcoming, and he is still out of work and his family starving, the spur of desperation drives him to turn burglar.

Bill's first amateur burglary is a robbery of the home of Doctor King, a physician. While stealing silverware from the mansion, Bill comes across a pretty little sterling silver drinking cup. He resolves to present it to his own child and tell his wife that he found the cup on the street. During the midst of the burglary the doctor is aroused and comes downstairs and corners Bill. The doctor gets a good look at Bill, who escapes before the doctor can turn him over to the police. Later, terrified by a vision of being caught and punished, Bill reforms. Shortly afterwards the mills reopen and Bill goes back to his old job. Bill's child is taken seriously ill and his wife sends him to bring the neighborhood doctor to attend her. Bill goes to Doctor Ashley, the neighborhood physician, but the doctor is not home. Bill goes to the drug store and the druggist offers to get him a reliable physician. He phones to Doctor King and King consents to take the case. When King calls he recognizes Bill. Bill tells the doctor of his reformation and begs him not to turn him over to the police and promises to make good his theft. The kind-hearted doctor, convinced that Bill has really reformed, consents to keep Bill's secret. Doctor King pulls the child through her serious illness and, with his wife and child in ignorance of his past fall from grace, Bill prepares to keep his promise to the doctor.

THE TIDE OF FORTUNE (Two Parts—July 16). Because his daughter has married a Northern officer, Colonel Long turns her and her child from his home. After the war, Colonel Long, his plantation in ruins and sold for debt, goes to Washington with the hope of obtaining the postmastership of his home village. On account of his war record and the hostility he has always shown towards the North, his request is denied. He meets his daughter's husband, Jack Warren, but refuses to recognize him. His daughter calls on her mother and is turned from the house by the colonel. Later it is the privilege of Jack to obtain the appointment for the Colonel, and it is through this act that the Colonel becomes reconciled to his daughter and her husband.

CASH PARRISH'S PAL (Two Parts—July 21).—Cash Parrish, a bandit, is betrayed to the sheriff by his pal, Jud Ross, who covets Parrish's treasure and his wife, Rose. Cash, however, makes his getaway. He is pursued by the posse. Meanwhile, Jud has gone to the cabin, where he finds Rose packed up and ready to leave the country on her husband's return. Cash has given her his promise to reform, and she has written a letter to the sheriff, telling him this, and revealing the hiding place of the loot. Jud tries to force his love-making upon Rose, who protests. She uses a long, sharp pin in self-defense. The bandit, wounded and enraged, tries to break in the door of the bedroom, where she has barricaded herself. Parrish, running toward his own cabin, is shot at by the posse, the bullet entering the cottage, killing Jud. Parrish and Rose escape on Jud's horse. The sheriff is satisfied with the letter and the loot.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 29, "The Conspirators"—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. July 12).—At Fort Dale, Lieut. Woodward receives an invitation from Elaine Dodge to attend a house party she is to give that night. At the same time he receives a visit from on old man with a dark, heavy beard and spectacles. This man whispers something to Woodward, who starts in amazement and then answers Elaine's note begging permission to bring his friend, Prof. Arnold. Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, posing to Elaine as an investigator in search of the lost Craig Kennedy, plans with his fellow-conspirators to cut the great Atlantic cable. That night at the party Elaine discovers a note thrown away by Del Mar. It is undecipherable to her at first, as it represents only a crudely drawn sunrise on the ocean. She is finally struck with the idea that this drawing may represent something of moment to happen on the sea at sunrise the following morning, and prepares to investigate. After the ball, Prof. Arnold, suspecting Del Mar of trickery, goes to his rooms to search for certain papers. He is surprised in his search by Del Mar, and has to use all of his ingenuity to outwit the foreign agent.

The next morning Elaine rises early, and, going down to the ocean, interests herself in the actions of a boat off shore. This is Del Mar's ship, being used on his cable cutting exploit. Del Mar sees her watching, and has her captured and taken aboard. Jameson, off for a fishing trip, sees Elaine's plight, but being alone, is powerless to help her. Rushing off to Fort Dale, he explains the whole situation to Capt. Burnside of the U. S. Aerial Corps. Burnside and Jameson jump into a hydro aeroplane and start off to the rescue. Lieutenant Woodward and Professor Arnold, out for a horseback ride, see Del Mar's crew haul the Atlantic cable on deck preparatory to cutting it. Woodward gallops off to Fort Dale, where he secures a company of soldiers and a field gun, and starts back to bombard the ship. Elaine in the foreigner's ship—the ship bombarded by a field gun and a company of U. S. soldiers—the Atlantic cable about to be severed—and a hydro aeroplane about to descend—do not these things make a climax you are anxious to see? It's all on the film. See it!

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 10—"Old Foes With New Faces"—Two Parts—July 5).—At the top of the steep grade the bandits brought the "limited" to a stop. The passengers, menaced by the revolvers of the robbers, brought forth their valuables, and, as commanded, dropped them into the bag passed among them by one of the bandits. Vivian Marston, still in male garb, and Blair Stanley, were no luckier than their fellow passengers. Vivian drew the diamond from the sky from its hiding place and dropped it into the bag. Arthur Stanley's warning of the coming of the bandits had gone unheeded. So it was with more or less unconcern that he mounted his faithful steed and started up the bank, skirting the tracks. He was just in time to see the bandits making their getaway, amid a fusillade of shots fired over the heads of the terrified passengers. Within an hour the sheriff and posse were in close pursuit, and, after a long chase through mountains, caught up with the bandits. One by one they dropped from their saddles, their leader, with the booty bag hanging from his saddle, being the first to fall. Satisfied with the success of their chase, the posse returned, their mounts all but stepping on the diamond from the sky, which, falling from the hand of one of the bandits, had landed alongside a rock in the tall grass.

Esther, certain that Hagar's memory could be restored under proper treatment, graciously accepted the invitation extended by Mrs. Randolph through Blair's mother, to make her home with her during their stay in Richmond. Certain, however, that Mrs. Stanley's invitation had some ulterior purpose behind it, Esther determined to keep a close watch on Hagar. Upon their arrival at the Randolph home, Esther opened the tin box which Hagar carefully guarded. She found in it a paper containing the confession of Hagar that she (Esther) was the heir of Col. Arthur Stanley and the diamond from the sky. Vivian and Blair, reaching Los Angeles, hurried to a hotel, and, registering under fictitious names, planned a new move for the recovery of the precious gem. But after a lapse of several days, Blair's companion tired of the inactivity, and Vivian determined to return to Richmond. Blair entered the room, unexpectedly, to find her packing and attempted to restrain her. But she was not to be balked and, with a threat to expose him, forced Blair to release his grip on her wrist.

Later, that same day, Detective Blake and Abe Bloom received a wire from Vivian, which read: "Blair and I have split. The diamond now in possession of train robbers. Send me $500." Bloom and the detective hurried to the Randolph home and with Mrs. Stanley's promise that Bloom could retain possession of the diamond upon its recovery, Blake consented to permit Blair's return without fear of facing arrest for Dr. Lee's murder. The end of the week found Blair alighting from the train at Richmond. As he rushed through the depot, Luke Lovell, still suffering severely from the injury sustained when the slide struck the camp, confronted him, only to be shaken off. Arthur, his identity hidden under the alias of "John Powell," had risen to the foremanship of the sheep ranch. Straying sheep called him away from the camp. For an hour or more he rode through the rolling country of the glorious West, then halted alongside the skeleton of a horse. A white bag, hanging from the saddle horn, attracted his attention. Dismounting, he drew it from beneath the skeleton and opened it. He found bills of all denominations and valuables of every description—diamonds, watches, pins, rings and what not. But the diamond from the sky. A few rods away from where Arthur stood, lay the priceless gem. Alongside it was coiled a poisonous reptile.

THE RUG MAKER'S DAUGHTER (Bosworth July 5).—Bob Van Buren's rescue of an upper-class Turkish girl and her duenna in Constantinople when they are waylaid by robbers paves the way for a romance between them. The romance progresses rapidly despite the hullabaloo raised by Demetra's father and by the Turk fiancee he is trying to force upon her; but the very thought of a girl, so highly educated, so gifted with needle and loom, so famously graceful as a dancer ending up in a harem instead of a respectable home, drives Bob Van Buren to desperation. At length he persuades Demetra to elope with him to America, where Demetra could be married at his mother's in New York. Getting wind of it the malicious Osman hires a band of ruffians who make away with Bob Van Buren on the very eve of departure.

With her young American mysteriously vanished, and the day of her now-all-the-more-odious wedding to Osman drawing near Demetra can stand it no longer and, taking her duenna, flees to a cousin's in New York on the P. & O. boat on which Bob had reserved sailings. Osman pursues the little refugee, corners her in New York, and with oriental cunning sets a trap into which Demetra walks blindly. Having her in his toils again Osman summons a second Turkish priest and is just forcing Demetra to her knees before him when the door bursts open and in rushes Bob Van Buren, who had finally escaped the dungeon in Constantinople to which he had been consigned. He routes Osman and takes Demetra to his mother's. Mrs. Van Buren suggested that the lovers wait until September, but their hearts were set on June. And so, as you may very well imagine, June it was.

LITTLE PAL (Famous Players—Five Parts—July 1).—The saloonkeeper in Kilisnoo, Alaska, is wounded by Sid Jerue, who had fled north. Years before he had married an Indian woman who died leaving him a baby girl. When the story opens he is the prosperous and unprincipled owner of his saloon, the "Monte Cristo." All the miners love "Little Pal," his half-breed daughter. She in turn likes them all except "Black Brand," the most notorious gunman of the North. "Little Pal," while serving in her father's saloon one night, sees Brand mercilessly beat the editor of the little local paper for his interference with some of Brand's unscrupulous and unlawful actions.

In the spring John Grandon comes to Kilisnoo to take possession of his brother's claim. John and Pill Box Andy become fast friends. John also likes "Little Pal," but with no thought of affection. He does not think of telling her of his wife in Texas and unknown to John "Little Pal" falls madly in love with him. Brand, playing roulette at Jerue's one night, wins the latter's bank. He offers to put all his winnings against the possession of "Little Pal." Jerue goes to "Little Pal" and tells her of the proposed bet. She is horror-stricken and begs Jerue not to sacrifice her, but he does and Brand wins. Brand treats the house and proposes a toast to the future Mrs. Brand. Grandon refuses to drink to the toast. Brand is furious and insists on fighting Grandon. Brand knocks Grandon down, and "Little Pal" falls across him to protect him from further assault. Brand then draws his gun and shoots wild, hitting Jerue. Grandon, realizing the madman must be stopped, shoots Brand in the hand. Jerue is carried to "Little Pal's" room, where he dies. Brand now owns the "Monte Cristo," and "Little Pal" is homeless. On the night of the killing of "Little Pal's" father, she goes to Grandon's cabin and asks him to let her live there. Grandon prepares a little hut near his for her to live in. Here Grandon, "Little Pal" and Cultus, her faithful Indian servant, live and work Grandon's claim until illness takes Grandon. "Little Pal" nurses him, and at the same time mines his claim with Cultus. But it does not yield much gold, and they find themselves with very little in their purse.

Grandon's wife arrives at Kilisnoo. She enters the cabin, and Grandon naturally embraces her. This makes "Little Pal" heartsick. Slowly she leaves the cabin. "Little Pal" continues to live in her cabin near Grandon. She and Cultus work the claim until the supply of gold becomes exhausted. Pill Box Andy tells "Little Pal" that unless Grandon is taken out of the North he will die before the snow melts. She decides, in order to save Grandon, whom she loves better than her own live, to steal gold from the sluice-boxes in the vicinity. Cultus follows her, and is mystified by her actions. When he sees her place gold in Grandon's sluice-box he understands the reason for her theft. Grandon is delighted over finding gold on his claim, and "Little Pal" continues thieving. The miners, who detect the fact that a great quantity of their gold is constantly disappearing, place guards to catch the thief. Turner, the guard, falls asleep. "Little Pal" had reached the sluice-box and was about to take the gold when Brand comes upon the scene. He has been drinking, and seeing "Little Pal" catches and embraces her. "Little Pal" frees herself from Brand and runs. Brand fires after her, the bullet hits her and she falls into the arms of Cultus. The shot awakens Turner. He sees Brand, and, believing him to be the thief, shoots and kills him. The miners are also convinced that Brand is the thief. Cultus takes "Little Pal" to her cabin and dresses her wound. Grandon is preparing to return home. Cultus assists "Little Pal" to Grandon's cabin. Grateful for all she has done for him, Grandon kisses her good-bye and goes away to the boat. "Little Pal" watches the happy couple depart. She walks back toward the big snowdrifts; Cultus sees her and follows. He approaches her in a loving attitude and asks where she is going. She replies: "Cultus, I am going to the Happy Hunting Grounds." Cultus explains to her the folly of expecting a white man's love and tells her if she goes to the "happy hunting grounds" he goes with her. She realizes the love he must have for her, and takes his hand as they walk slowly toward her hut.

KINDLING (Lasky—Five Parts—July 12).—A row of very unsanitary tenements in the New York slums are owned by Mrs. Burke-Smith, an utterly selfish woman who belongs to clubs for moral uplift, but will not practise any practical charity. Her daughter, Alice, on the contrary, is genuinely interested in settlement work and devotes most of her time to it. She is assisted by a poor but promising young physician, Dr. Taylor, who is in love with her and whom she loves. Through their efforts to help a consumptive child, Alice and Dr. Taylor become acquainted with Maggie Schultz and her husband, Heine. Though they live in one of the Burke-Smith tenements they keep their two rooms clean. The wife is sweet and the husband, hard-working and honest. Maggie, who expects a child in the near future, is afraid to confess this fact to Heine, because he holds the theory that it is wrong to bring little ones into the world under the conditions to which they are subject.

Over Maggie lives an Irish woman by the name of Bates, who, when her husband was alive, lived in the open, wind-swept spaces of the West and has never forgotten it. She has a good-for-nothing son, Steve, who is a second-story man, and who is under the eye of a detective by the name of Rafferty. From Bates, Maggie learns that for the sum of only $100 she could go West with her husband and establish a homestead on the government plan. Alice induces her mother to visit the tenements from which she gets her rent and Mrs. Burke-Smith offers Maggie five dollars a week to work in her house. This five dollars is very much needed, because Heine is out of work through a strike, and Maggie finally accepts the position. She does not definitely decide this, however, until Steve, the second-story man, has offered her the money to go West if she will help him rob the Burke-Smith house. He tries to excuse his plan to Maggie on the ground that Mrs. Burke-Smith is the owner of their wretched tenement, and Maggie, who is frantic because of the secret she dares not reveal, feels that to get the money in this way would only be doing justice to herself and her unborn child. True to her arrangement with Steve, Maggie helps him rob the Burke-Smith house, and receives as her reward a diamond brooch belonging to Alice, which she pawns for $113. Rafferty, the detective, is quickly suspicious and soon forces Maggie into such a position that she confesses to her husband, Heine. When Heine learns what his wife has done, and why she did it, he gives evidence of the finest manhood by standing by her and trying to accept absolutely all the responsibility and blame. Alice, whose kindness for Maggie is unremitting, foils the detective by insisting that she has lent the money to Maggie and, at the same time, getting back her brooch from the place where Maggie has pawned it. There is a final big scene in which Maggie denounces the conditions under which she dwells, and Mrs. Burke-Smith is ultimately touched so that she begins to appreciate how wicked she has been. The play comes to a happy conclusion, with Maggie and Heine planning to begin their western trip at once.

CROOKY—(Vitagraph—Five Parts—July 12)—Crooky, Convict No. 9999, decides he needs a vacation, and, eluding the vigilance of his guards, escapes from prison in a barrel. About the time Crooky gains his freedom, Bob Roberts, a wealthy rancher, arrives in New York on a vacation, bearing a letter of introduction to John W. Dough, a Wall Street magnate, who is financiering a big railroad deal. Dough needs money with which to further his operations and Roberts comes prepared to invest. Calling on Dough at his office, he is refused an audience with the Wall Street man, the letter of introduction finding its way into the pocket of the financier's chief clerk. Crooky, in the meantime, has secured a suit of clothes, which he dons over his prison garb. In wandering about the city, he meets Roberts and the two form a mutual admiration society and start in to celebrate. The rancher in displaying a huge roll of bills, arouses the cupidity of his new found friend and Crooky finds means of conveying them to his own pocket. Roberts, who does not seem to mind the loss, resorts to his check book and Crooky innocently asks him to sign several of the checks that he may see how it is done. The two finally engage a room in a fashionable hotel. In the morning, Crooky is the first to awaken and dressing himself in his roommate's clothes, leaves his prison suit in their place.

Dough receives word from his broker that $50,000 is needed immediately to protect him in the deal and the financier is at his wits end as to how he can raise the money, when Willis, his clerk, rushes in with the forgotten letter of introduction. The two frantically call up hotel after hotel until they locate Roberts. Willis jumps into a machine and breaking all speed laws arrives at the hostelry as Crooky is about to leave. Mistaking him for the Westerner, he bundles him into the waiting auto and whisks him off to the house of his employer, where Crooky is treated like a king. Finally, Dough, plucking up courage, makes a "touch" and Crooky hands him a signed check to fill in the amount. Meeting Susan, Dough's old maid sister, Crooky begins to flirt and then carries on a little love-making with her until he meets Miss Dough, to whom he transfers his affections. Between the two women and Dough, who touches him frequently, Crooky is having the time of his life when he gets a scare from seeing the prison guards, who are in search of him. They question Susan, who recognizes a picture of Crooky in his prison suit, but refuses to tell his whereabouts. She makes up her mind that unless she secures a husband at once, she must give up all hope, and determines to marry Crooky and reform him. At a reception in honor of the engagement of Dora Dough and Willis, Susan plans to elope, and gains Crooky's consent by disclosing the fact that she is aware of his identity.

When Roberts awakens and discovers his friend has flown, he commences to raise a disturbance. He is arrested and on finding the prison suit left by Crooky, the officers hold him as an escaped convict and place him in a cell. He finally proves his innocence and, learning there is a "Col." Bob Roberts at the home of Dough, divines that it is his former friend and induces the officers to accompany him there. They arrive on the scene when the ball is at its height. Crooky instinctively senses danger and makes his escape. Roberts, in Crooky's striped suit, and the officers follow. Seeing that it is impossible to escape capture, Crooky makes for the prison, where he is caught at the entrance by Roberts, who makes him exchange clothes at the point of a gun. Crooky once more in convict garb knocks on the prison door and is admitted just in time to avoid being ill-treated by the male members of the party who have discovered his theft of Susan's rings. Once more behind the bars, he feels safe, and, coming to the window of his cell, gives his pursuers the laugh.

THE BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE (Essanay—Six Parts—July 19).—The Hon. Archibald Graham is expelled from college and his indignant father sends him to a little English village to study under the Rev. Harry Pemberton. Misunderstood by his father, he has grown up somewhat reckless and dissipated. All this is changed under the tutelage of the minister and he enters into the spirit of his studies with zeal. Effie Pemberton is a young girl of seventeen. She has never been told of the fundamental principles of life and has been brought up in absolute innocence and ignorance of the sex problem. She and Archie become fast friends.

Winstanley, a friend of Archie's, comes to the village to visit him. He is a shallow pated youth, with no moral principles. He meets Mary Ann, the daughter of a washwoman in the village. She longs for pretty clothes and all the gaieties she has been denied, and being as innocent of life as Effie, is persuaded by Winstanley to elope to London with him. Archie follows them with the intention of saving her from his friend. In this he fails. He returns to the vicarage early in the morning. Effie, in her innocence, rushes to his room in her kimona, to tell him how glad she is to see him again. He tries to get her out of the room, but she refuses to go.

The minister bursts into the room and accuses Archie of evil intentions. Archie, in an honest indignation, tells the minister some wholesome truths about his leaving his daughter in such total ignorance, which opens his eyes. Mary Ann returns home, a wreck of her former self and tells the minister her story. Pemberton and his wife then awake to the fact that girls are more likely to go wrong through innocence than in any other way. Effie is told the great truths of life. Finally Archie and Effie discover that they have been in love and "THE CUB" (Brady—July 19).—In the mountains of Kentucky, even to-day, civilization is conspicuous by its absence. The law is often taken in hand by individuals having differences of opinion. The White-Renlow feud started over a little matter. A pig belonging to the Renlows is found by Bill White eating his turnips. He makes complaint to Jim Renlow, and an angry discussion arises. White is further incensed by the fact that he sees Tilden White making love to Alice Renlow, Jim's pretty daughter who is the community's school teacher. He leaves in anger, and on his way home sees Peggy White talking to young Renlow. White follows young Renlow and shoots him. The feud is under way, and a White will shoot a Renlow on sight, and vice versa. News of this trouble reaches Louisville, and the editor of a paper there sees a chance for a good story. The star reporter is ill, so that the editor sends a "Cub" into the mountains. Thus it happened that Steve Oldham had his adventure.

Steve leaves the train at the nearest point to Whitesburg, where the feud is being carried on, and makes the rest of the journey on a donkey. His arrival in Whitesburg causes great commotion, because of his fashionable clothes. He goes to the hotel, and in order to get any news must identify himself with the White family, as he is in their midst. The plain daughter of the landlord, Becky King, decides that she wants to marry Steve. Unfortunately for Becky, Steve meets Alice Renlow and is smitten with her. He calls for her every day after school. This causes comment from the Whites because Steve is supposed to be a White and "is keeping company" with a Renlow girl. It makes Tilden White jealous of Steve.

To pay the teacher's salary a dance is given in the school house. It is called "A Truce Dance," because to get enough money it is necessary to draw on the pocket books of both Whites and Renlows. Unless there were a truce, they would fight. Steve causes commotion by appearing in a full dress suit, but he makes himself popular by contributing twenty dollars toward Alice Renlow's salary. In recognition of his generosity he is made "Floor Committee." The duties of this office consist in standing by the door and shooting all who enter without paying. Steve does not care for his job.

The worst is yet to come. Becky comes in and insists on making love to Steve. To get rid of her he kisses her. Alice enters in time to see it, and when Becky goes out to tell everybody that Steve is going to marry her, he makes up with Alice, and Becky and the people come back just as Steve is kissing Alice's hand. The Whites demand explanation. So do the Renlows. Thus Steve has both families down on him. He kisses Alice and tells everybody that they "can go to hell." In the confusion Steve escapes. Everybody chases him, but he sneaks back to the school house when it is empty. He is later captured by the Renlows when he is attempting to liberate Jim Renlow, who has been captured by the Whites. It now looks bad for Steve. It is decided that he shall be given to the Whites in exchange for Jim Renlow. The Whites want to kill him for throwing down Becky. He is saved, however, by the coming of the militia, sent by the governor to make the feudists behave themselves. Everything is once more happy and Steve takes Alice back to civilization and marries her.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE (Burr McIntosh Film Company—July 5).—Before the Civil War, two young people contract a secret marriage. They are Nancy Carter and Robert Gill. Nancy's father has objected to Robert because of his drinking habits. Robert pledges Nancy to drink no more. While their marriage is still a secret he forces his way into the Carter drawing room at a time when it is crowded with guests and blurts out the secret that Nancy is his wife, insisting that she go with him. The next day in a repentant state of mind, Robert rides his horse beneath the window of Nancy's room and pleads for her forgiveness. She cannot forgive. He draws a pistol, fires a bullet into his own heart and drops from his horse, dead!

Years later, Nancy Gill and her daughter Laura, now 16, are living at the home of Col. Carter, in Virginia, at a time when the Civil War is in its final stages. Col. Carter is in command of a Confederate regiment. He is the nephew of Nancy Gill. The two armies are forming their lines for a battle near Col. Carter's home. He leaves his command and goes home to protect it against a raiding party, which has been sent out by the northern army. The raiding party arrives before he leaves. He hides in the shrubbery near the house.

The raiding party is commanded by Lieut. Tom Klutchem. Laura appeals to him to spare their home. These two young people fall in love at first sight. The home is not destroyed. Col. Carter had witnessed what has taken place between them. In the war, Lieut. Klutchem is wounded and Laura nurses him. At the end of the war, Col. Carter endeavors to persuade Mr. Klutchem, Sr., to finance a railroad scheme, and only succeeds in doing so after quarreling with him. Laura and Tom Klutchem become engaged and are married, and Col. Carter is made happy by the presentation to him by Aunt Nancy of land upon which there is coal. Then Mr. Klutchem agrees to finance the railroad.

THE FLAMING SWORD—(Rolfe—June 28).—Steve, a young college chap who has been unfortunate in his business career, after a life of dissipation, concludes that life is not worth living and contemplates suicide. Among his associates is a girl named Maisie with whom Steve's name has been coupled by his intimates. Steve gives a banquet and announces that he is a bankrupt and that his friends are looking upon him for the last time. After the affair Steve goes to his apartment, puts his affairs in order and slowly walks to the water-front where he hires a small boat and the last seen of him is his boat, sail set leaving the inlet for the open sea. Maisie, realizing that Steve has intentions of injuring himself, attempts to follow, but is too late. Steve drifts out to sea and after days of misery is washed up on a beach of a small island where he is found by a girl named Meera who lives there with her father and several servants. Meera's father had suffered a great wrong in his early life and took the position as lighthouse keeper on this island where he could live as a hermit and forget his troubles. Meera has never seen anyone except her father and the servants, and to her Steve appeared as a Viking. A strong attachment springs up between the two. Meera's father, who has refused to allow anyone but Government officials to enter the island, takes a liking to Steve and is prevailed upon to allow him to stay there. However, when Calhoun learns that Steve is the son of the man who wronged him, his sentiment takes a different turn. In the meanwhile Maisie learns from a traveling beach-comber that Steve is safe and living with Meera's father on the island. Engaging a boat she follows him and in her awful rage and jealousy tells Meera's father that Steve is her husband. Calhoun then shouting "Like father—like son," convulsed with anger, falls into an unconscious state and Maisie, realizing that she has caused enough trouble, confesses that she falsely accused Steve. Calhoun recovers and Steve and Meera sail for New York where the story ends as it should.

The Market Place of the World for Moving Pictures and Accessories — The Moving Picture World.

Do You Know How To Judge or Determine the Best Screen for Motion Picture Projection?

TRY THESE TESTS

First—Examine the composition of screen, whether same is paper, window shading or canvas.

Second—Note whether the finish surface is as flexible as the material to which it is applied, thus removing all chance of cracking or peeling.

Third—Try creasing or bending to see if coating will crack.

Fourth—Try tearing to determine its toughness or tear-resisting qualities.

Fifth—Try soaking in water, to prove if it is waterproof.

Sixth—Try stretching.

Last but not least, look up not only the guarantee, but the manufacturer back of the guarantee. Find out how long the manufacturer has been in existence, and in this connection ask yourself this question, viz.:

How does a manufacturer know his screen will last for 5 years without proving defective whereas that same manufacturer and his screen have only been in existence 6 months or 2 years?

BEAR THESE FACTS IN MIND

Mirroroid screens have been in use for the past 6 years and are still in use.

Mirroroid is guaranteed against the defects previously mentioned by the J. H. Genter Co., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y., who have been in business, under the same management, at the same location, for the past 6 years, and are still behind the Mirroroid guarantee. Think it over.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

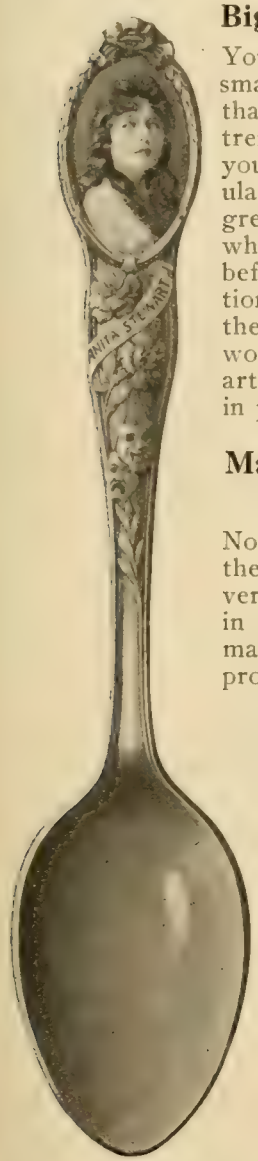
Advertise Your Theatre Please Your Patrons Increase Your Business

Like all big successful advertising ideas, the National Film Star Spoon Plan is so simple and practical that as you read you will wonder that it has never been thought of before.



Front of Spoon

Big Results—Small Expense

You get such big results, at such small expense and with so little work, that in a moment you will grasp the tremendous opportunities it brings you. But wait. The personal popularity of the famous film artists is greater than that of any other people who have ever been in the public eye before. It has remained for the National Stars Corporation to introduce the National Film Star Spoon—the wonderful keepsake, expressing the art and the personality of the artist in permanent form.

Made by the International Silver Company

No concern in the world can equal the products of the International Silver Company. They stand supreme in their field, that is why we have made arrangements with them to produce these spoons. Film Star Spoons are a masterpiece of the Silversmith's art which your patrons will be proud—yes anxious to own.

Look At This Silverware

No picture can do this spoon justice. Never before has a spoon been produced more beautiful in design and of such excellent quality at the price. The reproduction of the stars is a living image—the handiwork of a well known sculptor. By our plan, your patrons get the spoons at less than one-half the price they would have to pay if they were sold in the ordinary way. Every spoon bears the famous Wm. H. Rogers trademark known everywhere for its quality and beauty. ANITA STEWART IS THE FIRST of the series. All of the prominent stars will be released at regular intervals of two weeks.

You Carry No Stock—You Handle No Spoons

We know that exhibitors have responsibilities of their own without going into the merchandise business. You do not have to buy any spoons; you do not have to sell anything. All you have to do is to give away National Film Star Coupons, and we announce for you, in local advertisements that we pay for, that you are giving to your patrons hundreds of dollars' worth of coupons to them each week. The spoons can be had only for fifteen cents with a coupon which they get at your theatre, and which is to be redeemed at a redemption station that we appoint in your neighborhood.

Everything Necessary To Make This Plan a Success Is FREE

We furnish you with an attractive lobby display showing two of the actual spoons. We furnish you with attractive Heralds ready to be imprinted with your name and address. We give you a handsome colored slide which will tell the entire story on your screen. We advertise in the best paper in your town at our expense.

Nothing has been left undone. Everything is complete in every detail. In its entirety it is the most wonderful "attendance producer" ever conceived.

THERE'S A REASON for doubt on technical points when authoritative information for the Exhibitor, Manager or Operator can't be obtained. The contents of the books herewith advertised place all necessary information and practical assistance within reach of every reader. For instance, every weekly issue of the contains an unequalled fund of information in regard to every angle of the moving picture art. Its staff is an aggregation of the best posted men in the industry who have devoted years to a study of the requirements of all our readers. Its correspondents are located in all the principal centers and its columns contain the most complete data possible. In a class by itself as a trade paper for every intelligent student of moving picture production and exhibition.

F. H. RICHARDSON the recognized expert on projection has a second edition of his "THE MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS," consisting of 420 pages of fully illustrated articles on the subject of projection, that is enjoying an exceptional sale. This will be the standard textbook for managers and operators for many years. The price is $2.50.

J. H. HALLBERG well known as an authority on electricity has compiled a 278-page fully illustrated book, entitled "MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY," containing up-to-the-minute information on picture theatre electrical equipment. Also necessary tables and practical advice to the operator. A revision of all his Electrical Talks published some years ago in one of the trade papers. The price, $2.50.

EPES W. SARGENT is author of "TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY," an exhaustive treatise on the writing of the Photoplay, containing sample scripts and complete detailed instruction for experienced as well as inexperienced writers. Price, $2.00. All published by

2 MORE SCENARIO EXPERTS
America's Best Picture Brains

Our Scenario Editorial Board finds itself in need of two editorial geniuses to take charge of new developments of the Lincoln Cycle of Plays.

In the dramatizing of this most stupendous moving picture effort, which is in reality, a succession of 4 to 9 reel features, each a definite play—versatility of treatment is required, if only for the benefit of the various viewpoints.

Reputation is desired but youth may be no disadvantage. What we want is brains, judgment, ingenuity, enthusiasm and the ability to measure up to the high standards of the rest of the combination that are here to put over the "Cycle" in its entirety in as big a way as its first productions.

> The men we take will probably be those now holding down executive positions in similar capacities, whose salaries are as big as any paid in the motion picture industry. We want men who can earn headline prices.

Apply by letter, which will be held in strict confidence, to the CHARTER FEATURES CORPORATION, Scenario Department, 110 West 40th St., N. Y. C.

COOL YOUR THEATRE ARTIFICIALLY

Would you like to make your theatre COOL and COMFORTABLE during the hot weather, at a cost of 50c. per day? Think what a drawing card this would be for your house.

The ARCO COOLER will accomplish this result at a small cost of installation. Two hundred pounds of ice per day placed in the COOLER, and air drawn over the ice, will cool from eight to ten degrees a theatre seating three hundred and fifty. Two COOLERS will cool a theatre seating seven hundred, etc.

Constructed of reinforced riveted steel plates, japanned and positively will not become musty, as does wood construction. Space required for installation—20"x 36"x 28".

Price—Each outfit, without fan, $18.00 f.o.b. Erie.
Sixteen-inch fan, D. C., $16.00; A. C. $18.00.

Owing to low cost and small margin of profit, all goods are shipped C. O. D., or cash with order. Department E

WANTED

to work with and in co-operation with the directorate staff and to assume charge of specific divisions of the production in an executive capacity.

The "Cycle of Lincoln Plays" is a series of from 4 to 9 reel features—each a definite play—and for the preparation of the latter units of the "Cycle" we require the services of a Director of the most pronounced ability to take one of our companies to various parts of the country while others of our companies are working in the East.

The man we want may or may not have a big name but it is highly likely that he will, for we are ready to pay a salary for the best brains in America.

Ambition, initiative, dramatic ability, integrity, judgment, are what will determine our choice.

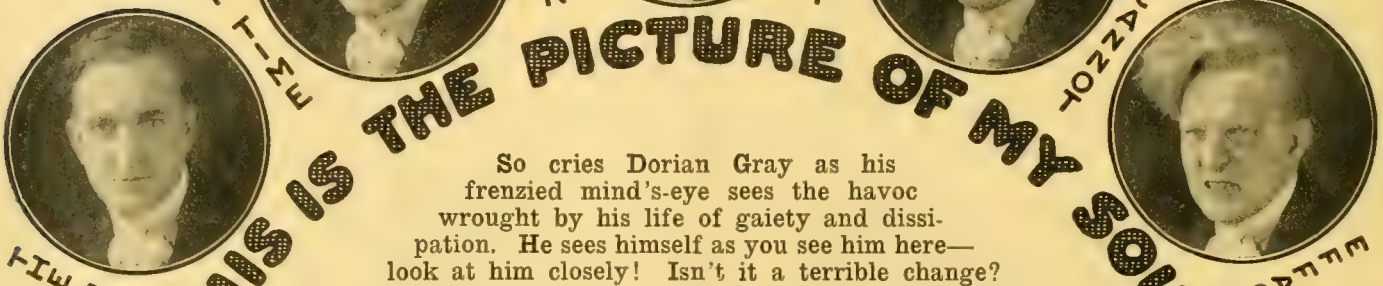
PRESENTS

THE FILMED VERSION OF OSCAR WILDE'S LIFE STUDY

The PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY

AN EPIC OF THE PACE THAT KILLS

A TRAGEDY OF HUMAN WEAKNESS



"THIS IS THE PICTURE OF MY SOUL!"

So cries Dorian Gray as his frenzied mind's-eye sees the havoc wrought by his life of gaiety and dissipation. He sees himself as you see him here—look at him closely! Isn't it a terrible change? Can you just picture what a thunderously mighty story it is? With Harris Gordon playing the lead, this fascinating tale is given a real Thanhouser presentation—consistent staging, consistent acting, and—general THANHOUSER CONSISTENCY!

Released in two reels, Tuesday, July 20th

"HIS TWO PATIENTS"

The young doctor speaks to the little cripple—"Drop your crutch and come to me!" Lo and behold, she obeys! Is it the voice of science, or is it the voice of love? Harry Benham and Grace DeCarlton tell the story so sweetly and powerfully that they take a new grip on your love for them.

Released in one reel. Sunday, July 25th

FALSTAFF COMEDY

Edwin Thanhouser Presents

"P. HENRY JENKINS and MARS"

The Helmet of Mars makes a lion of a lamb. P. Henry Jenkins is a lamb, and Mars sends his messenger, Mercury, to bestow his helmet on the weakest of cowards. Poor old hen-pecked Jenkins is that man, and with the strength of the War-God in his heart, he proceeds to turn the tables on all those who had been making life miserable for him. Riley Chamberlin makes it a howling success.

NEAL OF THE NAVY deals with other things than you have been accustomed to in other pictures. It's a great story by William Hamilton Osborne, a tale of patriotism, of stirring adventure and love, and has the U. S. Navy as a background.

It's picturesque, romantic and exciting to the last degree, and you can bet your last dollar that this Pathé Exchange serial will draw and hold the crowds!

The pictures of navy life and scenes are taken with the approval and by the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy.

IS WHAT YOU GET WHEN YOU BOOK

Essanay Photoplays

Essanay has worked out all the dross

It begins with the original story, culling out of thousands of books and manuscripts all that are mediocre, saving only the very best.

These scripts are dramatized by a corps of special writers, criticized and reviewed until they are in perfect form.

All of the artistry of Essanay's directing force is then brought to bear to make these dramas the most beautiful photographic productions possible.

The result is that

In Answer to Queries About the

CYCLE of LINCOLN PHOTODRAMAS

Based on the Life of ABRAHAM LINCOLN

While we are attempting to answer individually every inquiry received as fast as human possibilities and stenographers will permit, we feel that this announcement will perhaps reach some of our correspondents a little bit faster than Uncle Sam's mail. The points taken up here seem to be those most widely discussed throughout the field and to be found in nine-tenths of the letters we receive.

If, however, anything has not been covered here which still seems important in your mind, don't hesitate to ask us. In fact, feel that we are here to inform you absolutely on any phase of this greatest motion picture effort.

Write us today for the informative literature which has just come off the press.

First order day August 1st. No orders received before that time.

Release dates announced in the next issue of the Moving Picture World.

"Benjamin Chapin"

So much does Chapin mean Lincoln, and so truly does he stand for the Great Emancipator that hundreds of publications unconsciously published his picture for that of the President. Chapin is not merely an impersonator—he is in addition the very embodiment of Lincoln's spirit.

Mark Twain,
Gen. Grant,
Gen. Howard
and dozens of others who knew Abraham Lincoln, have said that he lives again in Chapin. It is Chapin who plays Lincoln throughout the Cycle.

"THE GREATEST COMBINATION OF TALENT."

It is something to evolve a great idea; it is something far different to be able to carry that out. For three years the CHARTER FEATURES CORPORATION has been gathering together big brains of the best talents that America has to offer. From Chapin, who is known as the "Lincoln Man," to the camera men, those who are best fitted to accomplish this work have been selected. The cast is of the finest—the directorate cannot be equaled. The Scenario Department consists of those who know Lincoln and those who know moving pictures. The Mechanical Department has been trained by long experience to make a film right.

"The Meaning of CYCLE"

"A set of poems, plays, stories or paintings revolving around a center theme or character." This is the dictionary definition of "Cycle." Cycle has been used only to describe something big, something monumental, something of historical significance. It has been attached to the greatest operas of Wagner. It has been attached to the great Greek poems. It is the first moving picture cycle, because it is the first moving picture effort worthy of the name. The Cycle is not a series or serial in the motion picture sense. Although every production in it is founded on Lincoln and the growth of America, nevertheless, each individual production is distinct.

EACH PART A FEATURE

Of the 29 productions in the Cycle each is a feature, as big and impressive as anything that has been shown in your memory. Each production is from five to nine reels. Each production has been as carefully mastered and thought out as if it had nothing to do with the big general idea. Each production stands distinct, independent a powerful photoplay with a plot and a beginning, a middle and an ending. Yet, there is in each feature a pulling towards the next feature.

"IN REALITY THE LIFE OF AMERICA"

While the title of the dramas takes the name of their chief character, Lincoln, the Cycle is really the epic of America. It is really the hymn of all that America means to the world. Because Lincoln so embodies the principles of the republic and because in his very years he seemed to encompass all the steps of the nation itself to watch Lincoln's adventures is to know America. Never was a motion picture production so universal in its appeal to America. It is the battle in its cry and the peace cry of all factions, of all sections, of all religions, of all parties, of all sections of the country. From North to South and East to West the Cycle comes as a great inspiration and a beautiful entertainment with the sermon buried deep away so that it is scarcely perceptible in the scene, but is there long after the pictures have almost been forgotten.

To Exchanges and State Right Buyers

There seems to be a most phenomenal interest throughout America to obtain the rights of the Lincoln Cycle

It is most natural. It is the most stupendous dramatic offering in all the annals. If you wish to obtain information, we should be pleased to hear from you and shall listen to any proposition you may have to make. We shall announce our definite connections with the exchanges on or about August 1st.

WANTED DIRECTOR

to work with and in co-operation with the directorate staff and to assume charge of specific divisions of the production in an executive capacity.

The "Cycle of Lincoln Plays" is a series of from 4 to 9 reel features—each a definite play—and for the preparation of the latter units of the "Cycle" we require the services of a Director of the most pronounced ability to take one of our companies to various parts of the country while others of our companies are working in the East.

The man we want may or may not have a big name but it is highly likely that he will, for we are ready to pay a salary for the best brains in America.

Ambition, initiative, dramatic ability, integrity, judgment, are what will determine our choice.

Apply by letter, which will be held in strict confidence, to CHARTER FEATURES CORP., 110 West 40th Street, New York City.

WANTED
2 MORE SCENARIO EXPERTS
America's Best Picture Brains

Our Scenario Editorial Board finds itself in need of two editorial geniuses to take charge of new developments of the Lincoln Cycle of Plays.

In the dramatizing of this most stupendous moving picture effort, which is in reality, a succession of 4 to 9 reel features, each a definite play—versatility of treatment is required, if only for the benefit of the various viewpoints.

Reputation is desired but youth may be no disadvantage. What we want is brains, judgment, ingenuity, enthusiasm and the ability to measure up to the high standards of the rest of the combination that are here to put over the "Cycle" in its entirety in as big a way as its first productions.

The men we take will probably be those now holding down executive positions in similar capacities, whose salaries are as big as any paid in the motion picture industry. We want men who can earn headline prices.

Apply by letter, which will be held in strict confidence, to the CHARTER FEATURES CORPORATION, Scenario Department, 110 West 40th St., N. Y. C.

FIRST PRODUCTION
"OLD ABE"

The pioneer adventures of Grandfather Lincoln and Daniel Boone

A stirring, melting, exciting story of the wild pioneer days of Baby America. Benjamin Chapin plays Lincoln's grandfather and early in the production plays that of the President himself. He tells his story. "Old Abe" is 5 reels. Every inch of it real meat and genuine excitement. There is not an eighth of an inch padding.

There is not a moment when you yourself, Mr. Exhibitor, will not be held spellbound, sophisticated as you may be. Release date on "Old Abe" will be announced in the next issue of the Moving Picture World. No order received before August 1st, in order that the entire field may have ample opportunity to learn the full details of the entire CYCLE so that exclusive arrangements may be made with the best people in every territory throughout the country.

Forty men helped us build this Series

Working along the theory that two heads are better than one, we got FORTY men to help us build this series!

Forty men whose positions with such hotels as the McAlpin and Buckingham, of New York City; Auditorium Hotel, Chicago; Hotel Jefferson, St. Louis; Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco; Hotel Savoy, Kansas City; Hotel Mason, Jacksonville, etc., enabled them to supply us with the material upon which we based

Said one of these men: "Mysteries far more remarkable than those contained in the most absorbing plays or books are matters of frequent occurrence in large hotels." To prove his assertion, he gave us the details of a mystery which had engrossed the attention of his organization—a mystery so unusual, so out of the ordinary, that we made it the basis for Episode No. 1.

THE STRANGLER'S CORD

Here is what the Dramatic Mirror had to say about this production the other day:

"In the weekly mysteries, near mysteries and never-to-be mysteries this real hotel mystery, the first of a series of hotel mysteries under the caption of "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," strikes us as being the best we have seen in a long time. . . . The picture is remarkable further, for its fine settings. The hotel lobby is the celebrated one which was designed by a theatrical architect, and lives up to expectations."

THE MATING

DORIS WILLARD, THE DAUGHTER OF A VILLAGE MINISTER, ACHIEVES THE REALIZATION OF HER GREAT DREAM, A YEAR AT COLLEGE. DORIS, ALTHOUGH A VERY SWEET, PRETTY GIRL IS GREATLY HANDICAPPED BY HER CLOTHES, WHICH ARE FRUMPY AND ALL WRONG, HER DRESSES AND HAT HAVING BEEN MADE BY A VILLAGE DRESSMAKER AND MILLINER AND SHE LOOKS AS THOUGH SHE HAD STEPPED OUT OF A PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM OF THIRTY YEARS BACK. ON HER ARRIVAL AT COLLEGE SHE IS EYED BY THE OTHER GIRLS WITH CONCEALED AMUSEMENT AND CURIOSITY AND SOON REALIZES THAT SHE "DOESN'T BELONG." THE GIRLS SNUB HER AT EVERY OPPORTUNITY AND SHE IS DESPERATELY LONESOME AND LONGS FOR COMPANIONSHIP.

THE SATURDAY BEFORE THANKSGIVING WHEN EVERYONE ELSE HAS GONE TO THE BIG PRINCETON-YALE GAME DORIS SITS ALONE IN HER ROOM. SHE PICKS UP THE NEWSPAPER AND SEES IN IT A PICTURE THAT GREATLY APPEALS TO HER. IT IS A NEWSPAPER CUT OF "BULLET" DICK AMES, THE UNIVERSAL CHOICE FOR THE "ALL AMERICAN ELEVEN" SHE CONCEIVES A DESPERATE PLAN. SHE THINKS NOBODY AT HER COLLEGE KNOWS DICK AND DECIDES SHE WILL MAKE THE GIRLS THINK HE IS IN LOVE WITH HER. SHE WRITES A NOTE TO HERSELF TO WHICH SHE SIGNS DICK'S NAME. THE NOTE IS A PROPOSAL OF MARRIAGE. THIS SHE DROPS ON THE PORCH OF THE GIRL'S HALL AND IT IS PICKED UP BY ONE OF THE GIRLS WHO READS IT TO THE BUNCH. DAISY ARNOLD, THE UNDISPUTED RULER OF THE "BEAUTY SQUAD" WILL NOT BELIEVE THAT DICK KNOWS DORIS AND WRITES TO HIS SISTER, ELEANOR, ASKING BOTH HER AND DICK DOWN FOR THE HOLIDAYS. IN HER LETTER SHE TELLS ELEANOR ABOUT DORIS CLAIMING DICK HAS ASKED HER TO MARRY HIM. DICK SEES THE LETTER AND HE AND HIS SISTER ACCEPT THE INVITATION. WHEN DICK SEES DORIS, HE DECIDES TO HELP HER OUT IN HER DECEPTION. DORIS IS PANIC STRICKEN ON THE NIGHT OF THE RECEPTION GIVEN IN ELEANOR'S AND DICK'S HONOR, BUT WHEN SHE IS INTRODUCED TO DICK HE SAYS, "WHY SURE, WE ARE OLD FREINDS," AND DAISY AND HER FRIENDS ARE MUCH DISAPPOINTED, THEIR PLAN FOR HUMILIATING DORIS HAVING FALLEN THROUGH.

AFTER MEETING DICK, DORIS IS UNWILLING TO CARRY OUT THE DECEPTION BUT HE INSISTS AND BEFORE HIS VISIT IS OVER THEY ARE MUCH IN LOVE WITH EACH OTHER. DORIS, HOWEVER, REFUSES TO MARRY DICK, THINKING HE HAS ASKED HER OUT OF PITY, BUT THROUGH ELEANOR'S EFFORTS HE MANAGES TO MAKE HER UNDERSTAND THAT HE REALLY LOVES HER.

Facts and Comments

IN its issue of June 24, 1911, THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in an article entitled "The Psychic Force and Value of the Moving Picture" said: "In a year or two we venture to predict the public taste will be molded altogether by the products of the film makers, and thus molded will manifest itself in plain and numerous ways." A theatrical paper took us to task for this modest prophecy, saying it was time for us to come out of the clouds. In its last issue the New York Times prints an interview with Rex Beach in which occur these remarkable utterances: "The motion picture will become the most powerful of all influences for directing public opinion in politics and in everything else." "Even the most prejudiced opponent of the moving pictures will admit that they are becoming more intellectually respectable. * * * Literature is elevating the motion picture."

TO that last sentence we take exception. It might just as well be said that the motion picture is elevating literature. The motion picture is simply a new and unsurpassed medium of expression which is destined to attain heights far beyond our present ken.

WE cannot help endorsing the proposition to tax popularity contests. The idea occurred to the Solons of a small town in Kentucky. Most exhibitors who engage in popularity contests do so against their better judgment, weakly yielding to a silly but vociferous demand.

* * *

JUDICIAL wisdom has now formally endorsed the idea that a great legitimate actress may be "a frost" before the camera. The court has refused to grant an injunction against a well-known actress to restrain her from cancelling her contract with one company and going to another. Such injunctions, the court says, are only granted when the artist in question is possessed of extraordinary and well-known drawing powers. To argue that a legitimate artist of this type will, as a matter of course, transfer her greatness to the screen seemed to the court quite illogical. The court must have had expert advice or sad personal experience.

SOMEBODY has come out with a proposition that the little exhibitor ought to be subject to censorship, but that the owner of the big theater featuring great films ought to be exempt. We would like to hit this pernicious doctrine with our 75-centimeter editorial howitzer. Of course, no court would uphold any such bald class legislation.

WHAT would you think of a three sheet showing a woman sitting on a bench with two mysterious arms emerging from the surrounding shrubbery, one arm grasping the woman's throat and the other buried in her hair, while the woman looks as distressed as possible. They are the hands of a strong, sinewy man, whose face and figure are invisible. The reading matter on the poster consists of this question? "Whose Hands." Frankly speaking, we do not know, but would like to propound this counter-question: Whose Brains and Whose Taste? We are informed that the whole film is a "torrent of thrills" concluding with "terrific climaxes and veritable phalanxes of episodical force." Man, you are going back to the stone age of the industry.

TO THE men and women whom Providence has put in positions of power and who are called upon to decide questions involving the motion picture we make this urgent request: Look before you act. Do not preface your statement of hostility against the motion picture with the remark that you have never seen a motion picture and that you do not want to see one. It is so easy to investigate. There are always a few motion picture theaters within easy striking distance. Examine the programs of these theaters and then form your judgment.

IN A decision rendered by the City Court of Yonkers the Aldermanic ordinance against Sunday closing of motion picture theaters is declared invalid. There was nothing for the court to do but to follow the doctrine laid down by the Court of Appeals, which had squarely decided in favor of the legality of motion picture exhibitions on Sunday. The clerical law-prophets who thronged the Aldermanic chamber in support of the ordinance are entitled to another guess. They were quite sure that the Aldermen had it in their power to override the Court of Appeals if needs be by trickery and indirection.

The Laugh On Us

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WE ROAR when the clown throws a wet sponge at the acrobat and hits the ring-master by mistake, partly because the latter has been strutting around in a silk hat, cracking his whip and otherwise offending our egotism, and partly because we take a malicious delight in the mistakes of others. Two brothers are chaffing at the head of a staircase and one slips and falls down the entire length. The one remaining goes into hysterics of laughter—it is a secondary matter with him to ascertain whether his brother is injured. A man chases his wind-blown hat in a devious course, while the rest of us grin from a point of security. The clown, foolish and vulnerable ass that he is, has a close kinship to that part of ourselves which we carefully conceal from our nearest friends, whereas the arrogant ring-master represents our attained aspirations to be the center of attention. We instinctively dislike him because of his airs of importance, whereas the clown represents an inferiority of which some of us are conscious in periods of occasional sanity and is correspondingly popular—he is one of us.

When we emerge from the pure and childish joy of watching men throw things and sit down with unexpected force, we begin to have a rather cloudy suspicion that there may be something funny about ourselves as exemplified in other people. What we are is nobody's business, and it is all right about our playing little parts, just as we attempt to achieve an angelic expression before the mirror—we are trying to live up to the best there is in us, and it adds greatly to our happiness that we can hope people take us for what we seem to be. The brutal truth about us would be rather disconcerting at times. We have only to sit down and dissect ourselves psychologically to find abundant material for comedy.

It may not seem true that we are justified by self-examination in formulating an estimate of all human nature, but it will become painfully apparent in time that we are very much akin to one another. We all know the sensations of hunger and cold, and a large part of masculine effort is given to procuring subsistence and arranging for shelter. Therein lies the beginning of industry, also of avarice. In acquiring from others we have developed a system of exchange and some crude forms of civil justice to settle our disputes. There is nothing particularly complex about man. He is devoting most of his hours in making and distributing appliances for protection against climate, to transportation, to procuring food, to eating, sleeping, buttoning and unbuttoning, fighting, or to entertainment for the eye and ear. When he turns from these at all, as he occasionally does, it is to love woman.

Now it is true man does not love as woman does, for the preservation and perpetuation of life, but with an intense lack of dignity and no overwhelming sense of personal responsibility when he is fully aroused. He may be a lion, a fox, a monkey, or an ass, according to temperament, when he is in love, but he is a rank outsider, and will remain so all his life unless he is fortunate enough to grasp the full meaning of a splendid woman's love. To the fact that he remains in a state of uncertainty most of the time, rarely sure of her and never sure of himself, must we ascribe his fitness for the lead in comedy. There is nothing funnier on the face of the earth than just plain man.

Two popular screen stories—so popular that they were widely imitated—may be cited in illustration. A young married woman in modest circumstances received a set of sables from a former suitor in Alaska, but feared that her husband might object. She pawned them and told her husband that evening that she had found the ticket. He took her savings and promised to redeem the furs next day. He came home next evening with a moth-eaten set of fox, and she dared not complain, but she did more than that when she visited his office and found his pretty stenographer wearing the sables. Two newly-weds invited their friends to a New Year's Eve celebration and all imbibed too freely of a delicious punch. Next morning, when hubby rushed into the dining room for ice water he had a nervous fit over his inability to remember what occurred after he was caught by his wife kissing their prettiest guest. His agony of mind grew until his wife appeared, a towel around her head, and feebly complained that she could not remember a thing that occurred the night before.

Neither the farce, nor pantomime, nor the antics of the buffoon furnish half the amusement offered by an ingenious comedy of situation which exposes some of the weaknesses of human nature. Man finds it impossible to live up to his own standards. He likes to go with the crowd, and he keeps up a good front. In order to preserve his social status he becomes careful about his morals and his necktie. He wears whatever is the fashion. He does not lunch at an expensive restaurant because the food is better but to make an impression, just as he attempts to establish his relative position by the brand of his motor car. He affects dignity in the office and solemnity on Sunday, and sneaks away for a night off at the French ball under the pretext of having an important business engagement in dear old Philadelphia.

Man may never love virtue as he does beauty, and his weaknesses have multiplied since the day of Old Adam, but it should not be forgotten that he is a thinking animal, and we may learn to sympathize with him, to like him for his humaneness. To show him as he is, to bare his heart and soul, is a higher form of comedy, especially when it is interwoven with tragedy or intense drama. He is better established in our minds as a real human being by revelation of his imperfections, and our hearts may beat the more warmly for him that we are obliged to balance what is good in him against certain obvious defects of character, especially when he is made over by favorable environment. We recognize that circumstances have a great deal to do in forming character, and we rejoice when a man of naturally kind heart and good intentions finds himself lifted from the misery of an evil life by a sudden expansion of opportunity and consequent gain in breadth of view.

In delightful comedy drama may be dispelled many popular conceptions which are without basis and have become entrenched in the human mind through hasty acceptance of superficial knowledge, the kind that Pope called "a dangerous thing." Millions of people are absolutely honest in believing what is absolutely false, and so they will continue to believe until some shock of actual experience makes them sceptical, when they are little better off than before. If they do not subscribe to the form of a faith rather than its spirit, why is Christendom at war? It is not so necessary that all people should be enlightened as that true sources of enlightenment should be open to all. Moving pictures offer the medium, one that has no confusion of tongues, not to rearrange native capacity, but to place what is worthy of confidence within the reach of those who really hunger for the truth.

Honest Advertising

By W. Stephen Bush.

MISSOURI lives up to its reputation for skepticism by passing an "honest advertising law." Hereafter the Barons Munchhausen in advertising will be flirting with jail whenever they cross into the state where wanting "to be shown" is the cardinal principle of commercial life.

Is this an auspicious moment for the aforesaid fablers to examine their conscience and to be careful if they cannot be good? How does the situation strike us? Are we in the moving picture field given to mendacious advertising? What, by the way, is "mendacious advertising," the kind which Missouri has just made an offence against the penal laws? For one thing, exaggerated praise is not necessarily mendacious advertising. For the Jones and Smith Unsurpassable Feature Company to say in flamboyant advertisements that their latest production positively eclipses all former productions and successfully defies criticism and is "a sure fire money-getter," is in the eyes of the law just "nuda laus" or naked praise, or pure heated atmosphere.

Talking of The Moving Picture World, have you noticed that the language of our advertisers is remarkably temperate, with perhaps one or two exceptions? The power of the statement in moderation is being recognized, appreciated and put into practise. Exaggeration is an unfailing sign of weakness. People get tired listening to the high C's in every "ad" and what is worse, they get incredulous. This is especially true in the advertising of films. Nobody, of course, blames a producer for setting forth his wares in the most attractive manner possible. His films cannot be much good if he has little faith in them. We do not mind to hear the tocsin ring on such occasions and, besides, we are right there with the little discounting devices. We know how much it is safe to believe.

Our advice is to adjust your "ad" to the intelligence as well as to the demands of the reader. The average intelligence of the readers of The Moving Picture World is high; they are all practical men, capable of quick discrimination and inpervious to the onrush of the frantic press agent. Examine our advertising pages and see for yourself whether the advertisers do or do not realize this fact. Which page of advertising do you think will in a run of six or twelve months produce the better results? The page bristling with ever-recurring superlatives or the page which tells the story in a plain but dignified manner?

The greater evil in advertising has been the dispraise of the other fellow. We have from time to time requested our advertisers to abstain from pointing out the defects of all their competitors, while at the same time we encouraged them to emphasize all their own good qualities. We are happy to say that the campaign has borne fruit.

Honest advertising pays best, whether we are in Missouri or in any other part of this laboring old world.

We must not forget that ephemeral advertising cannot be expected to bring any but ephemeral results. The permanent advertiser, the man who has a lasting stake in the industry, is the one to whom the style, method and character of advertising is especially important. He has it in his power to establish a reputation and to gain the confidence of his readers. Herein lies the true secret of all successful advertising. Such confidence can only be gained through truthful, or, in other words, honest advertising.

"The Ultimate Consumer"

By W. Stephen Bush.

"THE ultimate consumer," which term is but a scientific perversion of "the picture fan," is not easily fooled. Not only that, but he insists on the best he can get. The vast improvement in the ethical and artistic standards of the motion picture would be unthinkable without the aid and appreciation of "the ultimate consumer." A calm contemplation of this fact ought to lead us in general, and the exhibitor in particular, to this conclusion: Likewise does the future of the motion picture depend entirely upon the ultimate consumer.

We do not believe it probable, but we think it entirely possible that the motion picture may eventually experience a setback in popular favor. We need a whole lot of ambitious, capable and experienced exhibitors to prevent such a setback. The exhibitor, as the final distributor of the films, reacts tremendously on the producer and the exchangemen. There is room right now for a couple of hundred capable exhibitors to push along the upward movement in the industry and incidentally to reap a large material reward for themselves.

There has been a good deal of inertia among exhibitors, the term inertia being but a scientific rendering of the old-fashioned Saxon word laziness. Too many of us imagine that little more is needed than to open up in the morning, send the operator after "the show," and then wait for the receipts to arrive. If they do not arrive as promptly and richly as we expect, we talk scathingly of the low ethical standards of the hateful nearest competitor, concluding perhaps with a futile eulogy of the good old times, "when they were satisfied with two short reels for a nickel."

These are the men that fail. There is no profession within the sphere of amusements or for that matter there is no profession within the range of all human activity which will more thoroughly absorb your talents and your time than the profession of exhibiting motion pictures to the public. There is none more fascinating. There is none more profitable. There is none which requires more originality and persistence. I have talked with dozens of successful exhibitors and I have been struck with the fact that they were dissatisfied in spite of their evident progress and profits.

"Our public," one of them said to me but recently, "will follow us wherever we are capable of leading. Nothing is too good for them and they are willing to pay the price."

There is no country in the world where "the ultimate consumer" is more grateful than right here. He is worth appealing to. Whatever uncertainties there may be in the world of amusements, whatever may be the problems of the producer and the exchangeman, the exhibiting field offers wonderful possibilities to the man who has a genius for exhibition and who does not mind a little early discouragement.

It is at times necessary to create and gather your audience. This always takes time. Whether you are entering upon an entirely new venture or whether you are trying to succeed where another has failed, you must have patience as well as intelligence. I know more than one exhibitor who has achieved success as a builder-up of seemingly forlorn hopes. These men expect that the beginning will be hard. Supremely confident in the ultimate success of their plan, they are not a bit disturbed if the receipts do not show an immediate upward trend.

Kleine-Edison Merger Formed

The Feature Productions of George Kleine and Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Will Be Handled by the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service—Other Important News Regarding Combined Product.

By James S. McQuade.

THESE are the days of the merging of great film manufacturing interests for the purpose of handling most efficiently their feature products. It was only recently that the V-L-S-E, Inc., was launched, and now the announcement is made by George Kleine that a merger has been formed by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and himself for the distribution of their combined feature productions. The merger was effected early in June under the title of the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service.

George Kleine arrived in Chicago from New York Thursday, July 8, and during a remarkable interview said:

"It is due to the personal insistence of Mr. Edison that my name appears first in this title, and it was with the greatest reluctance that I yielded to the wishes of the man whose name stands not only at the head, but, apart from all others, as the founder of motion photography.

"In the midst of so many claims made today by some men who seem to think that if they had not been born moving pictures would have remained an undiscovered art for years to come, it is a matter of great personal satisfaction to me that Thomas A. Edison, the one individual who has most to claim for, and the least to say of, his achievements, should ask me to join the feature productions of his studios and mine. This has taken the form of a feature film service whose quality will be the best that experience, resources and pains-taking care can produce. This service furnished by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., will be apart from the shorter subjects, which will be released through the General Film Co.

"It is the intention of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., to produce a series of feature films that will appeal because of their dramatic strength and the personnel of the cast (which will be selected because of special fitness for the various roles), and also for accurate settings and perfect photography.

"When I last saw Mr. Edison to discuss the new arrangement it was characteristic of him that he was more interested in his manager's and my plans concerning the quality of the product, the public preference as to subjects, etc., than in cost of production or profit. In all of his business activities, whether moving picture machines or films, electric batteries, photographs or records, I have always known Mr. Edison to insist upon quality, and that, by the way, leads to the slogan of this service. 'Quality, not speed and quantity.' We shall adhere to that principle rigidly.

"The Edison output will be a minimum of one feature a month, possibly more, but on no account will it be permitted to let quality suffer through haste or pressure. Eventually the combined output of the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service will be one feature weekly.

George Kleine.

"My present chain of offices will market our combined features exclusively, thus assuring exhibitors a continuance of the prompt and intelligent branch office service I have endeavored to maintain heretofore. More and better features, but each considered as a separate, artistic effort and not as a unit in any set program, will be the aim of the new organization and the keystone of the success which it will seek to deserve and attain.

"Our present plans contemplate an opening of the service on Monday, August 30, with the Edison feature, 'Vanity Fair,' in which Mrs. Fiske is starred. Her fame in the stage play of that name is widely known and needs no comment. We will follow this with one of my recently finished productions, 'The Woman Next Door,' in which Irene Fenwick is featured. Then an Edison, 'The Poor Little Rich Girl,' featuring Viola Dana, to be followed by another of my productions that will feature Frank Sheridan, Paul McAllister, Fania Marinoff and Anne Meredith.

"Realizing the harmful effect upon quality which film issues produced in haste suffer, I have been slow in announcing any increase in my output. The making of a moving picture film is, or should be, a work of art; and, while it may be impossible to maintain an ideal, the output of any individual company should be limited to a quantity that will not bar the personal supervision of the controlling minds of the business.

"Mere age gives no patent of privilege to any business, but it does impart the stamp of reliability. Age adds conservatism and tempers progress with experience. Age also has its obligation, so far as the film manufacturer is concerned, as he must not only satisfy public taste, but try to guide it in the right direction.

"With this in mind I have to announce the engagement of Messrs. Bickel and Watson, the famous comedians, who will be seen in our films exclusively for a long time to come.

"They will be featured in a series of comedies that will avoid any suggestion of vulgarity, without affecting, however, the broad humor for which they are celebrated. They will be surrounded with exceptional casts, selected because of the individual fitness of the members for their several parts. Coming announcements will give proof of this intention. The general treatment of settings, properties, etc., will be of strictly feature quality.

"To be successful, a film must be popular as well as artistic. It requires the greatest care to produce a feature that will bestow credit upon its maker, and at the same time appeal to the public. Recognizing the necessity of satisfying the craving for comedies, even of the broad and farcical type, I nevertheless believe that such farces can be given settings that will compare favorably with those of the most ambitious dramatic features.

"The Bickel & Watson comedies will, therefore, be rich in humor, but at the same time artists of the first rank, whose work will be entitled to the most serious consideration, will appear with them in these photocomedy productions. The contrast between the serious acting and that of the comedy roles cannot fail to add to the amusement and pleasure of the spectator.

"I consider it vital that a photocomedy, particularly of feature length, should tell a story that will hold the attention of the audience as strongly as a photodrama. I have seen photocomedies that wholly lack this element and which could have been as easily cut at 500 or 1,000 to 2,000 feet, without any damage to the alleged story which it told, and depending entirely upon the antics of a comedian. Every healthy-minded individual enjoys fun, but this can be furnished without indulging in vulgarity, in any form.

"For Bickel & Watson I confidently expect a tremendous public following. The first release will be a five-reel comedy from the play, 'Hello, Bill!' by Goodhue.

"Miss Irene Fenwick, whose work in the 'Song of Songs' during the past season was one of its chief theatrical sensations, has already achieved distinction in films, having rapidly acquired the technical knowledge necessary for the best work. Her characterization of the titular role in 'The Spendthrift' is everywhere received as a work of the highest art, and her appearance in our next release, 'The Woman Next Door,' will be an acknowledged gem.

"Work has been progressing steadily on a series of two-reel subjects, featuring Ethel Grandin, one of the most popular film stars of the present day. These will be released every Thursday through the General Film Co., beginning September 2.

"To the foregoing I will add no further releases until I am satisfied that our standard of quality can be maintained without sacrificing it to speed."

In connection with this article it will be well to state that the executive department of George Kleine—including himself, the publicity department, the general accounting department and other work pertaining to the general office—will be conducted from his offices in the Candler Theater Building, New York City.

Chicago will still remain the distributing center for films in the Middle Western territory, and this department as well as the Kleine Optical Company will continue business, as heretofore, at 166 N. State street.

All the George Kleine feature exchanges will be conducted from the executive offices in New York City.

The staff of the departments changed from Chicago to New York, with office effects, will leave Chicago Friday, July 16, and everything will be in readiness to resume business in the New York offices, Monday, July 19.

ED-AU CLUB MEETING.

The New York Ed-Au Club held a meeting Tuesday, July 6th, at Browns, Fortieth and Broadway, New York, at seven o'clock P. M. Owing to the death of Mrs. George L. Sargent, the wife of the president of the Ed-Au, Arthur Leeds presided over the meeting. They entered into business with interest, and the names of several new members was presented to the board. Edwin La Roache, Russell Smith, Clarence J. Harris and Walter MacNamara, all editors of various film companies or magazines, gave most interesting talks which gave the members something to think over relative to the photoplay and the future of Ed-Au Club. The paper to have been read was held over till the next meeting. The club requested the secretary to send a letter of condolence to the president, George L. Sargent, expressing its deepest sympathy over the loss of his wife.

The Ed-Au Club invites writers who are qualified to join the club to send in their names with the necessary initiation fee, to the secretary, Mary Louise Farley, 607 West 136th street, New York. The invitation is open to those living away from New York also. The Ed-Au aims to have a club room in the near future where a member from out of city, can always find a welcome when in New York. Next meeting is held Tuesday evening, August 3rd, at the same time and place, and members are requested to be present.

ABEL V.-L.-S.-E. MANAGER AT CLEVELAND.

It has been announced that Sydney E. Abel, after three years' association with the Mutual Film Corporation in the management of several of their branches, has accepted an engagement with the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., in their Cleveland offices.

During his later employment with the Mutual Corporation he was identified with the Pittsburgh office as manager for the past one and one-half years, and during that time made many friends and associates with whom he was exceedingly sorry to separate, and it is evident that those friends were noticeably affected in having him go, which was evidenced by a farewell luncheon given Monday noon.

Abel is succeeded in his position by Walter T. Kinson, who it is conceded by all will carry on the good work started successfully.

Anderson Goes To England

Makes Special Trip for Famous Players and Lasky Company —To Become Business Manager of Paramount.

CARL ANDERSON, formerly business manager of the Lasky Feature Play Co., Inc., has been engaged by the Paramount Pictures Corporation as business manager for that concern. Before leaving the Lasky Company to become associated with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, through which all Lasky productions are distributed, Mr. Anderson is making a special trip to England on behalf of the Lasky Company and the Famous Players Co.

Mr. Anderson left Saturday, July 10, on board the St. Louis, and while in London will visit the offices through which the Lasky and Famous Players films are distributed in England and on the European continent, as well as for Australia and other distant points. Through his long and intimate association with the Lasky Company, Mr. Anderson has become especially familiar with the details of the business, and when the present war conditions brought up new problems it was universally agreed that he was the one man best equipped to handle the situation successfully.

Mr. Anderson makes this foreign trip as a special envoy of the Lasky and Famous Players Companies, by courtesy of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which has postponed the date for the beginning of his work with them sufficiently long for him to complete this special undertaking.

REGARDING MOTOR-DRIVEN REWINDERS.

July 8, 1915.

Moving Picture World,
17 Madison Ave., New York.

Dear Sirs—It has been reported to me that an effort is being made on the part of the managers of some moving picture establishments to force the licensed operator to rewind films at times when he is supposed to be supervising the operation of a motor driven moving picture machine.

Permission to employ a motor for driving a machine is a special privilege which the Department grants only when and where the privilege is not abused. I desire through the columns of your paper to announce that the Department will prohibit the use of motor driven machines in moving picture establishments where the management endeavors to economize at the expense of safety to the public through requiring the operator to perform work which will divert him from the duties imposed upon him by law.

Respectfully,
WILLIAM WILLIAMS,
Commissioner.

HARRY J. COHEN HAS SAILED FOR ENGLAND.

Harry J. Cohen of the Metro office no sooner returned to New York from his mission to Denver, where he opened Metro's Denver office, the last exchange necessary to complete the circuit of the United States for the distribution of Metro pictures, than the was despatched to England by the Board of Directors. Mr. Cohen sailed on the St. Louis last Saturday. His mission is to close up a big contract that has been pending for the distribution in Europe of all of Metro's output. Metro soon will be heard of encircling the entire globe. Inquiries for Metro pictures have been received from far away South Africa, India and Australia.

ALL-STAR CAST TO SUPPORT MARIE TEMPEST.

Marie Tempest, supported by Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, W. Graham Brown and Billie Rhodes, featured in the production of a four reel comedy, "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," written and directed by Al E. Christie, of Nestor comedy fame! Let some one with a wild, untamed imagination name a cast of characters which he thinks might excel or even equal the above. That the picture will be a success goes without saying, for Marie Tempest has made a success of everything in the way of comedy she has ever taken hold of. First it was the opera comique. Then it was spoken comedy. Now it is in the comedy of the pantomime variety put over without words before the eye of the camera. Success has always dogged her footsteps and it is from the past performances that we have to make prophecies.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR MAUD ALLAN.

Bosworth, Inc., has arranged special music to be used in conjunction with the showing of its latest release, "The Rug Maker's Daughter," in which Maud Allan, the internationally famous dancer makes her first motion picture appearance. Orchestrations are to be sent out with each print and in this way the true effect of this wonderful dancer's offerings will be realized.

Selig Flyer on Way to Coast

Nearly Two Hundred Guests Aboard the Luxuriously Equipped Northwestern Train, as It Pulled Out of Chicago.

By James S. McQuade.

THE Selig Exposition Flyer comprised of thirteen Pullmans and an accommodation baggage and buffet car, left the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad station, Chicago, Thursday morning at 11 o'clock for a seventeen-days tour out to the Pacific Coast and back, taking in the Frisco fair and the San Diego exposition among the numerous sights.

The Northwestern station, spacious as it is, was crowded with a host of friends of the tourists and by representatives of the Chicago daily press and of the trade press. A large contingent from the Selig Polyscope Company's forces, headed by J. A. Berst, Vice President and general manager, were also present to say good-bye and to assist H. C. Hoagland, manager of the party during the entire trip out to the Coast and back. To Mr. Hoagland is due the original idea of the trip, and he has been busy as a bee, night and day, for many weeks past, in making arrangements with the tourists and the railway authorities.

Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, head of the Chicago censor board, was also present, to speed the tourists on their way and to present three free tickets for the trip to the three winners of the Chicago Tribune contest, the contest being for the best three short stories written about films which the contestants had seen in Chicago moving picture theaters. The happy winners were John S. Whyte, Miss Clara Helm and Frederick Doyle, all of Chicago.

Nothing was overlooked by Mr. Hoagland that would contribute to the comfort and enjoyment of the nearly two hundred guests who went out on the Flyer. The Selig Exposition Flyer was one of the most completely equipped trains that ever started out on a sight-seeing tour. Among the novel installments aboard one of the cars was a complete printing office, from which will be issued the "Daily Yelp" that will chronicle all the principal experiences and doings of the trip. There was also a complete moving picture outfit that will be used in giving moving picture entertainments during the entire journey. The latest editions of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial will be exhibited together with other Selig subjects.

One Pullman was especially equipped as a ball room, where a string orchestra will play music for the dancers. Player pianos, talking machines, etc., were also provided for the divertissement of the guests.

Staff photographers for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial were also aboard, and their duties will be to film all the interesting events of the journey.

Much interest was centered on a Selig actor and seven beautiful girls, with as many handsome young men, who will take part in the enaction of a Selig photoplay during the trip to the Coast. The Selig actor assumed the role of the Handsome Stranger, and he handed seven mysterious packages, each sealed with seven seals, to the seven good looking young women, who will be known in the photoplay as "The Seven Suffering Sisters." These sisters must deliver the packages intact to Miss Kathlyn Williams at the Selig Zoo in Los Angeles. This must be done in order that the seven handsome young men, known in the photoplay as "The Seven Suffering Suitors," may win the seven sisters.

Aboard the train was also a lovely villainess, who, in the course of the story, gains possession of all but one of the seven mysterious packages. How these packages are recovered by the seven sisters, the ultimate fate of the sisters and the suitors, what happened when Kathlyn Williams was about to open the seven mysterious packages at the Selig Jungle Zoo, and other interesting details of an unusual film story, will be unfolded in the Selig photoplay, which will be released after the tour of the Selig Flyer has ended.

The all absorbing question, "What does the seven mysterious packages, sealed with seven seals and delivered to Kathlyn Williams—what do they contain?" will then be open for answers. The solution to the problem will be given in the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial after an interval long enough to permit every man, woman and child in the United States to put their wits to work and endeavor to unravel the puzzle. Several valuable cash prizes will be given to the first contestants who guess correctly the contents of the seven mysterious packages.

A telegram was received at the Selig Polyscope Company's general offices from Cheyenne, Friday afternoon, July 9th, stating that everything was happy with the tourists and that all were having the time of their lives.

The list of the tourists aboard the Selig Flyer when it left the Northwestern station, Chicago, was as follows:

Mrs. Maud-Moore Clement, Clarence A. Frambers, president of the Photodrama Club and Selig scenario editor;

The Selig Flyer Leaving Northwestern Station, Chicago. *

Miss Mae Tinee, moving picture editor of the Chicago Tribune; Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, moving picture editor of the Chicago Herald; Neil G. Caward, from the staff of Motography, and wife; Mrs. Dunning, Fred Dunning, Miss F. L. Horn, Mrs. May Gilbert, Miss Bertha Schoeneman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Drabek, Miss Helen Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kaempfer, Miss Kaempfer, F. W. Kaempfer, Miss Catherine Smith, Miss Anne Galvin, Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Schneewind, Miss Schneewind, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. Weihe, the Misses Weihe, Mrs. H. L. Danks, Frederick Doyle, Miss Clara Helm, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Whyte, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Buehne, Miss E. Bauer, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Edwards, Miss Ansell, Zack C. Elkin, W. A. Schloseman, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Merrill, Miss Merrill, Geo. Tiedman, Miss Tiedman, Miss Mae Hedler, W. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. John Selig, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Heublein, Miss Heublein, Miss Helen Ryan, Mrs. C. W. Gould, Chas. A. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Muller, Miss E. Flora Fische, Miss Grace M. Milles, Mrs. P. A. SELIG SPECIAL ARRIVES.

The Selig Special arrived at San Francisco Saturday, July 13. Lack of time prevented the party from accepting dozens of invitations, extended by cities along the route. While in San Francisco, the Selig excursionists took pictures of the city and the Exposition, indulged in sight-seeing trips and then left at midnight for San Jose, where a five-hour trolley trip through the valley was had. After a visit to the big trees and San Diego, the party went to Los Angeles on Sunday to view the city.

MONTGOMERY OPENS NEW HOUSE.

On Thursday, July 8, Frank Montgomery, the man who made motion pictures popular in the South, opened the Regent, a new suburban picture theater at 548 Peachtree street, Atlanta, Ga. The new house will be under Mr. Montgomery's personal management. In the communication advising us of this new venture, Mr. Montgomery called attention to a previous announcement in the Moving Picture World which implied that he was no longer connected with the Montgomery Amusement Company. Mr. Montgomery wishes the fact to be known that he is still president and general manager of that corporation and that he owns $40,000 of its stock.

John H. Collins

TO BE, at the age of twenty-three years, spoken of by a leading critic as "an exponent and pioneer of what the best in the future of the motion picture holds," and never to have been an actor on stage or screen is of itself significant of the record and ability of a director. Such is the unique record of John H. Collins, Edison director, who has to his credit the direction of many of the most successful pictures produced by that company.

John H. Collins.

Starting when a boy at a time when motion pictures were thought an experiment, when no lights but sunshine were known, when painted scenery stood for a world of objects, Director Collins has grown up with the industry and his growth has been as fast as the business. His was the role of a man of parts when he first began with Edison—acting as assistant to four directors, watching for the sun, and casting the players, many of whom are now famous in the motion picture world. But he did this night-and-day task with such characteristic thoroughness that he was soon stage manager. During the two years he held that post he had staged more than five thousand sets for what was then the biggest feature productions and which still are easily remembered. It was he who painstakingly gathered together the Edison library embracing every authoritative book and illustration on history, costumes, manners and locations, gathered from all corners of the world. He has designed sets and costumes for every known tribe except the Esquimaux and his productions have always won most favorable commendation because of their faithful accuracy of detail. Some of these are "Frederick the Great," and Von Schiller's "The Robbers." His first directorship was in conjunction with Director Richard Ridgley, Mr. Collins doing all the battle and sea scenes in "The Southerners" while Director Ridgley was at work in the south. In "The Story of the Willow Pattern" when a stage manager, in turning the whole studio into a lake, in the remarkable realism of the blowing up of the battleship Maine, in the studio, one gets a glimpse of the execution and ability of this quiet man, John Collins.

His first production was "Jim's Vindication" and it easily vindicated his selection for the directorship. That's but a year ago, but in that short time Director Collins has left an impression upon the screen in such plays as "What Could She Do?" "On the Stroke of Twelve;" the prize play. "The Phantom Thief;" "The Last of the Hargroves;" Lee Arthur's "Cohen's Luck," and "Greater Than Art." As a dramatist, Director Collins's "Stoneheart," "Oh, Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" and "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," for which he won a gold prize, are instinct with fine dramatic sense.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM VERY MUCH ALIVE.

Both as a realty seller and as a theatrical promoter, Stanley V. Mastbaum of the real estate firm of Mastbaum Brothers & Fleisher, and managing director of the Stanley Company, which controls a large list of photo-play and other theaters in the eastern territory, has often been referred to as a "live wire" and he has on quite as numerous occasions given proof positive that he was far from being a "dead one." Realization of this fact did not prevent the Philadelphia Press from publishing a laudatory notice devoted to Mr. Mastbaum under the heading of "obituary," and of all days selected to publish same, selected the day of Independence. The article in question should have appeared in a column devoted to Popular Pennsylvanians. The transposition was so regrettable that further explanation is unnecessary beyond the making of this statement—that if Philadelphia were possessed of more "dead ones" of the calibre of Stanley V. Mastbaum, it would be a much livlier and a more prosperous city than some people claim it to be.

Universal's New Director

Henry McRae, Producer of Famous Animal Pictures Now Director-General of Universal's Western Studios.

HENRY McRAE, who has just been appointed to the new position of director-general of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by President Carl Laemmle, has had a wide experience, both with the speaking stage and the silent drama.

It was the Bard of Avon who said that "one man in his time plays many parts," and Mr. McRae is one of those men, for in his varied experience in the theatrical business he has been property man, stage carpenter, stage manager, advance agent, actor, business manager, producer and owner of stock and road companies.

"There is no such thing as fail" in anything the new director-general of the Universal Company undertakes and where others have met with ill fortune in taking dramatic companies to the Orient Mr. McRae's ventures in the vast empire across the Pacific proved eminently successful. This success has followed him in the picture game, which he entered some four years ago.

Henry McRae.

Three years ago Mr. McRae became a director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, taking charge of the 101-Bison Company, whose pictures have been among the best sellers produced for the screen and have become famous not alone in this country but in Europe, where, before the outbreak of the war the demand for the Bison pictures had largely increased. Among a few of the notable animal photoplays produced by Director-General McRae are the following: "The Iron Trail," "In the Wilds of Africa," "The Girl and the Tiger," "The War of the Wild," and "The Daughter of the Jungle."

Discussing his appointment to the position of director-general of the Universal Company's Pacific Coast studios, Mr. McRae said: "It came to me as a pleasant surprise. I had worked conscientiously for the company, not with a view to advancement, but expressly for the purpose of producing pictures that would be recognized by the public and meet the approval of the company. I have enjoyed the work at all times. My surroundings have always been agreeable and the people who have been members of my company have been willing and helpful workers. I have had splendid cooperation from all sides and the result has been pictures which have been profitable to the institution.

"I love to work—don't know anything about a timepiece, never had any hours, and as for meals—well, they have been forgotten time and again. As long as the work was important and continuous action was necessary, sleep and meals were out of the question. So, when on Saturday night my check was handed to me I took it feeling that I had earned it.

"My ambition in occupying the position of director-general of this institution will be to materially help the directors. Having been a director so long myself I think I can safely say that I know the requirements of the director and will be able to establish a system whereby the product of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will be greatly increased. The company has the most complete plant in the world, and with the wonderful equipment available we will be able to make the greatest feature films that ever have been produced for the screen."

Director-General McRae lives in a beautiful bungalow in Hollywood with his wife and little son. Mrs. McRae is a very pretty woman of charming personality. She was married to her talented husband eight years ago in Yonkers, N. Y., at which time as Margaret Oswald she was the leading woman of his company.

Las Vegas' Welcome to Mix

Selig's Famous Cowboy Actor Gets a Glad Welcome from Range Riders.

IT'S NOW "Tom Mix of Las Vegas." The New Mexico city received Selig's doughty son of the range like a returned native son. It is doubtful if ever a motion picture company, or any other kind of a company, received the welcome the Selig cowboy actor and his company did when they arrived at Las Vegas. Fully 3,000 people gathered at the station to do homage and say "Howdy" to Mix and his family. A brass band—yea, the Silver Cornet band—blared forth "Hail to the Chief" and 100 genuine, honest-to-goodness mounted cowboys gave Tom a yell of welcome he will never forget.

As a matter of fact, Tom just stood stock still and grinned like a delighted school boy. Then all at once the Selig star was seen to break away from reception committee, escort, et al, and make one dive into the midst of the cowboys—he had discovered an old crony with whom he used to work on the range. Followed a back-slapping and talk-swapping, while the crowd smilingly looked on.

Into the auto again, Tom was called on for a speech. He told the Las Vegans that he and his company were "just plain home folks and wanted to be treated as such." "All right, Tom," yelled back the crowd; "we're with you"—and they meant it. The parade through the streets was one triumphal reception. All along the route Mix was forced to doff his hat and smile back his "Howdy."

Tom Mix has been in Las Vegas less than a week and already there is hardly a man he has met but what he is calling them by their first names and they him. The studio of the Selig Company is situated in an attractive part of the city. The company has taken over a large three-story stone residence where are located the make-up rooms, dark room, office, etc. There is an outdoor stage 40 by 40 feet and a row of property rooms covering a space 14 by 70 feet. Ample stables and corrals have been built for the classy actor horses. By this time Tom Mix and his company will be all "set" and "raring to go."

A roster of the Las Vegas company follows: Tom Mix, manager, director and leads; Victoria Ford, formerly of the Universal Film Company, leads; Howard Farrell, secretary and assistant; Leo D. Maloney, formerly of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" Company; Sid Jordan, Lewis Ostland, Cameraman; Hazel Page, characters; Pat Field, Pat Chrisman. Joseph Simpkins, Dick Hunter and Bob Anderson.

NEW THEATER FOR HOBART, IND.

H. T. Coons of Hobart, Ind., has recently opened his new theater, The Gem. This structure represents an investment of $10,000. There are 400 comfortable seats in the auditorium, and a part of the theater up-to-date equipment are two Simplex projectors. Hobart has a population of 2,500. The prices of admission range from 5 to 15 cents, depending entirely upon the kind of production. An outline of the brand of pictures making up each week's program is here given. On Mondays Mr. Coons gives four reels of Mutual pictures; on Tuesdays "Famous Players" features are shown; on Wednesdays and Thursdays four reels of the Mutual program; on Fridays is booked Mutual Masterpictures; on Saturdays five reels of Mutual, and on Sundays three reels of Mutual and "The Diamond from the Sky" serial constitute the entertainment.

MUSIC FOR "MIDNIGHT AT MAXIM'S."

The Kalem Company has published an elaborate piano score for its latest feature production, "Midnight at Maxim's, written by Walter C. Simon. This score consists of thirty-eight pages of music so written that any player can follow it with greatest ease. It is being sold for the extremely low price of 50 cents per copy.

HESSER RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Edwin B. Hesser of the Hesser Motion Picture Corporation, which operates studios at Atlanta, Ga., has taken offices in the Broadway theater building, 1441 Broadway, New York, and is preparing to put out the features produced by his company on state right basis. He will make an announcement later.

NEW THEATER FOR PHILLIPSBURG, N. J.

The Phillipsburg Amusement Co. of Phillipsburg, N. J., has started the erection of a picture theater in that city. This new house will represent an investment of $12,000. The approximate date for completion and opening is Sept. 4. James A. Tirrell is to be the manager.

President Freuler Says:

"Regular Program Is Firm Rock of Motion Picture Business." —Will Stick Close to It.

JOHN R. FREULER, whose achievements as a builder of motion picture programs is a record of unbroken successes, and who therefore speaks as a practical authority, hails the regular program as the absolute salvation of the film business.

At the offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, of which he is now the president and general manager, Mr. Freuler discussed the present film situation as follows:

"Speaking both as an exhibitor and as president of the Mutual I see no cause for unrest in the minds of the motion picture exhibitors. As a matter of fact, the great big firm rock of the motion picture business is the regular program. It was on the regular program that the great business was built, and it is on this foundation that it will continue to be profitable. The explanation is simple and plain. Motion pictures are the amusement of the masses who require a pleasant, exciting or entertaining diversion at a cost within the reach of their pocket books. This is legitimately provided by the regular program at a price the great masses can pay. So long as motion pictures continue to stick to the fields that they have made for themselves they will flourish and be profitable.

"In sticking close to the regular program the exhibitor has both feet firmly on the foundation of the motion picture business. Do not misunderstand me. I am not belittling feature pictures. They are admirable additions to the regular program, and they are business bringers when they are good and when they are properly used. But the line of assured development and positive profit lies with the betterment of the regular program of one and two reel subjects.

"As far as the Mutual Film Corporation is concerned no secret need be made about what it proposes to do. It will continue to supply its exhibitors with pictures of a quality equal to the best feature pictures, and in addition to the brands now being shown it will add, and make a part of its regular program, pictures distinctly novel and entertaining. One specific instance is a series of comedies with a comedian that will be the sensation of the year. Special attention is being given to the comedy element of the program, and arrangements have been completed so that we can definitely promise an even better program than ever before.

"The shorter pictures of quality are what the masses have demonstrated by continued patronage that they want. A ready example may be found in the brilliant short story as against the long novel. The pictures we have arranged for, and which I have personally seen, are supreme in plot, action, photography and interest, and are fully up to the best of the longer subjects on the market.

"The exhibitor, who is deceived by those who would lure him away from his affiliation with a profitable program, should think twice before he decides to forsake a profitable certainty for a 'pot of gold' at the end of a rainbow. I do not think it is too much to say, right now, that the Mutual program is the Gibraltar of the motion picture situation."

Equitable Starts Producing

Features of New $3,000,000 Corporation to Be Distributed Through World Film.

WITH a capital of $3,000,000, underwritten by the well known financial house of Ladenburg, Thalman & Co., Broad Street, New York City, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation has commenced the production of feature films for the United States and foreign markets.

The offices of the Equitable are at the Leavitt Building, 130 West 46th street, New York. The principal officials of the new corporation are: President, A. H. Spiegel, who is president of the Spiegel-May-Stern Co., of Chicago; Vice President, Lewis J. Selznick, of the World Film Corporation; Secretary and General Manager, Felix F. Feist, who has been President and General Manager of the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago; Technical Director, Isadore Bernstein, for two years manager of the manufacturing department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The Equitable has entered into a contract with the World Film Corporation whereby the latter will arrange for the distribution and exhibition throughout the United States and Canada of pictures controlled by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, thereby giving the World two features and two comedies a week, which opens the way for the World to release eventually a large number of features on their schedule.

Taggart in Kleine's "Woman Next Door"

BEN L. TAGGART, who has been selected to play opposite Irene Fenwick in George Kleine's film version of Owen Davis's "The Woman Next Door," enjoys the distinction of being one of the youngest veterans of the Boer War. He was born at Ottawa, Canada, twenty-six years ago, and was only fifteen years of age when England called upon the Dominion for aid in the conquest of the South African republics. Carried away by boyish ardor and thirst for adventure, young Taggart disregarded the advice of relatives and friends and enlisted as a private in the Strathcona Horse, the crack cavalry regiment of the Canadian Boer War contingent. He served two years in this historic struggle and took part in the severest of the South African campaigns. Mr. Taggart still bears several scars which remind him of the Boer marksmen's accuracy with the rifle.

Ben L. Taggart.

Upon returning to the American continent, Mr. Taggart turned from the real heroics of active army service to the mock heroics of the stage. His first important engagement was with General Lew Wallace's famous play, "The Prince of India," after which he played leads for seven years in stock. He was quick to recognize the advantage of the silent drama over the speaking stage, and soon turned to the former as the ideal medium of artistic expression. He proved his metal in many highly successful photoplays, among the best known of which were the screen versions of "Brown of Harvard" and "The Law of the North." As Tom Grayson, the fighting hero of "The Woman Next Door," Mr. Taggart has a part unusually well suited to his talents and personality. Those who have watched the making of the film consider his work one of the strongest elements of this splendid Kleine feature.

NEW YORK SIGNS MARY BOLAND.

Miss Mary Boland, for many years leading lady with John Drew in the Frohman attractions, has signed a contract to appear before the camera for the New York Motion Picture Corporation for an unlimited engagement. She will work under the personal direction of Thos. H. Ince, the director-general. She leaves for the California studios at Santa Monica the early part of next week.

Miss Boland is considered one of the most beautiful women on the American stage and was selected by Mr. Joe Brooks and starred by him in last season's success, "My Lady's Dress." She is a woman of exceptional talents, being a very good horsewoman and possibly one of the best women golf players in the United States.

It is hardly likely that she will be lonesome there for at the New York Motion Picture and Keystone studios now working in pictures are: Wm. S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale, Willard Mack, Forrest Winant, H. B. Warner, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Henry Woodruff, Orrin Johnson, Jane Grey, Frank Keenan, House Peters, Louise Dresser, Maurice FauKoe, Wm. Desmond, Weber & Fields, Raymond Hitchcock, Hale Hamilton, Bert Clarke, Eddie Foy, Sam Bernard.

KALEM TO SHOW PICTURES IN SING SING.

The fame of Kalem's big four-reel cabaret picture, "Midnight at Maxim's," has penetrated to the far corners of the earth—even to George W. Thompson, chairman of the entertainment committee, Sing Sing Prison, and we learn that this spectacular four-reel feature will be run at Sing Sing prison for the entertainment of the prisoners. Thus does Warden Osborne recognize the necessity of motion pictures to further his uplift movement at the great New York state prison.

Three New Edison Directors

Harry Beaumont, Carlton King and E. C. Taylor are Advanced to Responsible Positions.

AS A REWARD for being identified as an actor with many of the most successful Edison productions and evidence of technique grasp and ability in the writing of a number of comedies and dramas which have gone well, Harry Beaumont has been made an Edison director after the showing of his productions, "For His Mother," and his own play, "The Bedouin's Sacrifice," proved with emphasis that he merited the advancement. Mr. Beaumont is well grounded in stage and screen craft, acquired in a varied and long career in both, for one yet near the quarter century mark. He was always from "Missouri" because he couldn't help it, being born there, but his success since has been proof of the result of the "show me" attitude in delivering the goods always. The theatrical bias early reared its head, in his working after school in the business end of a local theater in St. Joseph, and he was soon leaving in a repertoire company. After a season he "opened on Broadway" in vaudeville in the then Proctor's theater at 28th street. He stayed in vaudeville for two years, having his own acts, which he also wrote, and again went into repertoire and later spent one year in the western company of "Under Southern Skies." Then came one year in "The County Chairman," two years with the A. H. Woods' productions, another year in vaudeville, a season with David Higgins' "His Last Dollar," and in stock in Hamilton, Ont., Brooklyn, and Atlanta, Ga.

Harry Beaumont.

Mr. Beaumont played his first role in motion pictures with the Vitagraph, staying but one month. After another vaudeville appearance he permanently joined Edison where he has been about four years, playing juveniles and heavies, notably the heavy in "The Stoning." some other films in which Mr. Beaumont has been well liked are "The Librarian," "The American King," "The Witness to the Will," "Her Husband's Son," "That Heavenly Cook," and "In Spite of All."

Carlton King.

With the appointment to directorship of Mr. Beaumont were also that of Carlton King who is now producing one of Mary Rider's stories in which Miriam Nesbitt has been featured, and of Edward C. Taylor from stagemanagership. Mr. King is one of the most versatile actors on the screen, for though he earned his reputation on the stage as a featured singing comedian, he has been uncommonly successful in playing serious and eccentric character roles and heavies, his most recent and one of his best characterizations being the religious fanatic in the feature, "The Working of a Miracle." His art at make-up is well known. Mr. Taylor, though but a comparatively short time at stagemanagership, made a distinct impression in designing unique, historically accurate and architecturally beautiful sets and effects. Previously he was an artist and spent some time with the Kalem and Lubin companies as a player. Another advancement is that of Bernard Durning from assistant stage manager to stagemanagership, recently an assistant director to Director John Collins.

Florence Crawford

FLORENCE CRAWFORD, one of the recent recruits to the Universal banner, is an ardent advocate of outdoor sports for women. In California, she seldom missed a day of horseback riding and her clever work in the Majestic-Reliance pictures often included feats on horseback that the ordinary woman could not attempt. Not that Miss Crawford is a "trick rider," simply an exceptionally good one, and one who is fearless as well. Next to riding, she loves swimming and was called upon in her last Mutual picture, "Buried Treasures," to show what she could do. The rocky coast along the Pacific is not exactly a pleasant place to walk barefoot, and while part of the work was enjoyable, Miss Crawford admits that the "walking" part was not! From leading woman in Western dramas to society parts at the Imp Universal, is quite a step—but the novel experience is being enjoyed. Possibly there will be opportunity provided in the Eastern setting for some of the Pacific Coast work that made her work so different from the usual style of "Wild West" heroines. In "Copper," her first Universal picture, released July 9th, Miss Crawford has the part of a society lady; her other pictures show different characterizations, and one particular one, now being made, gives her exceptional opportunities.

Florence Crawford.

LANGAN REALIZES ON ALL STAR PRODUCTIONS.

A. C. Langan, president of the Sun Photoplay Company, Inc., was appointed agent for the All Star Feature Corporation in April by the trustee in bankruptcy. Mr. Langan, who is comparatively well know to the trade, deserves a lot of credit for the able manner in which he has taken care of the affairs of the All Star. He had disposed of nearly all the productions of the All Star selling World's rights. His latest sale was the "Garden of Lies," featuring Jane Cowl, which was purchased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for a large amount of money. The Sun Photoplay Company, Inc., has now purchased the American rights to the "Princess of India," a really wonderful picture made by the Gloria Film Company of Italy and is now disposing of it on the state right plan.

PATHE NEW YORK EXCHANGE FORMS SOCIAL CLUB.

The employees of the Pathe Twenty-third Street Exchange in New York got together last week and formed a social club with the idea of having an occasional outing and good time together. The following officers were elected: Jules Burnstein, president; C. J. Fitch, secretary; Miss Marion Luhrs, treasurer, and A. A. Corn, chairman of the entertainment committee.

NEW MINA SALES MANAGER.

D. W. Russell, well known in motion picture circles in the West, where for some time he represented MinA Films, with headquarters in Chicago, has been appointed general sales manager and is now at the Eastern offices of this brand. He assumed charge of his new duties last Monday.

Robert Conness

By Thornton Fisher.

HE ISN'T a lawyer. He isn't a doctor, nor a minister and yet meeting the gentleman you would perhaps erroneously guess that he was a member of any one of those professions.

Doubtless, Bob Conness, of Edison, could have filled them worthily had he so desired—and incidentally the pictures would have lost one of its most delightful players. But let's get down to tacks. I have endeavored to describe your first impression of Mr. Conness, for unless you were acquainted with him it would be hard to discover his profession. But for those of us who know him and have followed his work in the pictures he is conspicuously pre-eminent as a finished actor. And when I say "finished actor" I do not mean he is through, for Bob Conness is just coming into his own, though for many years the speaking stage has known him well. During the past years Mr. Conness has played in support of Francis Wilson, Mary Mannering, Blanche Walsh, and with others whose names are distinguished in America's drama. However, where the stage has played to the thousands the pictures are playing to the millions and blessed be he who has gained the plaudits of that host of insatiable picture fans.

In this respect Bob Conness has gone over "big." Bob will not admit it, at least no one ever heard him boast of it—he's a modest chap, is Bob.

I went up to "interview" friend Conness the other evening, but shucks, how can you interview a man who talks about politics, the weather and a hundred other irrelevant subjects. So it wasn't an interview after all.

Well, any way—one day back in eighteen hundred and dash in the little white farm house that stood on the bank of the Vermillion River up in La Salle County, Illinois, Bob Conness was born. His father was a farmer and there amid the rural beauty Conness spent the days of his infancy. But the family did not remain long in the country and by the time young Robert reached the pin eating age the folks moved to Kansas City.

Bob spent his boyhood and youth in that town and went to school there; in fact, he got one foot on the dramatic band wagon at school when he was a lad of seven.

In a class play his brother was cast as a deaf mute, but just before he ascended the platform, was suddenly taken ill and little Bob, who had absorbed the rehearsals, volunteered to see the thing through and played his brother's part. On that platform Conness decided to hit the theatrical trail. He became one of the best amateur actors in the city and when he left school went down town and began his theatrical career—ushering in a Kansas City theater where night after night the boy studied the work of the leading actors of the time, Mansfield, Mantell, Drew and the rest of them. He learned how to graciously bow himself out of the room without knocking over a vase or tripping over a carpet design. He learned the prevailing methods of expediously disposing of the villain and kindred tricks of the profession. However, warm as his affection was for the stage at the time the wages of the most ambitious usher was not likely to land him in the "blue book" and a youthful hunger for an occasional dessert led him to quit the ushering business and he went to work for the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad, where later he became private secretary to the president.

In the meantime he continued his amateur acting and then the big day came—he joined a regular company, and—made good. He was destined, however, to return a few years later to his old home town and play the lead in stock.

It was only a few years ago and in the most casual manner that Mr. Conness discovered from whom he inherited his dramatic spark. He had made a purchase in one of New York's large department stores and requested that the article be sent to his home. An old salesman behind the counter who had waited upon him asked the name. "Conness," replied the actor. The old man, suddenly leaned across the counter and eyeing Mr. Conness intently said: "It could not be possible that you are related to the late John Conness who was once United States Senator from California?"

"Yes," responded the amazed actor, "he was my grand uncle."

"Well," said the old fellow, "I have travelled many, many miles to hear that man make a speech." For Senator Conness was one of the silver-throated orators of the old political school, dramatic to a degree.

There is no question therefore why the younger Conness has achieved distinction in the spoken as well as the unspoken drama. He possesses a personal magnetism—that oft abused phrase—and a speaking voice of rare quality. No, it is no wonder Bob Conness is a star.

FRED JACKSON TO WRITE FOR PATHE.

Pathe has contracted with Fred Jackson, author of the New York dramatic success, 'A Full House," to write a series of twelve stories called "The Younger Sons," which will be put into feature films of four or five reels each. This is in accordance with the Pathe policy of securing the highest priced and best known authors for the writing of scenarios.

"The Younger Sons" will be full of stirring adventure and relate the experiences of the members of an English club called by that name, all of whom are the younger sons of English noblemen, and who by reason of a strange agreement must seek adventure where it may be found. Such stories should provide a mine of photoplay material of the best sort.

ANOTHER BIG STAR FOR PATHE.

Melville Stewart has been engaged to appear in Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper," to be produced by Donald Mackenzie for Pathe. Melville Stewart has probably created and sung more leading roles in Broadway musical successes than any other man. Mr. Stewart is also well known as an impersonator, having recently had a considerable engagement at the Winter Garden, and now "doing" Belasco and the German Kaiser with Ziegfeld's Follies.

The previous two seasons he was leading man with Trentini in "The Firefly." In addition to his splendid voice Mr. Stewart has fine dramatic talent, and Mr. Mackenzie promises great things of him in "The Galloper."

SAN FRANCISCO CONVENTION OPENS.

Mayor Rolfe Welcomed the Visiting Delegates—President Pearce for the League Spoke of Reconstruction—Other Speakers Heard—Good Showing by Manufacturers.

(Special to the Moving Picture World.)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 13.—The Fifth Annual Convention and Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America was formally opened this morning in the big Civic Auditorium. There was not a large attendance of delegates when M. E. Cory, second vice-president, introduced Mayor Rolph, who formally welcomed the picture men to the city by the Golden Gate. On the platform were President Marion S. Pearce, of Baltimore; Treasurer Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit, and A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, of the Executive Committee.

President Pearce in a brief speech expressed his gratification for the hearty welcome that had been extended by the local picture men to the visiting delegates. "At this convention we hope so to reconstruct and rebuild as to put the organization on a basis where it belongs," he said. Other speakers were Treasurer Jeup, who expressed the opinion the convention would be a success; Fred J. Herrington of Pennsylvania; Mr. Tugwell, President H. L. Beach of the California exhibitors and Jacob W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship. Mr. Cory made the announcements for the week.

There was no afternoon session. Out in front of the big Auditorium the Universal took motion pictures of the officers and of the delegates. The Universal also was the first company to exhibit one of its subjects in the Little Theater which, by the way, has been divided into three projection rooms. Six machines are in operation in pairs, the Power, Simplex and Motiograph companies being equally represented.

There is a goodly representation of manufacturers and supply men in the exposition hall on the third floor. Many of the booths are tastily decorated. One of the most striking of these is the group represented on the Paramount Program. The booth was designed by Wilfred Buckland, the technical director of the Lasky Company.

The American Photo Player Co. is represented by A. L. Abrams, president American Photo Player Sales Company. Percy Young is in charge of the booth of the Art Slide Company. W. L. Stern is at the head of the forces of G. A. Metcalfe, displaying Baird, Power and Simplex machines and supplies and accessories. Robert W. Kiewert, assisted by R. E. Martinez, is showing Bio Carbons to exhibitors.

George Breck has in his booth the only specimen of the new Edison machine which escaped the recent factory fire at Orange. He has already sold one machine the purchaser agreeing to pay whatever price that may be put on the projector by the maker. H. Paulies, manager of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, is showing the Gold King screen. Haywood Bros. and Wakefield show a line of theater chairs. Edward H. Kemp is in charge of the Motiograph booth, where in the large display is the new mechanism now being shown for the first time. The Nicholas Power Company's booth is in charge of R. W. Horn, who is dividing his time between the exposition grounds and the picture men's show. Fred A. Clark, at the head of Simplex forces at the big show by the bay, also is in charge of his company's booth. W. G. Preddy is showing the Feaster feed film machine.

In the group of booths occupied by the Paramount companies—Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco, and Imperial,—Herman Wobber of the local Paramount office is aided by Kenneth McGaffy of the Lasky Company. Harry Reichenbach and E. M. Asher are at the Metro booth. The Pathe-Balboa is represented by Harry Oviatt, H. L. Knappan and F. Rodriguez.

The new Sennett, Ince and Griffith combination is represented by Kenneth O'Hara, E. W. Hewston and Bennie Zeidman. Jos. J. Dietch represents World Film. David Horsley was unable to attend the exposition, due to his unexpected departure for the East, but he called on his friend Ernest Shipman, who temporarily is representing him.

At the Universal Booth are M. L. Markowitz, Abe Markowitz and W. A. Cory of San Francisco, and D. S. Markowitz of Los Angeles, as well as M. G. Jonas, publicity manager at Universal City. The Committee has provided booths for the trade press.

BLAISDELL.

SECOND DAY'S SESSION—JULY 14.

Wednesday morning's session opened practically on time and was marked by a gratifying increase in attendance. President Pearce announced his committees, and speeches were made by W. W. Hodkinson, Jacob W. Binder, Judge Tugwell, Fred J. Herrington and W. A. Cory.

In the afternoon the California State League held its fourth annual convention, President H. L. Beach presiding. The following officers for the coming year were elected: President, A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles; vice-president, H. C. Schmidt, of Palo Alto; secretary, J. S. Ludtig, of Los Angeles; treasurer, C. L. Mehrten, of Berkeley; sergeant-at-arms, A. Goldberg, of San Francisco; national vice-president, H. L. Beach, of San Francisco. Los Angeles was selected as the place for the next state convention and an exposition will be held at the same time.

It is forecast that President Pearce will not stand for re-election and that his successor is likely to be Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, Pa.

NEW YORK EXHIBITOR'S BIG OUTING.

Field Day at Brighton Beach Being Planned by New York Local Number 1—A Big Semi-Trade, Semi-Public Affair That Should Be a Success.

AS AN annual midsummer event, to alternate with the usual ball given by the New York Branch of the M. P. E. L., it was decided at a meeting held July 12th at the League rooms that beginning this year and hereafter an outing and field day would be a regular fixture on the calendar of the Association. Arrangements have already gone far enough that the date may be announced as Saturday, August 21, and the place will be the Brighton Beach Race Track.

There have been several meetings of the League members in regard to the field day matter, and at a previous meeting it was decided to call ex-president Sam H. Trigger from his retirement and request that he take charge of the arrangements. Without reserve and with absolutely no conditions the entire affair is placed in Mr. Trigger's hands to conduct as he sees fit. Their faith in Mr. Trigger is such that the New York exhibitors feel safe in entrusting the entire matter to his direction.

The program for the day has been arranged in a tentative way. The schedule calls for ocean bathing at Brighton Beach from ten a. m. until one. After that there will be a parade of the film trade from Coney Island to the Brighton Beach Race Track. At 2:30 the field sports and carnival at the track will begin, continuing until 5:30 p. m. From 6.30 until 8 p. m. a shore dinner will be held at the Brighton Beach Hotel. This dinner will be presided over by a man prominent in the photoplay profession whose name will be announced later. The Brighton Beach dance hall will be ready for dancers at 7 p. m. and the dancing will continue until midnight. There will be a big dancing contest for photoplayers only and another for the public.

Mr. Trigger requests that all photoplayers desiring to participate in the various events will kindly send their names to him at the League rooms in the World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th street, New York. Any suggestions for a novel contest between photoplayers will be gladly received. If everyone in the trade cooperates, this should be one of the greatest minglings of the trade and public that has ever been staged.

There is opportunity in this field day idea for a large financial success for the Exhibitors' League by reason of the interest that can be worked up in such a proceeding. The photoplay fraternity will be represented in large numbers and will take part in many of the events. The scheme is rich in possibilities for things that have never been done before.

YONKERS EXHIBITORS WIN.

Court Knocks Out the New Ordinance Against Sunday Exhibitions.

By W. Stephen Bush.

HOLDING that the Sunday closing ordinance passed by the Yonkers Board of Aldermen is invalid, Judge Beall of the City Court of Yonkers, has handed down a decision dismissing the charge against one of Yonkers best known and most popular exhibitors, George A. Martin, of 41 Riverdale avenue, Yonkers.

The court holds that under the decision in the case of Wolden T. Kiely of this city, in which it was declared by the entire appellate division court that "the power to legislate as to Sunday observance is the function of the legislature and cannot be considered to have been delegated to the common council, unless by specific enactment," definitely denies the right of the Yonkers board of aldermen to regulate Sunday performances.

In answer to the contention that the council has the power to stop Sunday shows by refusing to license them the court holds that under a decision by Justice Cuthbert Pound in the Niagara county supreme court, rendered June 1, there is no difference between "the inherent power of the city to prohibit Sunday shows by ordinance and the inherent power of the mayor to prohibit them by the conditions of a license." He, therefore, holds that when the court of appeals decided the Kiely case it settled definitely the question of Sunday moving picture performances in Yonkers.

The Court makes short work of the attempt on the part of the Aldermen to avoid the consequences of the decision of the Court of Appeals by trickery and indirection. The text of the decision covering this aspect of the case is as follows:

> "What the common council could not do directly it cannot do by indirection in requiring a license to include a provision against Sunday plays. This seems to me too obvious to require argument even with a layman. But I am saved from the necessity of deciding this question by the decision of Mr. Justice Pound in the case of Klinger vs. Ryan, in which he says: 'I am unable to distinguish between the inherent power of the city to prohibit Sunday shows by ordinance and the inherent power of the mayor to prohibit them by the conditions of a license. The legislature alone may command how Sunday may be kept, and it has not delegated the power to the mayor of North Tonawanda, by giving to that official the mere general power to license entertainments.'
> "The legislature, it has been held by these decisions of the appellate division and of the court of appeals, has not given to the city of Yonkers through its common council the power to regulate Sunday observance, nor can that council delegate to the mayor by prescribing the form of license, "a power which it does not itself possess."

The organized exhibitors of Yonkers had been confident of ultimate victory, but they had anticipated a long, arduous and expensive course of litigation. With such a decisive turn in their favor at the very outset of their fight, they are highly pleased. The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a letter from the Yonkers exhibitors making grateful mention of the aid given by the paper. The greatest credit for the victory, however, belongs to the exhibitors themselves and to their capable and aggressive legal representative, John J. Finn, of the law firm of Finn & Nolan.

The decision of Judge Beall, which is of course in strict consonance with the doctrine laid down by the late Justice Gaynor and affirmed by the Court of Appeals, must serve warning on all the police officials and local authorities who make an attempt to interfere with the Sunday opening of motion picture theaters anywhere within the limits of the State of New York. As Supreme Justice Pound has pointed out that police authorities who try to enforce invalid ordinances of local authorities are not only liable for damages in the civil courts, but they likewise expose themselves to criminal prosecution. Unwarranted arbitrary interference by the police constitutes oppression and subjects the offender to both fine and imprisonment.

Philadelphia Exchangemen Organize

Form Film Exchange Club to Improve Social Relations and to Promote Better Business Conditions—Officers Elected.

THE definite formation of and working plans for the Film Exchange Club of Philadelphia, which organization had its inception at a dinner given recently in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel by members of the various film exchanges in the city for just this purpose, were completed at a meeting of the club's members held Thursday, July 8, in the offices of the Interstate Films Company, at 1304 Vine street. Eleven of the leading exchanges in the Quaker City are already listed as members, while many others have signified their intentions of joining the organization immediately.

The Film Exchange Club of Philadelphia was devised by its founders along such lines as would tend to strengthen the social relations of the individual film men with each other, and to bring about a general betterment of the business conditions and practices current in this branch of the industry. Not only is it intended to do this in Philadelphia, but in the entire country, as it is planned to make the Philadelphia club such a strong basic factor in the promotion of the film exchange business of Pennsylvania, that the importance of the good to be derived from such social organization will impress itself so strongly upon the minds of exchange men of other cities that similar clubs will be organized where possible.

A full quota of the local exchange men were in attendance at Thursday's meeting and much enthusiasm was manifested by everyone present in the various topics which were brought up for consideration. An unprecedented feeling of goodfellowship reigned as the predominating spirit throughout the course of the business and social sessions, and during the election of officers which was held with the following results: G. J. Beihoff, of the World Film Corporation, 1314 Vine street, president; H. S. Schable, of the Electric Theater Supply Co., Inc., 1224 Vine street, vice president; H. Gibbons, of the Paramount Picture Service, 1321 Vine street, secretary, and G. W. Bennethum, of the Interstate Films Co., 1304 Vine street, treasurer. A Board of Directors was then elected as follows: J. Butler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, 902 Filbert street; J. Hebrews, of the V-L-S-E, Inc., 229 N. Twelfth street, and V. R. Carrick, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., 225 N. Thirteenth street.

The Film Exchange Club will hold a regular social meeting every Thursday and, according to the plans mapped out for these occasions, everything will be done that it will be possible to do to bring the members closer to each other, while things designed for the bettering of conditions in the film business throughout the State will be introduced and discussed from time to time. General headquarters and the club rooms of the new body will be established in the new buildings of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, at 225 N. Thirteenth street, during the course of the next several days as the treasury already has a sufficient sum of money on deposit to proceed with the work as provided for in the constitution and by-laws.

PATHE TAKES MITTENTHAL PICTURES.

Mittenthal Bros., manufacturers of the famous Starlight brand of comedies, have made arrangements with the Pathe Exchange to release two comedies a week. The Pathe Exchange, Inc., feel that the Starlight brand is a valuable addition to their list of releases in view of the fact that they have received several hundred telegrams and letters from exhibitors and exchange men requesting the Mittenthal product.

LUBIN ALUMNI IN TOWN.

Among the visitors at the main office of the Moving Picture World last week were Allen Boone and Shannon Fife, formerly members of the Lubin staff in Philadelphia. Mr. Fife is widely known as a writer of scenarios and has many strong productions to his credit. Mr. Boone has an excellent record as a motion picture publicity man. The honorary degree of "Visiting Fireman" was conferred.

ADOLPH LINK IN A WORLD FILM PRODUCTION.

Adolph Link, for many years one of the best known German actors, and for over a decade the rage of the metropolises of Europe, makes his bow on the screen in the successful World Film drama, "Sunday," recently produced by the George W. Lederer Filmotion Corporation, in which Miss Reine Davies, "The American Beauty of the stage," is being starred.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Illinois State Censor Bill Vetoed.

THE certainty that Governor Dunne would veto the Olson state censor bill, as expressed in the opening article of my last letter, has been sustained; for the Governor vetoed the bill Tuesday afternoon, July 6, while my letter was on its way to New York. The vetoing was announced by Wm. L. Sullivan, the Governor's secretary, shortly after the Governor had acted.

A statement prepared by Governor Dunne and given out to the press read as follows:

"If this bill became a law it would mean double taxation upon those engaged in motion picture business in Chicago. I can find no genuine demand for such a law in this state. In my opinion it is unwise and unnecessary." The Governor also stated that there was no demand for the measure from anyone in downstate territory.

Secretary of State Stevenson gave out that he urged Governor Dunne to veto the bill, notwithstanding that he led the fight for it in the general assembly. He explained his change of mind by saying that he had investigated the Chicago situation and found that double censorship would impose prohibitive expense on the Chicago public, and that the enforcement of the law would be difficult; but his chief reason was stated in my last letter.

It is noteworthy to add that no less than 500 applications for membership in the proposed state board were on file in the office of the Secretary of State when the bill was vetoed by the Governor! And, out of these 500, only one member could have been chosen; for, as explained in my last letter, the appointment of the other two members had already been arranged for.

Is this not proof positive that a state board of censorship is a thing of politics, unless responsible men in the moving picture business have the controlling voice in the selection of the members?

Frohman Versus Frazee.

Harry H. Frazee, part owner of the Cort theater, this city, and engaged in various theatrical enterprises, has issued the edict that hereafter no actor or actress who has ever appeared in moving pictures will be employed by him.

"The 'movies' have ruined more actors than anything else," says Mr. Frazee. "How can you expect the public to pay $2 to see a comedian they have been following in the pictures for 10 cents? It is absurd!

"I find no difficulty in getting players who have not been in pictures. And I want to issue this warning to the men and women of the stage who imagine they are progressing because of the large salaries they earn in the picture field. They are deluding themselves if they ever expect to return to the $2 playhouses. They can't come back. Nothing is truer than the old adage that familiarity breeds contempt. After they have exploited personalities and art until the public knows their every mannerism in the picture houses, who cares to cast them in a play? They are through—that is all. And so I tell all of the young stars who ask my advice about the picture game."

Daniel Frohman, the veteran director of fine stage productions, is not quite in accord with Mr. Frazee, whose early efforts in the dramatic field were devoted to the exploitation of certain small towns in the South and in other out-of-the-way sections by barnstorming monstrosities. That time is not so far distant, and I remember one Mississippi town very distinctly where the return of admissions was demanded at pistol point for one of these Frazee attractions. But, of course, Mr. Frazee had not his name attached to that show. The poor fellow back with it had to stand all the "gaffing."

As I said, Mr. Frohman does not quite agree with Mr. Frazee, and who wonders? Mr. Frohman says:

"As to the motion picture theatres decreasing the value of a legitimate actor or actress for $2 audiences, that is solely a matter of personality, I think. By this I mean that it helps some and hurts others. A young artist with a great future is benefited, while an artist who is getting along in years and whose popularity is waning, anyway, suffers in the legitimate field by working in the films."

All of the young stars who ask Mr. Frazee's advice about the picture game are advised to note that Mr. Frohman says that "a young artist with a great future is benefited."

Chicago Ordinance for Showing Moving Pictures in Any Building Defeated.

A new ordinance drafted to permit the use of non-inflammable educational pictures in places that do not comply with the underwriters' requirements was defeated by a vote of nine to three, by the Chicago council buildings committee last week. The restrictions on the exhibition of moving pictures in churches, schools, halls and department stores have been practically prohibitive up to the present time.

It was through Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, that the new ordinance was framed, as during his studies of anthropology in various parts of the world he had accumulated a valuable collection of moving pictures which he desired permission to show. The Atlas Educational Film Co., of Chicago, has been handling Prof. Starr's moving pictures and the Company had perfected a projecting machine with a patent that competing manufacturers thought gave it the virtual control of the new field, through their misapprehension of one section of the new ordinance.

The buildings committee, however, after defeating the ordinance referred it to a sub-committee for further investigation of the charges that it discriminated in favor of certain manufacturers.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Omar F. Doud, manager of Geo. Kleine's publicity department, will leave for New York City Friday evening, July 16, where he will resume the duties of the department in the offices of the Candler Theater building. Mr. Doud leaves behind him in Chicago many friends, who have become warmly attached to him because of his sterling qualities of heart and mind, and their best wishes follow him. The staff of the Chicago office of the World, particularly, will miss him at the old stand, where he was always courteous, ready and helpful in assisting when his co-operation was needed. I myself feel a personal loss at the break in our association.

Walt Bloeser, on the Chicago Tribune's staff, took unto himself a wife the evening before the Selig Exposition Flyer pulled out of the Northwestern station, and he and his bride were aboard. I must specially commend the courage of Mr. and Mrs. Bloeser in subjecting themselves to the tender mercies of their fellow tourists at such a time, especially as they were unable to travel incognito.

As stated in an article elsewhere in this issue, headed "Kleine-Edison Merger Formed," the executive department of George Kleine will be removed to the New York offices in the Candler Theater building, Friday, July 16, and the business of that department will be conducted henceforth from New York. All the Geo. Kleine feature exchanges will be conducted from those offices. The Chicago office, at 166 N. State street, will still remain the distributing center for films in Middle Western territory, and also headquarters for the Kleine Optical Co.

H. M. Booth, Jr., manager and part owner of the Park theater, Rogers Park, Ill., called at the World office last week. The Park seats 300 people. Programs of six reels of General Film service, World Film Corporation, etc., are furnished at five and ten cents admission. Fifteen cents is charged when Paramount service is used. Such serials as "The Diamond from the Sky" and "The Broken Coin" are being shown to good business. Mr. Booth stated that the Charles Chaplin comedies are in high favor and that "Tillie's Punctured Romance" was shown one day week to the largest crowds he had ever had. Business at the Park theater is very satisfactory.

L. G. Roesner, president and treasurer of the Colonial Amusement Co., Inc., Winona, Minn., called at this office last week. Mr. Roesner was a passenger on the Selig Exposition Flyer Thursday, July 8. The Colonial Amusement Co. owns and operates the Colonial and Princess theaters in Winona, and is planning to build a new house in that town some time during the fall. The new house will seat 1,200, will be thoroughly modern in every detail and will be centrally located in the business district of Winona. The Colonial seats 800, runs selected feature service and charges an admission of five and ten cents. The Princess seats 300, runs Mutual service and has the same admission prices. Mr. Roesner reported excellent business.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rock have been visiting Wm. T. Rock at his summer home, Oyster Bay, L. I., for several weeks. A letter received from John at his office in the Schiller Bldg. states that they will arrive home Tuesday, July 13.

John J. Dailey, assistant manager of the Vitagraph office, Chicago, had the most delightful surprise of his life on July 6 when his wife presented him with a ten-pound baby girl. The new arrival balances the family, as John has a boy about seven years old.

Mrs. M. Henderson, owner and manager of the Parkside theater, 7048 Stony Island, this city, paid us a call last week. Mrs. Henderson has managed this house since last November, and reports fair business. Programs of the General Film Company's regular releases and Paramount features twice weekly, are offered. An admission of 10 cents is charged for seven reels.

Another check for $5,000 was turned over by the Chicago Tribune to Dr. Cyrille Vermeren, Belgian consul in this city, Thursday, July 8. This check is the latest installment from the proceeds of the Tribune Belgian War Pictures. Former installments amounted to $20,543, making in all $25,543. It will be remembered that these war pictures were taken by Edwin F. Weigle, Tribune staff photographer, who is now in the western war zone taking more war pictures. The proceeds from these pictures are divided equally between The Tribune and the Belgian Red Cross.

The Jones, Linick & Schaefer management has made every Friday night a Charlie Chaplin event at the McVickers theater, and an every Monday event at the Colonial.

Frank Freiwald, who recently was appointed operator at the Troy moving picture theater, North Troy Street and Irving Park Boulevard, has been in all kinds of trouble lately. It appears that Robert Eldridge, owner of the house, discharged his brother, Earl Eldridge, and put Freiwald in his place. When Freiwald, Robert Eldridge, Mrs. Eldridge and the girl piano player were on their way home Saturday night, July 10, they were waylaid by one Wm. Houlihan, who knocked down Robert Eldridge with a club. Freiwald shot Houlihan, who is now in the Bridewell hospital. A woman called Mrs. Costello was the cause of the trouble. She was a friend of Earl Eldridge, the discharged operator, and plotted to have Freiwald clubbed and incapacitated for duty, with the hope that Earl Eldridge would be restored to his position. Through a mistake she pointed out Robert Eldridge as the man to Houlihan. Now Mrs. Costello, Earl Eldridge, Freiwald and four other men are being held for trial.

The July number of World's Advance, in its moving picture department, states that a motion picture advertising department has been made a permanent feature of the work of the Chamber of Commerce, Redlands, Cal., which probably is the first city in the world to establish and maintain a department of this character. The experiment was begun about a year ago. At that time a special event held in the city was pictured and exhibited throughout that seciton of the country. The results were so remarkable that the promoters were persuaded to try something in the same line on a larger scale. As a consequence the citrus business, one of the largest industries in Redlands, was photographed from the planting of the trees to the packing and shipping of the ripened fruit. This took about three reels, but it is stated that the returns were more than worth the outlay and effort.

The Harmo Electric Co. of this city advise that their Harmo pipe organ has been installed in the Buckingham, Windsor, Clark and Wilson avenue theaters, this city, within the past three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley are in the city, out in the San Souci Park, on the South Side, fighting unpropitious weather and other difficulties in making "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in films for Universal. Pavlowa, the celebrated classic dancer, was recently engaged by the Universal to play the titular role in the Auber opera, and so the Smalleys, the well known directors, came on from New York to start on the production of the big eight-reel feature. San Souci was formerly a high class amusement park, where men and women sought rest and recreation without crowding and the blare of trumpets; now it is in ruins, for fire blasted it. These ruins made the place fit in exactly with the requirements of "The Dumb Girl of Portici;" hence the coming of Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, her husband, to Chicago.

The convention of Christian Endeavorers in Chicago (just closed at the time of writing), which has been pronounced the largest and best international and world's convention of the kind, among other resolutions passed this one concerning moving pictures: "Recognizing at once the potential value and existing dangers of motion pictures, we favor the pending movement for a federal censorship commission, so much more necessary and easy is prevention than is cure."

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

THE Night of the Wedding" is the feature picture of the program at the Vitagraph Theater this week. Eugene Mullin, the author, has his characters enact the principal scenes in America, but cleverly introduces flashes of Spain, and the hatred of a betrayed Spanish girl. The photoplay, produced under the direction of William Humphrey, is portrayed by Edith Storey, as Helen Carter, a society girl; Antonio Moreno, a clubman and amateur detective; Charles Kent, Louise Baudet, William Dunn, Denton Vane and Caroline Birch. The situations are logical and lead up with increasing dramatic strength to the final climax. Miss Storey and Mr. Moreno lend their art to making the picture one of undivided interest. The rest of the cast is equally competent.

"The Goddess" is still on the Vitagraph program. In Chapter Eleven Celestia continues her work of reformation in one place, while the striking miners are storming the stockade defended by the hirelings of the coal barons. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Paul Scardon are the central figures in the cast. The balance of the program includes three comedies: Anne Schaefer and George Stanley in "What Did He Whisper?" a domestic comedy produced by the western Vitagraph Company; Wally Van, Nitra Frazer and a well selected comedy cast, in "In the Serpent's Tooth"; and Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley in "Mr. Jarr and Circumstantial Evidence," in which Mr. Jarr gets into a peck of trouble through a "grass widow," a saddle horse, a Ford and a camera fiend.

Laura Hope Crews at the Strand.

At the Strand Theater this week Laura Hope Crews made her photo-dramatic debut in "The Fighting Hope," Wm. J. Hurlburt's well-known play, which was produced on the legitimate stage by David Belasco. In addition to Miss Crews, the cast includes George Gebhardt, Gerald Ward, Thomas Meighan, Richard Morris, Florence Smythe, Theodore Roberts, Cleo Ridgley, Tom Forman and Billy Elmer, "The Fighting Hope" has been finely produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Co., and tells the story of a good woman who believes in the innocence of her husband, condemned to prison, and who remains true to him despite the fact that she falls in love with another man.

The third and last of the series of Aylesworth's Big Game Pictures, "The Legend of the Panama Exposition," the first complete views of Panama, and the Exposition; interesting travel and scientific studies; The Strand Topical Review; a new comedy, and the musical numbers, complete the program.

"The Running Fight" at the Broadway.

Violet Heming, in "The Running Fight," an excellent photoplay from the novel by William Hamilton Osborne, leads the bill this week at the Broadway Theater. The picture is a Paramount release. Police Dog Cartoons by Bray, the Broadway Animated News, South American Travel Pictures, and several new comedies are also shown.

Doings at Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES was somewhat deserted this week, for every publicity man, news writer, manager, many prominent directors, a hundred well known stars, and many exhibitors went to San Francisco to attend the big convention of the National Exhibitors' Association. A special train carried the majority north, and a goodly number went by boat. The tourists visited the big exposition and thoroughly enjoyed the trip.

* * *

Next week the exhibitors will be brought to Los Angeles, where they will be royally entertained by a committee of local people. A journey to Inceville, with a beach barbecue, and many other events have been planned for their benefit.

When the Selig special arrived, a committee of Photoplay Author Leaguers entertained the scenario writers, newspaper men and others with a delightful beach picnic, dance and supper on the sands of the Pacific.

One of the Big U companies returning from a trip to the Big Bear lake region reported the thrilling rescue of one of the men. Charles A. Hickman, stage manager, rescued James Wilson, one of the players, from drowning. In one scene Wilson went into the water, and sank. Hickman plunged in and started to save him, but the frenzied actor seized his rescuer around the neck and both would have been drowned if Hickman had not struck Wilson a blow, knocking him out. Hickman was then able to swim ashore with the unfortunate actor, who was soon revived.

This is not a typographical error. "The Straw Man" is being put on at the Mutual studios with Augustus Carney in the title role. He is first a convict and later a scarecrow, and not "The Squaw Man."

He is cheerful and only says, "Wait till I get out; I'm writing a picture a week now and I've got some good ideas." Well, he certainly has time enough to think them up while he lies on a cot in the hospital.

Jane Bernoudy, Universal City's favorite, who rides horses and plays leading comedy parts, is suffering from a bad case of poison oak, contracted while doing a few scenes in the hills back of the city. The poor girl has one eye closed and is, of course, unable to work at present.

At the Lasky studio J. P. McGowan is completing "A Voice in the Fog," with Donald Brian in the leading part. The story is by Harold MacGrath, and should screen well.

Truly Shattuck, Bessie Barriscale and Leona Hutton, the three leading women who are engaged at Inceville, were this week in an automobile smash which came near proving fatal. The players, fortunately, were only shaken up and bruised by the wreck, and were able to return in their car to the beach.

Horkheimer brothers, at their Balboa studios, are working like beavers on their new studio, which is now nearly completed. With the new stage space, dressing rooms and other needed buildings, they will be able to turn out much more film than they did during the past twelve months.

Henry McRae and his Universal players have been working way up the beach this week on some sea stuff. They went beyond Inceville, up to where the mountains meet the sea and found some wonderful locations.

Walter Wright and his company of Keystone actors have been working in Northern California for the past week on scenes for a big comedy. They incidentally (remember, incidentally only) viewed the exposition at San Francisco, and now all the other Sennett directors and players are trying to go north to get scenes in new locations.

Later—Henry McRae has given up his 101 Bison company, for he has been made director general of the Universal's western producing companies. The company has not made any announcement further about the change, or who will take charge of the 101 company.

* * *

William Desmond, known more intimately as "Bill" Desmond, who has been famed far and wide as a legitimate star, has signed up with Thomas H. Ince and is even now at work in the canyon studios of the NYMP. He was lately associated with the Morosco company.

* * *

At the Keystone one can always get a laugh. This week Charlie Murray, who spent the Fourth at San Francisco, handed me a good one. He said that three companies had offered him handsome positions in musical comedy, but "I'd rather stay off the boards when the canvas is so much softer. As long as the trembling tintypes want me I am going to stay with them, anyway I prefer to remain a lens-squirrel in the creeping pastels." Anyone knowing the funny Keystone man will repeat the lines and see the smiling face of Charles.

They are plowing at Universal City. No, the grain is not being sown, nor are they building a plunge. It is the work of a landscape gardener to beautify the several acres around the administration buildings.

There was a twofold purpose in the celebration held on the Fourth at the great Keystone plant. Mack Sennett was celebrating the third anniversary of the plant, for it was three years ago this month that he organized the little company and built the small stage which is now covered by many thousand feet of stage space, glass studios, electric lights, buildings, and everything that is now used to make the great comedies. A large crowd gathered to enjoy the barbecue and day of pleasure.

H. G. Stafford surprised us this week by coming out on the stage with a script in his hand. Not to show it to some director, but to produce it himself. He has certainly graduated from the scenario office. He will put on semi-educational films with transient casts to be fitted to the stories as he does them.

Charles Swickard and his company of Inceville players have come on land again after spending several days at sea on the NYMP barkentine Fremont. He secured some excellent sea pictures for "The Three Musketeers," which he is putting on, with Orrin Johnson starred.

It is stated that D. Wallace Goodrich, formerly of the Commercial Motion Picture Co., Ltd., of London, has just completed three years' trip around the world taking commercial pictures, a number of which were sold to his home government. Mr. Goodrich intends working here and has secured the old Kalem plant, which he will improve. He will also use the adjoining land for the plot of a new and up-to-date plant with laboratory and everything complete for the making of pictures. About ten thousand dollars is to be put into the new plant. The officials have not been announced as yet.

CLARKE IRVINE.

VARIETY STARTS WITH A RUSH.

There is no livelier spot in filmdom than the spacious offices of the Variety Films Corporation, at 126 West 46th street, New York. President Louis Rosenbluh, after making his announcement of the new "Class Film Service" idea has become the Mecca for producers of every kind of film conceivable. He buys most of them after one inspection, closing his deals in record time. It took him just fifteen minutes to buy "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle" and "Unto the Darkness," both wild animal multiple reel dramas. He also secured "Harbour Lights," four reels, and closed a deal for the complete outputs of three other companies, to be announced in detail next week. If his beginning is any criterion, Rosenbluh is going to treat his customers to novelties. He begins by issuing a variety of heralds on features never before seen in motion pictures. The animal pictures carry a herald circular in shape, bearing a huge lion's head with gaping jaws. The naval picture is also heralded with an odd design, that of a lighthouse.

Mr. Rosenbluh is buying as fast as suitable material is shown him; he is now ready with pictures in length from one to six reels, all with special displays and graded in price according to quality, not length.

Ruth Roland

Leading Lady of the Balboa Company and Star of Pathe's "Who Pays?" Series.

IT IS nearly a score of years ago that Ruth Roland first looked out over the footlights at an audience. This statement may be a bit surprising to many admirers of this wholesome young woman, whose speech is as gentle as her handclasp is sturdy. It should be explained, however, that Miss Roland's stage experience began when she was three and a half years old. She was born in San Francisco, and so, of course, she is a native daughter of the Golden West.

We had dropped in on the Balboa star as she was sitting at her dressing table in the studio at Long Beach. She had laid down the pen with which she had been writing, explaining that she was not busy but that she could not bear to be idle. We sat down on the finely polished cedar chest that stood by the door of the cosey little dressing room; on the walls were many photographs of fellow-players. On a table by Miss Roland's side rested a large silver cup. It was inscribed, "Championship Cup—May 5, 1915—Vernon Country Club. Won by Ruth Roland and Julian Eltinge." We were jotting down her initials, and remarked something about two R's. "There are three R's, if you please," said Miss Roland with a laugh. "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion," she added mischievously.

"That was a famous phrase a number of years ago and it figured conspicuously in a Presidential election," said the World man. "There were those who thought it had something to do with the first election of Grover Cleveland."

"I was named after the daughter of President Cleveland," said the actress quickly.

Miss Roland added that she was on the stage until the death of her mother, when the little player was ten years old. The star reached over and picked up from the place of honor on her table the miniature of a striking looking woman, gazed at it a moment and gently replaced it. At the age of fifteen Miss Roland began playing ingenue parts in stock; she has been on the stage or on the screen ever since—on the latter for nearly five years.

"What kind of work do I like best?" replied the player to a question. "Why, dramatic comedy—the nice, refined comedy; where smiles alternate with pathos. It is always so much easier to stir your audience, to reach the hearts of those who are following you, to even bring tears, after you have made them laugh. I think one of the greatest factors in Griffith's success has been his ability to inject into his story the unexpected flashes, the touches of comedy to relieve a tense situation, the bits of pathos that check mirth."

Miss Roland has had all-around experience on the screen. For the first fourteen months of the four years she was with the Kalem she played in dramatic western stories, then branched into western comedies and then into farce comedies, what she described as "rough and tumble." Her last work before going to the Balboa Company, something over a half year ago, was in seven pictures of a detective series. At the Long Beach studio she has played only in straight drama.

The actress admitted that she was lonesome when she first came out to the seashore, twenty odd miles from the city. She had been compelled to break up a home in Hollywood to the making of which she had devoted a lot of attention. She had decided one experience of the sort was sufficient; she had sold her furniture and was living in an apartment.

"Which of my works down here do I like best?" said Miss Roland. "Well, I think 'The Pursuit of Pleasure' and 'Unto Herself Alone' have been most to my liking."

Miss Roland is a lover of athletics. Her associates tell of her skill as a horsewoman and as a swimmer, and she says herself that she swims a lot. She has her own car and drives it much? "Dancing? Yes, I am crazy about it. That cup you are looking at was won by Mr. Eltinge and myself after a real contest.

'Yes, I have hobbies, too. Hats are one of them. No, I can't tell you how many of them I have—more than anyone in the town, I am afraid. I make the most of them myself. The one I wore at the photoplayers' dinner in town the other night? Why, that is a Chinese hat of my own design. An artist friend of mine outlined on it some Chinese characters. Neither of us know what these mean—it may be 'Call for laundry on Tuesday'—but I embroidered the outlines in beads and took a chance.

"No. I have not been in New York since I was a child, but I am going there soon—next year, if not this. I am to have a vacation when the 'Who Pays?" series is finished, and the length of my trip will depend on the time I am able to get away. I must go to San Francisco, where I have been but twice in the nine years since the 'quake. Yes, I may be there during the exhibitors' convention. That would be fine, wouldn't it? You think I would meet a lot of friends? I hope so. My only recollection of New York is as a kiddie, and I want to see it now."

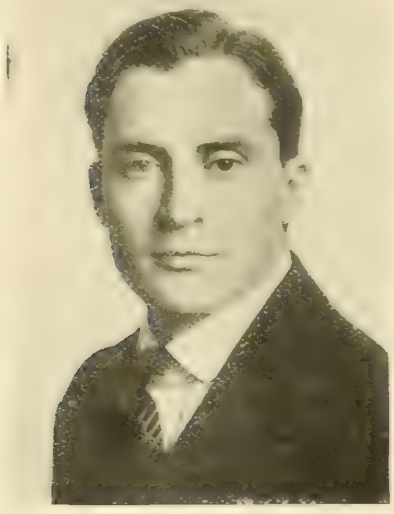
We asked Miss Roland if she had any of her childhood pictures. She brought out two, one as she was when two years old, the other showed her at the age of nine in Chinese costume, worn in her singing specialty of "Mamma's China Twins." In the face of the child easily may be recognized the charming unspoiled young woman of today, of whom it is said she shows to the humblest man on the "lot" the same courtesy she extends to those in official position and who in good works is ever ready to extend a helping but silent hand.

Morosco Signs Juan De La Cruz

THE OLIVER Morosco Photoplay Company announces as its latest capture from the stage Juan de la Cruz of the Royal Opera House of Copenhagen.

Signor de la Cruz brings something more than mere celebrity to the motion picture field. He has had a long and conspicuous success in Wagnerian roles, and his interpretation of these characters has won enthusiastic comment from such severe critics as Siegfried Wagner, son of the great composer, and Hans Richter, one of the greatest of Wagnerian conductors and a friend of the great master.



Juan de la Cruz.

Although never paraded by Signor de la Cruz himself, it is a fact that he is a member of the nobility of Europe and is listed in the Almanach de Gotha as the Count de Morety. Though born in Copenhagen he descends from the old Spanish and Italian family of Morety, from which he inherits his title. His appearances in European theatricals took place chiefly at the Royal Opera, Copenhagen, and the Covent Garden, London, where he received an ovation in such roles as Koenig Heinrich in "Lohengrin," Koenig Marke in "Tristan and Isolde," Landgraf Herman in "Tannhauser" and other parts, although Paris, London, Montreal, Los Angeles and other representative cities all over the world have applauded his performances.

Unsettled conditions in Europe brought Signor de la Cruz to California for what was to have been a complete rest and relaxation, but this has now been interrupted by the persuasive Morosco management. His own enthusiasm over the new art, however, has proved he regards the interruption as welcome and pleasing. It is expected that his initial motion picture work will be presented in "Peer Gynt," the famous drama by Henrik Ibsen in which Cyril Maude also makes his screen bow for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

UNIVERSAL COMPANIES TAKE TO THE HILLS.

The Burton King and Joseph De Grasse Universal companies have left Universal City for the mountain country back of Los Angeles in order to make exterior scenes in Western productions soon to be released.

The Burton King company is in the Bear Lake country, 7000 feet above the sea, making "His Nemesis," by Edward Sloman, and "In the Heart of the Hills," by F. McGrew Willis, of the Western scenario staff. Adele Lane, Edward Sloman and C. E. Bradbury will play the leading roles in both productions.

The Joseph De Grasse-Rex Company is located at Fallow's camp in San Gabriel canyon, where they are at work on a two-reel story by Julius Furthman entitled "Mountain Justice." Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney and Roy McGray appear in the leading roles.

Pathe Holds Convention

Three-day Gathering of Branch Managers to Celebrate $1,000,000 Business of "Elaine."

Pathe held a three day convention in New York, beginning Monday, July 12, attended by all the managers of Pathe Exchanges east of the Rocky Mountains, as well as by the officials of the concern.

The first day was devoted to the new Gold Rooster features and "Neal of the Navy," the coming big serial, followed by a motor car excursion to Brighton Beach in the evening. On Tuesday morning the Pathe program was the subject and the afternoon was devoted to visits to the Pathe studio in Jersey City and the factory at Bound Brook. An informal dinner in New York followed in the evening, after which the six-reel production of "The Beloved Vagabond" was shown, together with "Via Wireless," "The Galloper," "Simon the Jester," and "The Spender," the first of the Gold Rooster Plays.

On Wednesday the Pathe advertising in all its phases of trade papers, the new posters, the new bulletin, etc., came in for some good words and in the afternoon agency accounting was the subject. Wednesday night was the big windup with a banquet at Rector's to celebrate the attaining of $1,000,000 in business on the great Pathe serial "Elaine." The gratification of the Pathe officials is all the more increased at this wonderful showing of "Elaine" since they remembered that "The Perils of Pauline" did its biggest business after the release of the last episode and "Elaine" has still some weeks to run before the last episode will be shown.

Vice President Charles Dupuis and General Manager Louis Gasnier presided at the banquet which was also attended by the various department heads of the home office.

Change in Exhibiting Pictures

Walter W. Irwin of V-L-S-E Says Exhibitors Already Realize Importance of Long Runs and Repeat Bookings.

FROM the reports coming in from its branch managers, the V-L-S-E. states that a decided change in exhibition methods is taking place throughout the entire country.

In the last few months a decided decrease has been noted in the number of one-day bookings of feature productions. The exhibitors even in small towns, with populations ranging from 2,000 to 3,000 are booking strong features for two and three days, while in the larger cities runs of a full week are becoming common occurrences. This does not apply merely to the downtown sections of these cities, but the conditions also exists in the outlaying residential sections.

In practically every city with the exception of New York, the business section of the town is also the promenade section in the evening, and naturally theaters situated in the business districts are able to show features for longer periods than those in strictly residential sections, and the "Big Four" are now looking forward to exceptionally long runs in these houses.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, who has been carrying on a vigorous campaign in the interests of long runs and re-bookings, says that exhibitors have awakened to the practical value of showing features of merit long enough to give everybody who has heard the picture eulogized an opportunity to see it.

NAT GOODWIN IN "THE MASTER HAND."

Nat Goodwin has played many parts on the stage and off. At one time he ran a brokerage business in the Wall street district, where he is still well remembered personally as well as by reputation. Since those days Nat has gone into pictures once or twice and is now making "The Master Hand" under the direction of Harley Knoles. So down to Broad and Wall they all go for the purpose of taking some scenes for the photoplay. There are times when notoriety and popularity are inconvenient. This was one of them for Nat. He was and is so well remembered in his former financial haunts that for some time he couldn't work for the police mobbing he received. However, "order was finally restored," and the camera man was allowed to proceed.

CARTER DE HAVEN LATEST UNIVERSAL COUPS.

Of recent months, the business of cataloging the coups which the Universal company is achieving has become a regular performance. Latest of the stars of the speaking stage to be weaned away from their former calling is the team of Carter De Haven and Flora Parker, for years among the biggest Broadway attractions in the theatrical line. They are already in Los Angeles; they have terminated their connection with the stage and are making ready to appear in Universal comedies under the direction of William C. Dowlan who has recently been directing Violet MacMillan in dramatic productions.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Gone!

GEORGE EDITOR CARPENTER, of the Real Reels, laments the passing of Ray Bagley and Ralph R. Ruffner from his territory. They have taken the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash. It was in a small town called Vancouver, in the same state, that Mr. Ruffner got his start. Then he went to Boise and now he is back in Washington with another hustler with him and we quite concur with Mr. Carpenter in the belief that they will rip things wide open. Both men have builded their success on advertising, backed by the proper conduct of their houses. Both have made good and merely seek the larger field.

If you want to get into a larger house or a more important field, the advertising route is the quickest way, but it must be good advertising, persistent advertising, and it must be backed up by the house.

Right off the reel we get a letter from Mr. Ruffner, a sample of one sent the Spokane physicians announcing the showing of the Drug Terror and calling attention to the interest this holds for the medical profession. And they'll probably take this old subject and make a clean up with it. Each letter is specially typed and is signed in ink. It has all the earmarks of a personal letter because it is a personal letter in all save that the text is repeated. This is not as cheap as a printed form, but they are going after business and know that the better they work the greater will be the reward.

Here's our best wishes to the new firm and will they please come in often as visitors to this department.

Udells.

Dave Udell takes the Llewllyn Chaplin card and makes it go for the full advertising space. Steve Farrar took about a third of a circular space for the reverse, but Mr. Udell reverses the letters in each word for the entire advertisement, something after this fashion:

selrahC elgO dna leiruM ehcirtsO ni
EHT TRAEH REKAERB
A Comedy—nI owT stcA
lluF fo regniG dna ytlevoN mailliW droffilC dna eiraM pamclaW ni
"EHT ECNAMOR FO HAWIH"
yreV dooG—yreV dooG

Most people will puzzle this out just for spite, and for a "just once" advertisement it is a capital idea. Another Udell scheme is the spelling out of the title. The Christian in four line letters and then type to the right, something after this fashion:

TREMENDOUS—3,000 people and 500 scenes. The London Derby race is the greatest scene ever filmed.

HONEST—No scenes are taken just for effect. Everything done is for a purpose; a good purpose. The truth and nothing but the truth.

EFFICIENT—Everything in the book is exactly and correctly visualized. Nothing is left undone. The most minute details are attended to.

In a later letter Mr. Udell explains that he is just hanging around the twenty mark. His work does not show immaturity. Evidently he is a born advertiser and if he keeps at it he will be one of the leaders presently.

In Turn.

In sending out Metro releases, exchanges send also a post card self addressed to the home office on which the exhibitor is requested to pass comment on the subject and to offer suggestions. Probably not many suggestions of value are received, but it assuredly shows a desire to please the patron that might be carried along to the eventual consumer. Suppose that some day you should give your patrons return post cards asking for opinions and suggestions. You may get some help and assuredly you will be given credit for a real desire to please.

Headed Right.

The Ideal, Akron, Ohio, is headed in the right direction with its program. It is something to talk to the people with. It is a 5½ by 8½ sheet, four pages. There is a box head and a box at the bottom, both part of the regular front and not advertising. This leaves a space five inches deep for house chat or reading. This is changed every week and is more apt to be general stuff than advertisement, though now and then we get something like this:

> An electric button is useless unless it is pushed. Our programs are valueless unless they are read.
> Nothing you can put on is so inexpensive or so becoming as a smile. We furnish all kinds, from 6:30 to 10:30 every evening, and from 1:30 to 10:30 on Sundays and holidays.
> Some of our patrons have asked what time the second show in the evening starts. We would say that it takes on an average of 15 minutes to each reel, so the second show starts about 7:45 p. m., and we usually run the two-reel feature at the end of each show, making the time of starting the feature about 7:15 and 8:30.

On the back page advertising is run top and bottom with some house chat in between. The program announcement is on the middle pages with small advertisements top and bottom. They get seven and eight advertisements, probably enough to pay for the issue, and still have all the space they need for themselves, using titles and players. The chief objection is that the titles are set in all capitals on the machine. It will take no more space to set these in upper and lower case in a display type and the cost of the hand composition over the machine setting should not be very large. If they will try it just once, we believe that they will hold to it because they will obtain a result so much better. It is not a case of appearance, alone, but a case of appearance that makes for readers, and that is the object aimed at. It would be even better to use eight point for the one reel titles and ten point of the same face for the two reel features.

A clever idea is a free matinee for the kiddies after school. It has been their practice to pass children free when accompanied by parents at the first Monday night show, but to take care of increasing business that had to be stopped, so now and then they give a free matinee just for the kiddies when a subject like The Boston Tea Party or something with an educational kink is given just after school lets out. The reel is specially hired, but it more than pays for itself.

Not a Bit of It.

The Oneonta theater, Oneonta, N. Y., styles itself "The Strand of Oneonta." It would be better to forget the Strand talk of the Oneonta. Don't pretend to be a copy of another house. Probably few in the town will know what Strand is meant or why it is alluded to. Be your own house and be distinctive. The text comes on a card 4½ by 11 inches, a manila printed in a bright green. This stands out nicely, but it would have helped some had the days been dated. The abbreviation for the days stand in boxes to the left of the text. Setting in the date as well as a day would have given a calendar value to the publication, and once the job was done, the changes would not add appreciably to the cost. Apart from this the typesetting is well done with a due regard for the featured lines.

A Summer Set.

William Freise, stage manager of the Majestic theater, La Crosse, Wis., has devised a pretty set for the summer months. The stage shows a rustic garden with the orchestra in a summer house at one side of the screen. On the other side is an electrically illuminated waterfall which runs into a tank in which two swans move about, mirrors at the rear of the tank multiplying the birds. From the large tank, which extends across the stage, the water flows to the level of the stage in a second smaller, but wider fall. This not only actually cools the air, but the mental effect on the perspiring patron is even stronger. The value of the swans is more or less questionable, since they are apt to become active at a time when interest should be centered on the screen. Apart from this the idea is distinctly good.

Nearly Here.

We have not yet seen the Jitney theater, but we live in dread. Joseph Goldberg, of the Olympic, Louisville, announces his house as a jitney theater. But when the word is taken as the actual title of a house, make it complete. Call it the Jitney Movies. That will help a lot if ever you get the nerve to try and sell ten cent tickets.

Better, But Still.

E. O. Weinberg, of the Plaza, Troy, N. Y., sends in his last program and says he will keep on trying to swing it to shape. Mr. Weinberg makes a better selection of material, but he is still giving too much reading in proportion. With sixteen pages, no outside advertising, he should take at least two full pages for his program, instead of crowding it onto the back page. Then he should use the back page for the underlines and take about a page for chat about the house. This can be made as interesting as the chat of the players. One thing Mr. Weinberg does is to suit his cuts to the paper so that he gets the best impression possible. For that matter he makes his issue attractive in many ways, but he gives too much free reading in proportion to the advertising he gets.

Pennants.

The New theater, Stanton, Va., sends in a couple of pennants, but no details of the distribution. The flags are well done, the figure of Chaplin being in colors and printed on while the house announcement is also put on by some printing process. Monte Craig does not explain how they were distributed but gives the information that they added much to the effect of the lobby, which is quite easily to be understood, for the colors are gay and the use of quantities could be made very striking. He also sends in some folders, mostly small six page railroads, and says some of the things he has thought about the printer would not look well in print. We'll wager that we are both thinking along the same lines, for the printer is not exactly clever either in his selection of types or their handling. Mr. Craig says he has done a lot of borrowing from the department and proves it, but he simply will not use the idea of dated days, but tells that it is Monday or Tuesday or whatever it is and you have to look all over the program to find which Monday he means. One program, black on brown, is surcharged in red to make it good for a matinee admission Saturday. This is better than a lottery program idea, but it should be made to read good only for an adult admission or the kiddies will get the programs and keep them from their elders. We would like to have more of an explanation as to how the Chaplin stunt was worked.

Timely.

About the time we were waiting for the German reply along came the Alhambra, Utica, N. Y., with a slip reading "The President's Ultimatum." But the president was Carl Laemmle and the ultimatum was "we must do the biggest ever," which the Alhambra says is The Torrent. It looks as though Utica had beaten the Mecca Building to a good line.

Three V. P. programs are offered, each better than the preceding as to stock, other than that the color of number two is better than number three, which is about the same lugubrious blue as the stuff you poke out of the refrigerator ice water pipes when they get stopped up, if you ever tackled that cheerful job. If you cannot get a nice, cheerful blue, it is better to leave it alone. The third issue shows a cut heading that is nicely done, but they should kick out the Old English and go back to the type on the front of number one, only setting the date in a clearer letter. The inside pages of number three are the best and this form should be adhered to. This is dated days, stars in caps and titles in full face. Perhaps it will be found that stars in italics would be even better and more sightly as well. We would not be a bit surprised were that discovery made. It is what generally does happen.

A good folder shows a girl patting a leopard on th ehead and carries the big type heading: "Did you ever try this?" It is Miss Walcamp in "The Jungle Queen," but the line used is better than would be the title on the cover page. A. F. W. Jones, who sends the stuff in, says he is just breaking in. He broke into the right place, very evidently, and he will stand watching, if he will send stuff in now and then to watch him by. And then get this idea:

HAVE YOU JOINED OUR NEW

COME IN—
They Are a Bunch of Good Fellows"—
Every one of Them.

They Will Do It.

If you mind your own business you'll have about all that you can attend to, but some exhibitors are so constituted that they want to muss things up. Such a house is the Orpheum, Haverhill, Mass. It has been a straight picture house right along. Lately the Colonial, a former vaudeville house, saw the light and went in for straight pictures, too, advertising them as "wonder pictures." The Vitagraph's The Goddess was "The Serial Beautiful." Then came the Orpheum with a three column yawp:

TO THE PUBLIC

Do not be bulled, bluffed, or buffaloed by any fake advs. of so-called "Wonder Pictures," or "Serial Beautiful." The best Serial Picture today is "THE BLACK BOX," which is shown at The Orpheum, and ninety per cent. of leading theaters in the country. The fact that it was written by E. Phillips Oppenheim, the greatest writer of fiction today, should be ample reason to feel proud that you are following a great story. If you have not seen any part of "THE BLACK BOX," read the synopsis in The Gazette Friday and Saturday, and see it at The Orpheum Monday or Tuesday. If you want to be interested and entertained, see "THE BLACK BOX." If you want to go to sleep, see the "Serial Beautiful."

The next day they frothed a little more to this effect:

FACT NO. 2.

Considerable newspaper space is used very hard to fill the people's mind with a lot of lies about their so-called "Wonder Pictures," and trying to belittle the prestige of the Orpheum theater. Being fair business men we don't mind facts, but when they persist in advertising that one of the owners of the other theater is the head of the largest film concern in New England and selling the best pictures on the market, it is time that the fair public should not be bulled any longer. The feature pictures you see at the Orpheum are shown in the leading theaters of the country for prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar. The pictures shown at the other theater and sold by the so-called largest film exchange in New England, are shown in the jitney houses of the far corners of New England. Judge for yourself and go to the Orpheum where you will always find a consistently good show.

There was no third day. The newspaper management stepped in and applied the soft pedal.

If the two houses were under the same management and they were ready to close the Orpheum for the Colonial, this would be most excellent management, but it would appear that these are really rival houses, and so the stuff, while excellent advertising for the Colonial, is in the wrong man's bill. Surely the Goddess, Betty Nansen and The Stoning can rank with the offerings at the Orpheum. Most assuredly they do not class in the category into which the Orpheum would put them. Therefore the Orpheum has made a scandalous exhibition of itself merely to advertise a competitor and put a new house on the playgoers' map.

The quickest and most certain way to advance a competitor is to attack him. The Orpheum stuff was not alone an attack but an exhibition of lamentably bad taste. They made theatergoers argue that if the Orpheum was so alarmed there must be something in the Colonial shows to give cause for the Orpheum disquiet, so they went to the Colonial instead of the Orpheum. A child with a clear head could have doped that out, but a man afraid of competition sees red and loses every sane viewpoint. It's too late for the Orpheum, but paste this up on your desk against the time you are tempted to announce that your own new competitor is all the things that you think he is—and don't do it.

Neither the Orpheum nor the Colonial has written this department. The clippings came from three different sources, none of them related. These are all film handlers who feel that the matter is of general interest. Some are interested in the subjects attacked. It is bad for the entire business when a management boils over like this.

There is nothing that will put a business to the bad more quickly than a confession that competition is feared. Don't do it. Say your own show is good, but do not attempt to talk about the films you have not got. Don't know that they exist.

And on this same subject a well known Washington, D. C., attorney; a man merely interested in pictures as a spectator, takes the trouble to write about a recent local advertisement for Universal films in which the reader is urged to tell a manager that he is a piece of cheese if he does not handle Universals.

Tableau Display.

Emery M. Downs, of the Knickerbocker theater, Cleveland, writes covering a photograph of a window display he is using:

This is the third time I have "broken in" on your busy day; the first was on the opening of the Knickerbocker, over three years ago; on which occasion you wrote me personally regarding ways, and means, of catering to the tastes of the aristocrats from the managerial chair of the Knickerbocker, which then had not opened its doors. The second, about two years after, I reported that we at last "had them coming strong," and incidentally plunged you into my dissertation on the great possibilities for the scenic production of big picture productions. I described the manner I had staged Helen Gardner in "The Princess of Bagdad," you will remember.

This time I will not claim so much of your valuable time, and submit the new advertising scheme I had photographed and which is in this mail under separate cover. The photographer did not get the idea owing to insufficient lighting. But the scene is one of the many I used in illustrating, with the assistance of suitably dressed dolls, a scene from the attraction playing at the Knickerbocker.

Hazel Dawn in "Niobe" showed three dolls; a nude doll on a pedestal in the act of coming to life; Peter Amos Dunn a character doll standing "aghast," while in the background a Mama Katzen Jammer doll with hands covering her eyes; lots of comedy action.

The bill poster had not as yet made the change of paper in the adjoining window announcing the "Coming Attraction."

I read your valuable columns every week and get lots of good material for thought and progress.

I am now busy taking off my electric light fixtures for which I will substitute handsome silk Japanese lanterns for the summer months; I will use a lot of Wisteria with the decorative plan and expect to hand our patrons a pleasant surprise.

The cut does not show the coming attraction, which is in the next window, the window being permanently lettered for the coming attraction in black on a white ground, an eight sheet being placed in the center according to the attraction. This window is in the store recently abandoned by a dry goods concern and is in the heart of the business district. The major part of the display is a reproduction of the stage setting, the scene from the play being set where the screen runs in the real stage. The cost of the display for each change is not great. The result is worth many times the cost. Even if there were no actual return in money, the effect of such enterprise is alone sufficient to more than pay cost in advertising. The only thing we do not like about Mr. Downs is his infrequency.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Cutting Back.

EVIDENTLY one correspondent is trying too hard to fit a certain company because he writes that he is trying to turn out hundred scene plays and fails. He says:

> If I write a hundred scenes I am told that it is too long for a reel. If I write forty or fifty I am told it is the right length, but too few scenes. What shall I do?

The answer seems to be to do as the studio people do. If they had been on the level in demanding hundred scene reels and the forty scene scripts were the right length, they would have told him how they did it. The original flash back was not made in a hundred scenes. It was made around thirty or forty scenes, but the action seemed to drag because some of the scenes were too long, so the director or the joining man got a pair of shears and taking two scenes cut them into bits and joined them alternately. This is still frequently done and we know only one director who wants his action written in a hundred scenes to the reel, and this is because he uses but a single script writer and knows the man can do the work. Other directors take sixty scenes or so and cut them up themselves. But if the work must be done, do with paper what the cutter does with the film. Write two scenes and then cut them apart. Suppose you write these two scenes:

39—Cabin as in No. 36—Jess at the table—Tom appears in doorway. she springs up. He stands looking at her a moment. His expression shows that he means her no good. Slowly she moves her hand across the table until she grasps the handle of the pitcher. Tom takes a step forward toward her—she waves him back—he sneers at her—comes forward—she rises—throws the pitcher at him—he ducks it passes over his head—he closes in and grasps her—they struggle violently—he tries to choke her—she bites his hand—he strikes her a blow she becomes unconscious—hangs limply in his arms—he sets her on the chair.

40—Old Shack as in No. 38—Henry still on the bed, bound—he tries to rise—does so—hops across the room to the table—lifts tumbler with his teeth—lets fall—it breaks—holding one of the broken pieces in his teeth he saws his hands free—cuts himself loose and dashes from the room.

The script shows that Henry is Jessie's sweetheart and has been overpowered and left bound in the old shack so that Tom may kidnap the girl without interference. But just now these two scenes alone concern us. They have not been written in the finished script, but on a separate sheet. With these before us, we start to cut them up, just as the director would cut the film on which these two scenes are printed. The result shows this:

40—Shack—Henry on bed, bound—struggles.
41—Cabin—Jess looks up—sees Tom—terrified, but does not let him see she knows he is there.
42—Shack—Henry struggling.
43—Cabin—Jess stretches her hand toward the pitcher on the table.
44—Shack—Henry struggling—gets on feet, but falls back on floor.
45—Cabin—Jess reaching for pitcher.
46—Bust of Jess' hand closing around handle of pitcher.
47—Cabin—Jess slightly smiles as she draws pitcher to her.
48—Shack—Henry gets to feet—starts to table.
49—Cabin—Tom steps forward—Jess tells him to stand back—he laughs.
50—Shack—Henry at table takes glass in mouth.
51—Cabin—Tom advancing—Jess throws pitcher—Tom ducks—it goes over his head—he springs toward her.
52—Shack—Henry drops glass on table—it smashes.
53—Cabin—Tom closes in with Jess—they struggle.
54—Shack—Henry sawing at bonds, glass in teeth.
55—Cabin—Tom tries to choke Jess she struggles to force him off.
56—Shack—Henry frees hands—chafes wrists—picks up glass—saws at ropes binding feet.
57—Cabin—Jess bites Tom's hand—he lets go with a curse—steps back.
58—Shack—Henry free—rubs legs to start circulation.
59—Cabin—Tom strikes Jess—she falls limply into his arms—he expresses triumph.
60—Shack—Henry snatches up revolver—dashes out.
61—Cabin—Tom lays Jess on chair—goes toward door.

After that we see Henry hurrying to the rescue, the struggle between the two men and all the rest of it, but meantime from two scenes we have obtained twenty-three flashes, their combined length being less than the footage of the two, because we show only bits of the struggle and only bits of Henry's efforts instead of sticking out the action in one scene. Cutting back is easier than writing straight action, but until you learn to keep the action in your head, it may be well to write the straight scenes first and then cut them up.

Made to Order.

Don't write a new botany or a new zoology just to get a story. Nine times out of ten it will not interest and the tenth time it will take too much explanation. Just the minute you write in a leader, "John gives Maizie a leaf of the plant that if eaten will cause her, just 210 hours, 14 minutes and 23 seconds later to apparently drop dead, though she will remain in this condition only 19 hours and 11 seconds," you lose your audience. They will be so busy wondering where you found such a plant that they'll take small notice of the story until long after Maizie has come to life again. We saw a capital script the other day so loaded down with ifs and buts that it stood no chance whatever of being sold, and studios get this product at least once a week, if not more often.

If you have your hero bitten by a rattlesnake, we know in a moment that he will die unless he gets gloriously drunk, but if you have him bitten by a purple snake with green spots and have to stop to explain that the only known antidote is a swiss cheese sandwich, with the bread buttered on both sides and with English instead of German mustard, we are apt to forget that snake while chewing over that sandwich.

In a word keep your plot factors clear and distinct. Get the novelty of the story into your situations and stop inventing new animals. If the story is absolutely dependent on an animal whose habitat is the alcoholic wards of the hospitals, accept as a fact the statement that the story is worthless.

Early Scripts.

This is from the man who recently told how he had at last made his first sale after having almost given up more than a year before. He knows. Others simply rush in.

> Oh Lord, how long will the dubs continue to expect to sell their second and third tries. I have honestly worked an average of over three hours per day for nearly two years, and I was over a year landing my first one. I have treated your "Technique" exactly as I formerly used my text book on geometry, with the same care and pains to understand its problems and I have set my mark for the coming year at only ten accepted reels, counting doubles as two, should I succeed in landing such a thing as a double. One thing more and I'll keep still for a long time. The M. P. World isn't well enough known, even now, to the would-be photoplaywrights. There would be fewer to enter the game, perhaps, but they would be much better qualified if before writing a single story, they would read the World for six months, from cover to cover.

Mrs. Louella Parsons is doing good work in the Chicago Tribune and the papers in that syndicate, for she preaches the doctrine of work. It is through the daily papers that the lay reader must be reached. But if it were possible to get the message to the general public, it would not be believed. People have read the school advertisements and they "know." Any discouragement in print is merely the efforts of the inside clique to keep others from the fruitful field.

Death.

Not long ago an author wrote a drama in which the heroine, for her trespasses upon forbiden pastures, was punished with the death of her father, whom she greatly loved. One foot the old man was hale and hearty. Two feet later he was dead. The whole scene was written with an air of "this serves you plenty right," that was almost amusing. After several studios had declined with thanks, the author rewrote the story. He dwelt more, in the beginning of the story, on the love of the woman for her parent. Then, at the finish instead of death there came a stroke. The old man was a paralytic. The direct cause was the revelation of his daughter's indiscretion. He was a constant, living reproach far more dramatic in suggestion than his death could possibly have been made. The woman was not reminded now and then that she had been the cause of his death. She was daily, hourly—reminded that this thing in its wheel chair was the father she loved and to whom she had brought a living death. The story in its new form sold. It offered a new idea.

Complications.

We've just been using the pulmotor on a comedy. It was a really promising idea, but about a hundred feet from the finish line the author started to work up his complications. That's too late by at least four hundred feet to start the complications or to add new ones. Get the complications in the first half or third of the story, let them work to the usual entanglements but handle them in such a way that the last hundred feet will disentangle the kinks almost wholly without the use of a leader.

Before you start to put your story into action, know what the story will be. Then tell this as quickly as possible. Say (in action, of course) "Here are Jim and Mollie. Jim wants to marry Mollie, but her father wants her to marry Percy. Jim hires a woman to declare herself to be Percy's secret wife." This can all be told in few scenes and one or two leaders. Now get busy with the story. Let it be supposed that the scheme will be successful. Then, in the last hundred feet let Percy bribe the woman to turn and swear that she is Jim's wife. A single leader will do it.

If you keep the story to various other schemes and dig this idea up in the last hundred feet; before the audience can really sense the humor of the idea they will be watching the title of the next picture. In the first two hundred feet established your facts. In the next seven hundred work up the complications. In the remainder disentangle the snarl.

On Comedy.

A Texas correspondent offers this dissertation on comedy:

> About comedies; all the companies seem to be making a cry for good comedies, yet authors get but little encouragement in their desire to write comedies when they see some of those turned out by the various companies. Nearly all the magazines are knocking the slap-stick, yet nearly every company is turning it out. If a writer wants to market a parlor comedy he has, say, four or five places to send it. Universal and Selig are out of the market; Essanay and Thanhouser have been out for some time. The Vitagraph, Lubin and American are about all that is left. The Colonial say they are not buying now. MinA might take it if it is a certain kind. If the story is silly enough for a "Waddy and Artie" comedy, the Edison might hold it six or eight weeks and then read it. The Komic might read the synopsis ONLY. The "Beauty" comedies are different from the others; if you write a comedy for the Beauty and they send it back, it will most probably have to go to the morgue. When the Nestor was in the market, they demanded a style of comedy which the other companies didn't take. A script rejected by Nestor meant "to the morgue." The Essanay Company say they are not in the market for scripts; and just look at some of their comedies. Take the "Sweedie" stories for instance. What really good author would want to write such stuff? And who would care to write a "Ham" comedy for Kalem? Or a "Waddy and Artie," As I said before, it seems to me that a really good, polite parlor comedy now has three chances: Beauty, Vitagraph and Lubin. I cannot yet see how to write a "general" comedy, one that might be used by any of the companies. A drama might be so written, but comedy is different according to my view.

In the first place, Lubin is scarcely in the market for polite comedies. It is not much in the market for any comedy. The Waddy and Artie series has been discontinued. Thanhouser never was in the market. The market is so shifty that it is not possible to keep tab on it long enough to write an article about.

But what we want to know is this: Why the morgue? If Nestor or Beauty or any other of those who produce a unique style of comedy turn back, why junk the script? Just one try—and then the basket! Out upon the thought!

Suppose that we take "Chinks and Chickens," the Edison release for May 19th. This was released as a "Waddy and Artie" comedy. But it was written for those comedians, not for an Irish comedian or a German comedian or any particular type and it was written for but one comedian. It was not sent to Edison because it was "silly enough" for a Waddy and Artie. It was sent Edison first because we thought it rather better than the average and so sent it where it was most likely to be appreciated. It did not carry the wire walker, or the man-rooster or many of the other trimmings. It was merely a rather brisk little comedy that could have been offered almost anywhere.

But if this had been written for those comedians or any other special players and had been rejected, it would not have gone into the morgue. It would have been worked over to more general lines and kept on its travels.

Just as a matter of fact it is not necessary to write a particular style of comedy. Write a general style of comedy and it will fit the special players if it is sufficiently elastic. Already this department has recorded a story written for Walter E. Perkins that was played by John Bunny, who was eight inches taller and at least a hundred and fifty pounds heavier, and the script was not changed in the least before being sent to the Vitagraph. A story was written that would have suited either men. It was not written to fit a size or type, but to fit any size or type.

The morgue is a place where ideas may be stored for the time being, but if the idea is in any way good, it should not be permanently sepulchred.

Just the other day we dug out of the morgue a story written for the Lubin negro players, changed a part to black-face instead of negro, and sold it. It looked dead—but it wasn't.

Supplies.

Don't buy your supplies from schools or papers. Buy paper and typewriter ribbons from a stationer in your own town. If he has not what you need he can order it for you and will sell it at a reasonable price. One fake offers ten cent typewriter erasers for fifteen cents each and 250 sheets of paper for the price of 500. It is a profitable side line for the paper or school, but a swindle on the author.

She Knows.

A woman writer comments on a recent discussion of the revision bureaus to this effect:

> I was vastly interested in your article regarding the bureaus, etc.—for a short time ago a young woman in an adjoining town wrote me and asked to come to see me about something she had written—and had sent out two or three times for criticism—and it had been very highly commended. Well she brought the thing to me about a week ago being in town on a visit and those people had taken her money and had her send something out that was absolutely punk. There was a slight incident in it—but of interest only locally in the town she came from—and carried twenty-four scenes (?) some of them having three and four cut in subtitles. I have seen a good many scripts—considering my limitations—but this was the only one I ever saw that had been reviewed and pronounced good—she could not have given it away. I told her to get your book and study it—she had it already—but had merely skimmed it, she said, and I advised her to keep the thing she had out of the market—read and thoroughly digest your book before she tried again to write.

The people who mostly patronize the revision bureaus are those who do not want to study. They want to have the glory without the work. They want to spend five dollars on revision and cash a three figure check. They are like the indignant young woman who wrote to Dr. Stockton: "I did not pay you to tell me where my story was bad. I paid you to tell me how to sell it."

Butt-ins.

Lately some correspondents have been worried about the number of fiction writers who are going to do plays. But why? If a fiction writer gives the same time to mastering the technique of photoplay that a rank outsider does, he is entitled to the same measure of success, but, as a general thing, the famous fiction writer does not take the trouble to study his subject. He writes a couple of stories and the director fixes them up, but they are not much better than the director could write himself and the manufacturer comes to realize it, so he drops the star novelist and comes back to the men and women who can write for the camera and who do not have to be translated into film action. There is no sense in worrying about the man with the underdone job. He'll be found out. The thing to do is to keep on writing your very best to the end that when the other man is dropped you'll be hanging around ready to take his place.

The films today require people who can write, but people who can write for the films. One man who has some genuine vaudeville hits to his credit recently wrote that a man leans over a pool and a goldfish jumps out and makes a face at him. Evidently he rises superior to a study of film limitations, and the man too big for his job can never crowd into it.

That First Scene.

It is getting to be quite fashionable to start a story with a smashing big first scene. It is fashionable, but not always wise. It is far better to start the story with an interesting proposition than with a big scene and then move to the climax with an ever increasing velocity.

The first big appeal should be made to the brain, the middle through the visual and the climax through a combination of idea and visual action. That makes for a better and more consistent development as a rule. Throughout the properly told story there is always the suggestion of something in reserve; of something held back to be sprung at the proper moment, a hint of something greater and more momentous to which the present action is leading.

In music the composer holds his mass of harmony to the last. He does not start off with a banging of the kettle drums and wind up with the sobbing of the wood choir. He enunciates his theme, then embroiders that until the composition ends with the fullest exposition of the idea in full orchestra. It should be the same way in writing photoplay. There may be a surge of story at the middle points, a receding action for a moment preparatory to the next crisis, but each crisis must be stronger than the one before, must be a little more forceful until, at the end, the climax comes, than which there can be no stronger development in this particular story and no continuation.

To change the simile, the story should be like a rising tide. Each succeeding wave washes a little higher up the beach, recedes to give place to the next and so, until the tide is full, and the water can rise no higher. After that the tide must inevitably recede, but as interest recedes when the climax is passed.

Fitting a Style.

If you are going to write a cut-back story with a hundred scenes to the reel, do not use a theme that requires to be told in a few scenes of deliberate action. These can be cut back into many, but it might spoil the play. Get the sort of story that is improved by flashing back. Some stories offer situations where flashing back and forth will heighten the suspense. Others have scenes that will be lost if the complete action is not played without a break. If your play will be hurt by being written in more than twenty or thirty scenes, do not write in more. Take chances on what you have done well. It will be better for you and the script. If, later, the director wants to break it up, on his own head be the crime. You be able to plead not guilty to the charge of incompetent workmanship.

In a sense that advice is as important in a comedy as in a drama, though most comedies are quickened by being cut up. Just now the hundred to a reel idea is popular, but it is not easy to plan the action and it is not as easy to write. As a rule three forty scene to the reel comedies can be turned out where a single hundred scene story is done, because the higher the number of scenes the more carefully must the work be planned if the story is actually to be told and not merely to be hinted at.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Important! Operators Notice!

THIS DEPARTMENT has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition, and I might say that I am doing it at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me with a statement as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand I must have the following data. First: What make of film is it; second: Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an Independent exchange; third: What day was it received? And don't mix up bad patches or other faults cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 94.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the effect of using condensers of too long foral length? Of too short focal length? Why does a cracked condenser show in the stereopticon picture and not in the moving picture?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 88.

The roll of Honor on Question No. 88 is as follows: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Maine; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas (except that he was in error in regard to the resistance); C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada; Victoria, British Columbia; M. C. McKercher, Dallas, Oregon; and William Lee, Fort Worth, Texas.

I think the reply of C. A. Dann is best deserving of publication this time, though that of Neighbor Hanson is almost, if not quite, as excellent. Brother Hanson brought out the point that while there would be slightly less resistance in the shorter carbon, if carbons of that length were used, there would be enough greater loss in butts to more than offset any saving made through elimination of resistance.

Reply to Question No. 88.

By C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

The Question:

Would there be any considerable difference in flow as between using 10 inches of 5-8 inch cored upper and 6 inches of 1-2 inch solid lower and a 4-inch upper and a 3 inch lower, same sizes, carbon in your lamps? Is the resistance of a hot carbon higher or lower than when it is cold? What is the difference between ordinary standard arc lamp carbons, such as are used in street lamps, or flaming arc carbons, and projection carbons?

The Answer:

Since it is the rule that the resistance of a conductor is directly proportional to its length, and inversely proportional to the area of its cross section, the shortening of the carbons to the extent named in the question, a total reduction of 9 inches, would certainly reduce the resistance and increase the amperage, but, taking as the basis the experiment recorded in paragraph 3, page 203 of the Handbook, where the insertion of 10 inches of 5-8 inch carbon into a closed circuit with 50 amperes flowing resulted in a reduction of approximately only one ampere, the increase in the case in question would be slight—merely the fraction of an ampere. Metallic conductors increase in resistance power with every increase of temperature, but carbon has what is known as a negative temperature co-efficient, which means that, like insulating substances, its resistance decreases with increased temperature, therefore the resistance of hot carbon is less, or lower than the resistance of cold carbon.

The texture of the ordinary standard arc lamp carbon is both harder and coarser than is the texture of the projection carbon and its density less uniform, with result that the light from the standard arc lamp carbons is neither as steady nor as pure as that from projection arc lamp carbons, and since steadiness and whiteness, or purity are prime factors in screen illumination the former carbons are unsuitable for such work. Flaming arc carbons differ both from the ordinary standard and the projection carbon in that the core is composed of powdered carbon, mineral salts and a suitable binder with a copper wire in the center. These carbons are thus constructed with the view of making the arc itself the principal source of illumination instead of the crater.

As to that portion of the reply dealing with the flaming arc carbon I cannot certify as to its correctness. I am not posted on flaming arc carbons, nor have I time just now to hunt the matter up. I did not know there was a copper wire in their center.

Department Examination.

The inspector-in-chief of Buildings Department of an Indiana city of considerable size, writes:

> We have recently placed in operation an ordinance regulating the motion picture houses and theaters and the motion picture theater operators and switchboard men, copy of which we enclose. Should you have any questions or series of questions on hand which you would be at liberty to forward us for the examination of motion picture operators and switchboard men, we will consider it a favor, and should we be in position to return the compliment at any time in any way we shall be glad to do so.

This letter was replied to personally, but I may say for the benefit of other cities who contemplate the passage of similar laws, that a series of question is of slight value, mainly by reason of the fact that if a series of questions is asked, that fact soon leaks out and applicants will all pass. The thing for an examiner to do is, as this department has pointed out time and again, simply ask a comparatively few practical questions, tending to bring out the actual knowledge of the applicant concerning the various things he is compelled to handle, such as, for instance, the Edison three-wire system; the two-wire system; resistance; transformers; finding grounds in rheostats; locating the coil of the rheostat the ground is on; finding a ground in the operating room circuit. Here, for instance, is a simple question which will show you how much the operator knows about the electrical action of the Edison three-wire system: Suppose you have an Edison three-wire system, with all three wires entering the operating room and terminating in a switchboard. Suppose you have attached to "one side" three circuits, one taking 10 amperes, one taking 15 amperes and one 40 amperes; attached to the other side are also three circuits, one taking 10, one 15 and one 40, or a total of 130 amperes. What size fuse would be necessary on the operating room feeders? The operator who can answer that question fully, completely, correctly, and in detail, explaining the reasons for his answer, most emphatically understands the action of the Edison three-wire system. Incidentally let me see how many of our readers can answer it. It is simply one question out of many similar possible practical ones designed to bring out the actual knowledge of the operator. Catch questions should be avoided since they serve no good purpose.

A Film Fault Detector.

Mr. Maurice L. Rosenfeld, inventor of a new machine to detect faults in film during the process of inspection, recently demonstrated the machine to the editor of this department.

After careful examination of the same I am prepared to say that the device is most excellent for the purpose intended, and one which by all means ought to have a place in every film exchange. It has many excellent points, and, so far as I can see, will absolutely detect (a) wide or stiff patches; (b) ripped sprocket holes; (c) broken film track; (d) mis-matched holes in splices, and other mechanical faults in the film, except, possibly, a loose patch, where the looseness is only at the edge. Mr. Rosenfeld claims the machine will even detect this, but I am inclined to doubt it. For patent reasons it is not deemed advisable to give a detailed description of the machine at the present time.

The detection of mechanical faults in the film, however, is not all the machine does. It consists essentially of three sections, the central part being a semi-automatic patcher. The patcher makes a splice which is true and of absolutely uniform width, though a trifle wider than the factory splice. I did not measure the patches, but I should say they were approximately 3-16 of an inch wide; the scraping is done automatically and the joining line is perfectly straight and true. The third part of the machine is the cleaner. The film is made to run through a reservoir which contains, or may contain chemicals designed to remove dirt, oil, etc. The film passes down through the chemicals, up and between a pair of revolving brushes (the machine is motor driven), and, if I remember rightly, between felt pads as well, though of this latter I am not sure.

When a bad patch, ripped sprocket holes or other mechanical fault goes through, the first or left hand part of the machine automatically cuts off the current and stops the motor, at the same time releasing an air brake which instantly stops the machine by applying friction simultaneously to both reels.

This department can and does heartily approve of the use of this device in exchanges. It is to be put out on a rental basis, and it can also be recommended to theaters, provided a basis of rental can be reached which will not be prohibitory. The only single thing I can see which is not in favor of the machine is the fact that it will pass faults which are not mechanical; that is to say, supposing a piece of film drops to the floor of an operating room, and a few of the pictures get wet, thus blurring them; the machine would not detect this. However, while such things as that do happen, they happen so rarely that it is not really much of an objection, and most emphatically the installation of the machines in exchanges would go a long way toward improving inspection, and bringing the films into better condition. The proper use of the machine would eliminate all wide and stiff patches, ripped sprocket holes, etc. By proper use I mean this: the machine will detect them and stop when they pass; it is then up to the inspector to do his duty and cut out the patch. If he does not do it, that, of course, is not the fault of the machine. I might add also that the machine will detect misframes. I repeat this machine has the approval and endorsement of the projection department.

Mixed in His Dates.

R. J. Morrison, Aspen, Colorado, renews his subscription to the Moving Picture World and says:

> Am opening a new theater seating 500; modern in every respect. The Moving Picture World is indispensible, particularly at this time. I can get either 220 volt, 60 cycle A. C., or 500 volt, 60 cycle A. C. Can I get just as good results from a Fort Wayne compensarc Type A, Form 4, 220 volt A. C. to D. C. as I could from the big Fort Wayne 500 volt A. C. to D. C. compensarc? It means a difference of about three hundred dollars, since the smaller machine would only cost sixty, whereas the big one would cost three and a half hundred.

You are decidedly mixed in your dates, Brother Morrison. The Fort Wayne Type A, Form 4, compensarc is not an A. C. to D. C. machine, but merely a low voltage transformer which reduces the line voltage to arc voltage, but does not change it from A. C. to D. C.—it delivers A. C. to the arc. You say you can get 500 volt A. C., 60 cycle current. That is rather unusual. Are you sure it is not D. C.? Anyhow, I would advise you to purchase a 220 volt motor generator set. The 500 volt motor might be a little more economical, but it is mean stuff to handle and, moreover, dangerous to the operator, unless he is an electrician. It is true the transformer would only cost you sixty dollars, but you have a house seating 500 and you want the best screen results. You will only get the best possible results from direct current, therefore you should have a motor generator set, even though it does cost three hundred and fifty as against sixty for the other. I might also add that the cost of operation of the motor generator set is higher, and its over all efficiency is not as high as that of the transformer, still, for all that, it is results on the screen that count, therefore take my advice and get a motor generator set, or, if you prefer it, a mercury arc rectifier. Some prefer one and some the other, but D. C. at the arc is the thing.

The Right Idea.

An operator in Michigan not long ago received from a certain exchange a film in very bad condition. He put in two hours repairing it, and forwarded a bill for one dollar to the exchange, which they did not pay, but wrote him that the "operator was expected to make necessary repairs in film."

The operator referred the matter to me and I immediately wrote the exchange, calling their attention to the absolute unfairness of such a proposition as that, suggesting to them that the duty was not the operator's, and if he was obliged to put the film into condition before he could run it, he had a perfect right to render a bill and expect payment. Some correspondence ensued, and, while the bill was not paid, still I think some good was accomplished.

The operator in question now writes:

> Is there anything doing regarding payment for repairs on "The Pit," concerning which matter I wrote you some time ago? I received carbon copy of letter you sent the exchange in Detroit, but have not heard anything further. You certainly gave them a good roast, which I hope had some effect. It is a good thing we boys have some one to take our troubles to. If it was not for your hard work there certainly would not be as good projection as there is to-day. You know the old saying: "Some people don't like us," which means several things. We should worry, huh, Pop? If you succeed in causing this exchange to pay this just debt, kindly donate the dollar to some good purpose. I put in eleven hours a day in the operating room, and have plenty of work to do, as I am alone with two Powers Six A machines; run six to eight reels a day to a show, and don't even have a supper hour off, therefore to be compelled to inspect and repair films is, I think, most anyone would admit, in the nature of an imposition. One of the representatives of the World Film Company came here the other day and told the boss, within hearing of one of the ushers, that we had the best projection in the state, and the usher told me. I put on an absolutely flickerless picture, and my mind is on my work and nowhere else. I take great pride in my profession, and as I am well paid, considering salaries in these parts, I feel it is up to me to deliver the best that is in me. Am enclosing a clipping from a daily paper of this town for your opinion. I believe married men make the best operators. They are "settled down" and not so independent as the single guys. They are likely to remain in one place longer, and have something to work for besides money. This is only my own opinion, so, of course, the shoe may not fit every condition. We old bucks, you and I, know what it is. Well, Pop, I fear I have taken too much of your time, so good-bye and good luck to you and all the boys.

It certainly is an outrage to expect an operator to inspect films, especially when he is working those long hours. It also is in the nature of an outrage to expect an operator to work those hours. Eleven hours without even a supper hour off! What is your manager thinking of anyhow? Is he trying to see if he cannot transform you into a perpetual motion machine? You say your salary is "good as salaries go in those parts." Well, the good Lord knows it ought to be! You are, of course, doing the right thing in delivering the goods, keeping your mind on your work, and attending strictly to business. Personally I would see a manager in a climate which is considerably warmer than anything in the United States, and to which is attributed a smell peculiar to old style matches, before I would stay cooped up in an operating room eleven hours a day, absolutely regardless of what the salary might be, but if I did do it, old man, I would deliver the goods as long as I was there. That part of your idea is absolutely correct. As to the newspaper clipping, it relates to a fire which occurred when the projection machine was in charge of a boy. Naturally I believe that, other things being equal, a man of mature years will make a better operator than will the young man, because of the fact that while the young man is perhaps more ambitious, still, at the same time, it must be admitted that he is less inclined to steadiness and stick-to-it-ness. There are, of course, exceptions. As to the married man end of it; well, I decline to be interviewed. Very naturally all the married men would whoop 'er up for "yes," whereas the unmarried contingent would promptly make the welkin ring with a vociferous "no" to that part of your letter.

His Right Name.

It will be remembered that I, some time ago, published a letter purporting to be from one A. T. Anderson, St. Paul, Minn., who signed a string of initials after his name, and made a somewhat bungling attempt to hand the editor a "bundle." From St. Paul now comes the statement that the name of the writer was not Anderson, but Gornover or Cornorer (that is as near as I can make it out, but I guess one or the other is right). Well, I do not know if this is correct or not, but I was and am satisfied Anderson was not the right handle. It certainly is not a very brave individual who wields his hammer from behind a screen.

Worn Intermittent?

Alfred Fowler, Alliance, Ohio, says:

> On page 2092, June 26th issue, is an article entitled, "Stuck at Last," in which A. K. Maluf, manager Lion Opera House, Glasgow, Ky., sets forth the trouble he is having with his SixA. Here is a small piece of film taken from a reel I ran recently. This small piece torn off caught on the intermittent sprocket and wrapped around same. The trouble is that the intermittent sprocket teeth are worn, and when a loose patch comes it is seized by the hooked teeth. We are building a new theater here and will send you pictures when it is completed. Here is a question I would like to have answered. What size picture would you recommend in a theater 120 feet long, 27 feet wide, with a 20 foot ceiling? On page 342 of the Handbook it only says "12 feet." I have been operating at the American Theatre three years, and my total experience is five years. Will close by wishing all the boys success and the same to the editor personally.

The piece of film was conspicuous by its absence. However, I cannot agree with your solution of Maluf's difficulties, because of the fact that the trouble only happened on one make of film, whereas if it were caused by worn sprocket teeth there seems to be no reason why it would be confined to any particular make of film. Send on the photos when they are ready. As to the size of picture, where only one dimension is given it always means the width. For a house 120 feet long and 27 feet wide, assuming the rear seats to be 120 feet from the screen, I would suggest that, as between 16 and 18 feet (width of course), it is a matter of individual preference between the smaller more brilliant, and the larger less brilliant picture. I think you would find a 17 foot picture to be very satisfactory all around.

Want License Law.

We are informed that the moving picture operators of Grand Rapids, Michigan, are urging the passage of a license law.

Provided the law be drafted along lines of common sense and practicability, and that it be carried out in a sensible manner, it is a good proposition, both for the operators and the city of Grand Rapids.

Want Salaries Increased.

According to reports Elgin, Illinois, Operators' Union has demanded a wage increase, which the managers propose to fight, declaring there are plenty of operators to be secured at salaries now being paid. To which the operators reply that the only men the managers can secure are "crank turners." This implies that the union operator of Elgin is a better workman than is the non-union man. I hope this is true. It is the very thing I have for years been preaching to unions: Make the union card a synonym for good projection. I don't know anything about the situation in Elgin, so far as it applies to the relative proficiency of union and non-union men. I trust, however, that it is true that the crank turners are on the outside and the operators on the inside of the organization, and if this is true I venture the statement that Elgin managers are taking a very foolish stand when they propose to resist the demand for raise in salary by accepting inferior workmen at lower salaries. If one of these managers proposed to erect a new theater, would he go to the cheapest architect he could possibly find, regardless of ability? Well, hardly. He would first want to know something about the ability of Mr. Architect and then discuss the matter of remuneration. Why work that rule backwards when dealing with operators? Don't you really believe, Mr. Elgin Manager, that an increase in operators' salary will, in the very nature of things, ultimately reflect more than its value in increased excellence of the projection on your screen? Well, if you don't, I do, and probably I have had as wide experience in these matters as you have; possibly just a little bit wider.

Very likely by the time this is published the difficulty will have been settled, but the remarks may be applied by other managers in other cities where similar trouble may develop.

A Genuine Curio.

From A. A. Heldt, Evansville, Indiana, comes a letter and photographs of a very genuine curio and relic of the old days. Fig. 1 shows the operating side of a projection machine known as the Amet Magniscope, owned by Mr. Heldt, who purchased it in 1900. Fig 2 shows the intermittent sprocket and movement. The movement was of the trip clutch type, and gave three pictures to each revolution of the intermittent sprocket, and nine pictures to each turn of the crank. The film was endless, and the length of subjects from 30 to 85 feet. Fig 3 shows the opposite side of the mechanism. The film ran from the intermittent sprocket along the base board under the lamphouse, down and back up. When Mr. Heldt discovered the fact that film could be spliced with collodion he changed the machine so that a five-inch reel could be used. He did not know what a rewinder was, that being done by revolving the reel by hand. Gas was the illuminant. Mr. Heldt still has his lamphouse and gas burner in good condition. The machine was purchased from a traveling showman by the name of Emig, in the fall of 1900.

The spring and knurled screw in the end of the intermittent sprocket, Fig. 2, supplies a tension, so that when the dog on the shaft of the sprocket hits the clutch it trips the same and allows the sprocket to make one-third of a revolution.

I am sure our readers will feel indebted to Brother Heldt for having contributed pictures of this very interesting machine.

Eye Strain.

Waterloo, Iowa, says:

> I have read with a great deal of interest your article on the condition of films, June 12th issue. With relation to the statement made by Mr. Nicholas Power, I think it very timely, and have wondered if the time were not near when the age of films will be censored the same as in their manufacture. I have long contended that film out of condition has a decided tendency to cause eye strain, the same of which is true of poor lenses, and have put up that argument to our manager. I enclose herewith an advertisement, used by one of our competitors lately, which appeals to us as being a sort of joke, so far as the advertisement deals with projection. What is your opinion of this kind of advertising? I read the department with much interest every week, and find it to be very helpful and instructive.

Waterloo raises a rather large question, and one which will doubtless, in due course of time, receive serious consideration. Mr. Power's statement is, as I have already said, in my opinion, correct, but whether we can go beyond that and claim that films which are merely scratched and dirty will cause eye strain is something else again. Personally, I am a little inclined to doubt that part of Waterloo's contention, though his remarks concerning poor lenses are absolutely right, since a poor lens would have somewhat the same effect on the eye as the picture being out of focus.

With regard to the advertisement, the thing which aroused Waterloo's criticism is the following: "The only house in America with projection so perfect to allow the showing of pictures in daylight." Well, statements of that kind are hardly worth consuming space in criticism. In order to show the falsity of the statement I would be compelled to consume a good deal of space. However, for the benefit of the writer of this advertisement, let me say that perfect projection has little or nothing to do with daylight projection. Daylight projection is wholly and entirely a matter of light brilliancy and screen construction, principally the latter.

Change in New York City Regulations.

The Picture World has been notified by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity that the old rule prohibiting the re-winding of films inside the operating room during the time the projector is in operation, has been rescinded. Films may now be re-wound in the operating room at any time.

This is a rule that is along the lines of common sense. The operating room is presumed to be thoroughly fireproof and it therefore is the logical place for the handling, re-winding and operating of films. It is all nonsense to require this work to be done in a separate room. It simply makes additional expense and in many theaters forces the re-winding and repairs from under the eye of an experienced operator and perforce usually places it entirely in charge of an incompetent boy. Our compliments to the department on its sane and sensible action.

I'll Explain.

Arthur Ayers, Bellefontaine, Ohio, writes:

> In issue June 12th you say, in describing the arc controller: "If the voltage rises, the amperage drops; if the voltage drops the amperage rises." I have just finished reading the article by Mr. Rubin, Pensacola, Florida, in which he says his experience has been that the higher the voltage the higher the amperage, and you say in commenting that such is the case. J. H. Hallberg in his book, page 134, says: "Should the current flowing through the arc be decreased in amperes, and the carbon separation remain the same, the potential drop across the arc will increase. Should the current flowing through the arc be increased in amperes and the carbon separation remain the same the potential drop across the arc will be decreased." Now don't imagine I am finding fault with you, or in any way putting up a kick. I just do not seem to be able to get this fixed in my head quite right, therefore, will you explain? Am anxiously awaiting the publication of the result of those experiments you have made, in order that I may learn the action of light through lenses. It was no doubt a very hard job, but you have done something which I feel will be welcomed by every live, progressive operator, and which will also improve results in many theaters in this and other countries. I agree with Brother Kaho, Trindad, Colo., that every operator should understand something of photography, camera work, and how pictures are produced. True, it is another and entirely different branch of the industry, but the operator adds the final touch to the cameraman's, director's and actor's work, and I contend that he should know something of these things. It is, of course, not necessary that the operator be an expert cameraman, but there should be some means whereby he could learn some of the rudiments of photography and camera work, in order that he may produce better results on his screen. I think it would be an excellent idea if the Moving Picture World would devote a page, or even half a page, to this particular branch, and have it edited by some one competent to do it—that is not a slam at you. You already have more than enough—possibly some good, first class cameraman might handle the matter, in a series of articles that would instruct and help the operator. If this would make the World cost more, I for one am perfectly willing to pay the price, but, of course, I am only one. I would like to hear other operators express their view in this matter. In closing let me say that the World is the best paper published relating in any way whatsoever to the moving picture industry.

Well, Brother Ayers, I guess it is up to me to explain what I mean When I commented on the arc controller I was speaking of the action of the electric arc. When I commented on Brother Rubin's letter I understood him to mean the current or voltage of the line not the voltage of the arc. You see it works this way: If the impressed voltage—that is to say, the voltage of the line—be increased, then, assuming the resistance to remain the same, a greater amperage would be forced through that resistance, therefore "the higher the voltage the greater the amperage." On the other hand, speaking simply of the electric arc, as such, if the voltage of the arc be increased (when we speak of the voltage of the arc we mean the voltage across the arc, or, expressed in another way, the drop in voltage across the arc), then the amperage will drop, because higher voltage across the arc means that the arc offers higher resistance. If, on the other hand, the voltage across the arc be decreased, then the amperage will increase, because of the fact that the arc offers less resistance.

Mr. Hallberg is perfectly correct in his statement. What he means, and in fact says, is, that if the carbon points remain separated the same distance, and the amperage be increased, then the voltage across the arc will drop. This is by reason of the fact that the electric arc travels from carbon to carbon along what is known as the "arc stream," which is composed of gases generated in the process of volatization of the carbon. This arc stream acts somewhat the same as a wire, in so far as its resistance be concerned, and if the amperage be increased the arc stream is automatically made greater, because there is a greater volatization of carbon, hence more gas, and if the length of the arc stream remain the same then, its density or diameter being greater, of course its resistance would be reduced, and, conversely if the amperage be decreased without altering the distance of the carbons the arc stream would automatically become smaller and its resistance would rise, thus causing an increase in voltage drop. Mr. Hallberg's answer was perfectly correct as far as it went; the only trouble was he did not go far enough and explain the underlying cause.

If, on the other hand, however, you increase the amperes and do what you would do in actual projection, viz.: slightly increase the length of the arc, then that is something else again, because the exact length of the arc would compensate, or at least partly compensate for the added volume of the arc stream, and total result in voltage rise or drop would depend on the amount of amperage increase and separation.

As to the cameraman matter, the Moving Picture World is, I believe, arranging to take care of that. You could not slam me that way, old man, because I do not pretend to be a cameraman. Personally I do not think there is very much to be gained by the operator understanding camera work, though, of course, broadly speaking, he would gain something.

Many thanks for your kind words about the World. Yes, we think it is the best paper, too. Strange how great minds run in the same general direction.

The light ray stuff will come along as soon as we can test its correctness.

Film Damage.

James Martin, manager Princess theater, Cedar Rapids, Ia., says:

> The enclosed piece of film was taken from "The Diamond from the Sky," Episode No. 9, and was handed me by my operator, W. J. Phelan, with the request that I explain to him the cause of the fault, also tell him how to repair the same. I am passing it on to you for comment. I want to thank you for the many suggestions furnished in the department, and to extend my best wishes for your continued success.

The trouble is due to the printing machine. Just exactly what happened it is rather difficult to say. For approximately six inches the film apparently only moved down half its allotted space, thus making a double exposure. The repair may be made simply by cutting out the bad piece, but this is no excuse for the inspection department of the manufacturer for passing out such a glaring, perfectly obvious fault. I have referred the matter to the North American Film Corporation, who put out "The Diamond from the Sky."

Information?

Albany, New York, says:

> I noticed, recently, where a correspondent in Pennsylvania asked the supposed-to-be expert of a trade publication a question with regard to screens, to which the following reply was made: "The price paid for a screen generally signifies its ultimate value to you, therefore it is safe to say that the better screen costs more money." Now, what is your opinion of this proposition, Brother Richardson?

Why, about all the opinion that I can express is that if this is to be taken as true, then the mirror screen is several times as good as any other, a proposition which might possibly be questioned in some quarters. I have plenty to do, Albany, without bothering with the replies made by others to questions propounded to them.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE SUMMONING SHOT (Biograph), July 5.—There is plenty of dramatic material in this one reel photoplay, but the spirit and determination of the young girl to avenge her father seems rather overdrawn. Isabel Rea carries out the author's conception of the part. Harry Huckins and Frank Newburg offer litelike impersonations.

LEATHER GOODS LADY (Essanay), July 5.—Beverley Bayne is the lady in question, in this one-reel comedy adapted from a story in Munsey's Magazine. The plot reveals a neat bit of romance, which receives the benefit of Miss Bayne's sympathetic acting. The author has had the temerity to make the hero the pilot of a taxicab, and endow him with all the virtues. Even fiction writers must have their little jokes.

A STORY OF THE PAST ("Road o' Strife" No. 14) (Lubin), July 5.—Several of the scenes in this instalment of the Emmet Campbell Hall serial relate to Alene's childhood and take place at her father's court. The incidents showing the revolution are effectively staged. Bernard Siegel carries the burden of the acting all through the reel; he is fully equal to the task.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 53, 1915 (Selig), July 5.—The effects of the earthquake at El Centro, Cal., heads the list. Completing the items. Unveiling monument at Saratoga, N. Y.; Paris pays tribute to statue of Washington; athletes at Harvard Stadium, Cambridge; non-sinkable lifeboat at San Francisco; Chicago Horse Show; flood in Kansas; Lucile fashions; war riots in South Africa; recruits at Rome, Italy; Cornell winning at Poughkeepsie.

THE REVOLT OF MR. WIGGS (Vitagraph), July 5.—A cage of rats are an important part of the dramatis personae in this one-reel comedy. A Suffragette parade, with Kate Price on horseback, at its head, is another source of fun. During the speech-making the rodents and the ladies get mixed up on the platform; the ladies escape first—and add largely to the amusement supply. It is needless to remark that the comedy was written by a man, one Frederic Chapin, by name.

SOME ROMANCE (Kalem), July 6.—Having tried about everything else, including street cleaning, Ham falls in love in this one-reel comedy. He takes the affair quite seriously, but spectators of the film will take it just the reverse.

THE CANNIBAL KING (Lubin), July 6.—A short, lively and wildly-improbable farce. Babe Hardy, as the cannibal king, is wonderfully and fearfully made up. He goes after the fun with right good will and keeps it on the run straight up to the climax. "Ping Pong Woo," a droll cartoon comedy, by Carl Francis Lederer, is on the same reel.

THE COYOTE (Selig), July 6.—James Oliver Curwood has fully sustained his reputation as a scenario writer in this one-reel drama. All the incidents have that inevitableness which is the foundation of sound dramatic construction, and the action which moves forward without one faltering step. The production and acting are on a par with Mr. Curwood's work. Bert Grassby and Norma Nichols have the leading roles.

"DREAMY DUD" IN KING KOO KOO'S KINGDOM (Essanay), July 7.—Another of Wallace A. Carlson's living cartoons, in which a new adventure of Dud and Wag is pictured with much skill and humor. A piece of educational, showing the Grand Canyon, is included on the reel.

THE ADVENTURE HUNTER (Selig), July 7.—A gatling gun mounted on an armored automobile, its bullets demolishing a heavy wooden gate, is a novel and thrilling bit of business in this one-reel drama. It is a regular George Barr McCutcheon romance, dashing young American, lovely princess and all. The atmosphere of a foreign court is very well simulated; but, why the three steins over the door in the king's council chamber?

THE WHITE AND BLACK SNOWBALL (Vitagraph), July 7.—This one-reel juvenile comedy is a page from the book of childhood. A treat for all Bobby Connelly's admirers. Tefft Johnson, author and producer of the film, understands children.

THE CLAIM OF HONOR (Biograph), July 8.—Augusta Anderson, Walter Woodin, William J. Butler and Charles Perley have the leading roles in this one-reel drama, which deals with titled foreigners and plain Americans. The plot is ultra-romantic, proficient acting by the entire cast making the film interesting.

EDUCATION (Essanay), July 8.—A clever comic setting of the familiar situation where the country lad goes to college and learns a lot of things not set forth in the text books. Wallace Beery and Harry Dunkinson are an entertaining pair of rubes, and the reel has been produced in a thoroughly workmanlike manner.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 54, 1915 (Selig), July 8.—The following items make up the number: Models of warships at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; Mystic Shriners parade, Brooklyn; dumping confiscated firearms into Lake Michigan; Atlantic City Baby Carnival; Lucile fashions; Battery F, New York National Guards, at practice; women carpenters, Chicago; riding on surfboard, Oakland, Cal.; woman ambulance surgeon, New York; Serbian war pictures.

BERTIE'S STRATAGEM (Vitagraph), July 8.—W. A. Tremaine has provided Billy Quirk with an opportunity to show what a bewitching young lady he makes when masquerading as one of the fair sex. The comedy is along familiar lines, but is smartly acted, and furnishes a reel of enjoyable nonsense.

BRONCHO BILLY WELL REPAID (Essanay), July 9.—Popular slang would briefly sum up the moral of this one-reel drama by the title, "Getting His." Broncho William attempts to play fast-and-loose with the wrong woman and poetic justice hands him his deserts. The novelty of seeing G. M. Anderson in a role where the other fellow gets the girl will prove interesting to his admirers. The picture bears a close relation to "things as they are."

MONEY! MONEY! MONEY! (Lubin), July 9.—There is freshness of material, also a neat little sermon on unfounded suspicion, in this one-reel drama, by Lawrence S. McCloskey. Joseph Kaufman, Ethel Clayton, Walter Law and William H. Turner, give a most satisfactory account of themselves on the side of the acting, and Mr. Kaufman has again demonstrated his ability as an artistic producer.

LOVE'S WAY (Vitagraph), July 9.—To see a young man saved from making a wreck of his life by meeting the right woman at the right time, is always a satisfactory experience in the theater or in reality. A. H. Miller's one-reel photoplay has such a theme, and S. Rankin Drew, with the assistance of Antonio Moreno, Charles Kent and Edith Storey has placed it skillfully upon the screen.

IT MAY BE YOU (Edison), July 7.—A capital farce motive furnishes "the cue for action" in this one-reel comedy. The construction is apt, the humorous climax being brought about skilfully. Arthur Housman, Dallis Welford, and the other members of the long cast make the performance score heavily.

A TIMELY INTERCEPTION (Biograph), July 9.—Still another proof that D. W. Griffith's earlier pictures were worthy the creator of "The Birth of a Nation," this re-issue, with Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore and W. Christie Miller in the cast has lost none of its entertaining qualities.

OLD OFFENDERS (Biograph), July 10.—The trials which beset the path of a reformed crook are shown in this one-reel drama. It is an ordinarily good photoplay, well acted by Charles H. West, Claire McDowell and the rest of the cast.

THE SCAR OF CONSCIENCE (Edison), July 10.—The excellent acting of George Wright is the most striking feature of this one-reel drama. The story is didactic, and Mr. Wright brings out the moral lesson with telling force. His make-up and performance of the aged man in the closing scenes give the climax great strength.

A WILD RIDE (Episode No. 35 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series), July 10.—Lashed to the driving rod of a moving freight engine is the big stunt performed by "Helen of the Healthy Nerves," in this one-reel episode. Leo D. Maloney also performs a death-defying "thrill" which makes a large demand upon his intrepidity. The entire film comes very near to being sensationalism raised to the nth degree.

THE NEW VALET (Lubin), July 10.—Billie Reeves, once more clad in the familiar trousers which, as Mark Twain remarked of Huckleberry Finn's garment, "bag considerably in the rear and contain nothing," finds a new occupation in this one-reel farce. Most of the action takes place on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, and Billie stumbles through a series of comic mishaps in the old, nonchalant way.

BOUND BY THE LEOPARD'S LOVE (Selig Jungle-Zoo drama), July 19.—This rather grandiloquent title belongs to a one-reel drama written by Wm. H. Lippert. The main motive of the film is a human love story. The foreign atmosphere of the scenes, and the native and Circassian characters, all contribute to a well-made photoplay.

THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT (Kalem), July 5.—The author of this three-reel drama has not minced matters in the least. He has pursued his unpleasant theme to a logical conclusion, the guilty man and woman paying the penalty for their crime. Most of the material has the frankness of the testimony at a coroner's inquest. The attempted assault of Craig upon his daughter is somewhat mitigated by the admiration excited by Marguerite Courtot's acting of the young girl. Her work during this scene is a fine expression of sweet womanliness and outraged innocence.

A STUDIO ESCAPADE (Selig), July 5.—This two-part drama is without a strong central motive. The raid on the studio is entirely unjustified, the revel which takes place being a very innocuous affair. The entire picture lacks vitality. The photography is of the best, and Bessie Eyton, Lillian Hayward, Edward J. Peil and their associates do all in their power to give the play life and reality.

THE SMUGGLER'S WARD (Biograph), July 6.—This is not the best two-reel drama produced by the Biograph. The story is interesting, but the action is forced, and the locale of the play is not stated. The acting is excellent. Gretchen Hartman, Viola Smith, Alan Hale and G. Raymond Nye, being especially meritorious.

THE RAJAH'S TUNIC (Essanay), July 6.—In this two-reel drama, which is a continuation of the checkered career of Dominica, the heroine of "Braga's Double," the author has pushed a risque subject to the limit. The means by which a sculptor forces a woman to pose for him in the altogether, speak more for his artistic instincts than his feelings as a gentleman. The last reel ends as Dominica retires behind a screen to do his bidding. Nell Craig is excellent as the woman.

THE MAN FROM THE DESERT (Vitagraph—Broadway Star Feature), July 6.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 80, issue of July 3.

HAMLET (Knickerbocker Star Features), July 7.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 317, issue of July 10.

THE FRAME-UP (Kalem), July 7.—Ollie Kirby's characterization of the soiled heroine in this two-reel criminal drama, goes a long way toward redeeming the sordid story. The characters and most of their doings are true to life, but, the escape of Feeney from the prison's cage in the court room is more amusing than impressive. By the way, since when have court rooms in this country been equipped with the Italian device for guarding the accused.

THE BEAST (Lubin), July 7.—We all love to see a bully soundly thrashed. Shannon Fyfe has worked up to this situation in his two-reel drama with most convincing visual arguments, and Edgar Jones and Louis Mortelle make the fight very like the real thing. Mr. Jones' production of the photoplay exhibits some novel scenes.

WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY (Lubin), July 8.—The hand of the trained dramatist is apparent in this three-reel photoplay, by Clay M. Greene. It is melodramatic in theme, has a sensational climax, interest which never lags, and has been adequately produced by Joseph W. Smiley.

EBB TIDE (Selig), July 8.—The subject of this three-reel drama is the old tragedy of guilty love. The author has handled it with much refinement of feeling, but after the method of a novelist rather than a playwright. The characters are too prone to analyze their emotions in a poetic strain, and read symbols in the incoming or outgoing tide. Briefly, the play lacks action. Aside from a painting, which only a blind man would add to his collection, the production is thoroughly artistic. Harry Lonsdale, Martha Boucher, Wheeler Oakman and Kathlyn Williams constitute a worthy cast.

EUGENE ARAM (Edison), July 9.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 81, issue of July 3.

HIDING FROM THE LAW (Kalem), July 9.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 77, issue of July 3.

THE COUNTER INTRIGUE (Essanay), July 10.—Melodramatic in theme, this three-reel photoplay, by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., can be recommended from every point of view. The story is gripping, well within the bounds of possibility, and the acting of Beverly Bayne, Sydney Ainsworth, John Cossar and John Thorn equal to all demands.

INSURING CUTEY (Vitagraph), July 10.—Wally Van bounces and bustles through this two-reel comedy of theatrical life in his customary sprightly fashion. The material has the up-to-dateness of a pair of fawn or mouse colored shoes, and Cutey's success in the gentle art of heart-breaking brings about a cleverly-devised climax. The production of the film, and the acting of the other members of the cast, are excellent.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE RIGHT OF WAY (Rolfe).—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 507, issue of July 17.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 27, 115 (Mutual), July 8.—Preceding the main portion of this issue are some interesting views at the war front. Of these scenes the physical re-educating of the wounded soldiers is perhaps the most interesting. Other scenes are, the Varsity race along the Hudson at Poughkeepsie, in which Cornell wins; the opening of the San Antonio river for navigation; suffrage pilgrims arriving in their prairie schooner at Washington, D. C.; Elberta Shipley, Abraham Lincoln's neice, leading the Peace Conference; the Beauty contest at the Biltmore for the selection of a model for the Goddess Electra, and the Herts Yeomanry indulging in horseback riding.

BEPPO, THE BARBER (Komic), July 11.—This is as funny a film as Fay Tincher and Edward Dillon could make it. It belongs to the best class of farce comedy. Beppo innocently impersonating a questionable titled personage gets into no end of trouble.

THE ARROW MAIDEN (Reliance), July 12.—An Indian story, half real and half legend, featuring Billy West, Harry Moody and others. The settings are picturesque and pleasing. The Indian lover is put into a death sleep by the witch and then brought to life by a medicine man. A good number of the out-door type.

APPLIED ROMANCE (Beauty), July 13.—The best that can be said of this picture is that it is "pretty." There are some very artistic touches apparent in the course of the production, which, however, resolves itself into what might be termed "bosh."

A TEN-CENT ADVENTURE (Majestic), July 13.—A good juvenile number, showing how a small boy borrows ten cents from a bank president. When he returns to pay off his note, he saves the bank from robbery. This is better than the average plot for a juvenile subject and holds the interest well.

TO MELODY A SOUL RESPONDS (American), July 14.—A great deal of refined and delicate work has been wasted on the story presented in this picture. It is intended to appeal to the spiritual or poetic side of human nature. Unfortunately its development lies midway between the ridiculous and the sublime. The story centers about a composition by an old violinist which has been recorded by the phonograph. The composition starts with "spring flowers" and ends with "a chorus of angels." Its mission on earth while the spirit of the dead composer roams about, is, of course filled with moral significance.

A BREATH OF SUMMER (Reliance), July 14.—A well-pictured story, in which a girl employed in a garment factory sends notes requesting aid in the pockets of some shirts. Evil persons seek to lure her into fast life, but the hero comes in time to save her. The cast is pleasing and includes Cora Drew, Francelia Billington, Charles Clary and Olga Gray. The action is good and the plot quite novel.

DOT ON THE DAY LINE BOAT (Falstaff), July 16.—Showing how a young reporter procures revenge upon a man who threw him out of his office. Scenes are shown in Albany and on a Hudson steamer, where the girl worms the story out of the victim and has her photograph taken with him for publication. This has some interesting scenes in it, but the plot is not very convincing.

HIS I. O. U. (Thanhouser), July 16.—This story of a lad who escapes from an orphan asylum and is befriended by a newsgirl makes a strong appeal. In later years he becomes senator, but does not forget his pal of the streets. A simple, appealing offering, nicely presented.

YOUR HALF AND MY HALF (Royal), July 17.—A domestic comedy, in which a husband and wife quarrel. They break up the furniture and tear clothing, each taking half. When they come to the child they cannot decide what to do with it. This is only fairly amusing.

OLD JANE OF THE GAIETY (Thanhouser), July 18.—A stage story, picturing the success of a girl dancer. She is about to yield to the advances of a masher when the old property woman interferes. Jane tells the story of her own success and subsequent mistakes. This is pleasingly pictured and makes quite an appeal.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A MAKER OF GUNS (Thanhouser), July 6.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 507, issue of July 17.

THE SECRETARY OF FRIVOLOUS AFFAIRS (American), July 8.—A four-reel screen offering, based on the well-known story by May Futrelle. May Allison and Harold Lockwood are featured; others in the cast are Josephine Ditt, Wm. Ehfe, Carol Holloway, Hal Clements and Lillian Gonzales. This pictures the adventures of a girl who becomes companion to a wealthy woman and eventually marries her son. There is a rush of characters at the beginning and it takes some time to get the run of the story. The interest is strongly aroused, however, by a series of jewel and picture thefts and there is no lack of action. Settings and photography are very attractive. The story is confusing at times, but on the whole makes very good entertainment.

THE HEADLINERS (Reliance), July 10.—Here is an intensely interesting and well-made picture of two reels with George Walsh, Irene Hunt, Tote Du Crow, William Lowery and Philip Castrok in the cast. The picture has melodramatic tendencies, centers around a professional diver (George Walsh), who is engaged in an act at Coney Island, and twice in his pictured existence plays the hero in realistic fashion. Very fine illustrations of artistic composition are displayed in this picture.

THE MOUNTAIN GIRL (Majestic) July 11.—Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis are featured in this two-part picture. The story of the picture is not without interest. A peculiarly weak character as a gambler has been introduced into the production over which one does not feel exactly comfortable. However, the action of the picture is otherwise satisfactory in spite of the gruesome ending, which shows both the gambler and the old mountaineer in the clutches of death.

TRACKED THROUGH THE SNOW (Thanhouser), July 11.—This is an enjoyable picture of western atmosphere with Riley Chamberlain, Helen Badgley, Boyd Marshall, Ernest Warde and John Lehnberg in the principal roles. It presents the story of an old miner who is down on his luck and too proud to accept favors from his associates. During the pursuit of a couple of bandits by the sheriff's posse they take refuge in his cabin, forcing him at the point of the revolver to give them food. His little grandchild by tying a paper with a message to the sheriff to the dog's collar eventually wins the $500 reward offered for the capture of the bandits.

ZACA LAKE MYSTERY (American), July 12.—Despite the fact that rather inconsistent development marks a portion of this two-reel film, there is a charm about the picture that cannot be denied. It is hardly in accordance with modern everyday life for a miner and his daughter to start afoot across country on the trail of a mounted bandit who has robbed them of gold and of their one horse. The story is in other ways good, and has originality. Winnifred Greenwood, George Field and John Steppling have the principal roles.

WHEN AMBROSE DARED WALRUS (Keystone), July 12.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Chester Conklin, Mack Swain and others. Certain scenes in the opening reel border on the vulgar, though others are quite amusing. Vulgarity always interferes with humor and it is poor policy to go back to this sort of thing; it is clean, swift action that has made this form of comedy strong with the public, not suggestiveness. The last reel contains a lively fire scene and is very laughable.

MERCY ON A CRUTCH (Thanhouser), July 13.—A two-reel offering of considerable appeal, telling the story of a poor orphan girl, made a cripple for life by her brutal uncle. She saves the life of a neighboring town marshal, who is mistaken for an outlaw. The story is told in simple, direct manner and is well constructed. Some of the photography is a little dim, but the offering as a whole is quite strong.

CASH PARISH'S PAL (Broncho), July 21.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1788, issue of June 12.

THE MAN WHO WENT OUT (Domino), July 22.—An unusually good two-reel story of military life on the frontier, featuring Herchel Mayall, George Fischer and Margaret Thompson. Mr. Mayall makes a very sympathetic part of the worthless captain who disgraces himself during an Indian scrimmage. Two years later he returns to the fort and gives up his life to save that of his son and the entire garrison. The plot is strong and the scenes are all convincing. The picture is unusually good in every way.

THE PLAY OF THE SEASON (Kaybee), July 23.—A two-reel subject, featuring George Fischer, Estelle Allen, Howard Hickman and others. It shows the manner in which a country girl goes to a play against her parents' wishes. Her father becomes very angry and she runs away with the company. Later she marries her actor friend and he writes a play about her own experiences. Her parents come to the city and see this produced, after which there is a reconciliation. This is well pictured, and while in no sense an unusual story, is entertaining throughout.

North American Film Corporation.

THE WEB OF DESTINY (American), July 12.—Chapter XI of "The Diamond from the Sky," in two reels. Blair returns to Richmond and Mrs. Stanley plans a marriage between him and Esther. Arthur befriends Luke, who is bitten by a rattlesnake. Arthur then uses the money he found to buy some oil wells. The diamond is discovered by an Indian squaw, who hangs it about the neck of her papoose. The number carries along the plot of the story. There is a touch of the mechanical in this number, but the incidental business is good as usual.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

LITTLE PAL (Famous Players), July 1.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 505, issue of July 17.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 53, 1915, Week June 28.—Among the interesting items of this number are the choosing of a model for the Goddess Electra, the competition for which was held at the Biltmore; the women of the munition factories of Great Britain; classday exercises at Cambridge, and the Federal League beaten at their own game by a team of woman Suffragists. This issue is preceded by a series of war scenes taken under the supervision of the French Government.

THE MONGOOSE, Week of July 19.—An interesting and instructive study of this vicious little animal showing its mode of life, its haunts, etc. This is on the same reel with one of the Police Dog numbers.

INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS, PART 3, Week of July 19.—In this instalment of the study of birds the tom-tit has the floor. Especially interesting is this illustration of the mother bird feeding her young, and the young birds, seven or eight in number, preparing for their first flight. On the same reel with the following.

MOORISH GRANADA (Picturesque Spain), Week of July 19.—On the same reel with the above and of exceptional interest, showing various views of the famous Alhambra and its courts. The habits and customs of the people are also exemplified.

ON THE BANKS OF THE CREUSE (France), Week of July 19.—A colored scenic of great beauty on the same reel with the above two subjects.

SAFETY FIRST (Starlight), Week July 19.—Aubrey and Kendig do some of their best work in this film in which, in the endeavor to convince the world that it owes them a living, they get into serious trouble. One of the innovations of the film shows the culprits running in one direction while the earth and all that's on it moves in contrary motion. The effect, needless to say, is extremely amusing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE ISOLATED HOUSE, Week of July 19.—A three-part sequel to "The Hound of the Baskervilles" and distinctly interesting. The disappearing house which is lowered into the river or lifted to a level with a small pier built for the purpose, by means of a device hidden away in the hollow trunk of a tree nearby, forms the foundation for many a gruesome incident. The film was made in England and is a worthy one as regards detail and photography. An excellent cast has been chosen to enact the story.

WHERE THE TRAIL LED, Week of July 19.—This is a two-reel western of fairly interesting parts. Dorothy Davenport and Rupert Julian play leading roles. The story is of the pursuit of a bandit who, to save himself, rescues a woman who has fallen from her horse and carries her to her home, where he is protected from his pursuers. Later he steals to help pay a debt that is hanging over the woman's home.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 31, "The Submarine Harbor"), July.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 509, issue of July 17.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 174 (Universal), July 7.—Pictures of Frank Holt, who attempted to assassinate J. P. Morgan, lead this number, which contains a varied assortment of interesting scenes.

THERE'S MANY A SLIP (Nestor), July 19.—A light comedy, written by Ben Cohn, and featuring Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns, Jack Connolly and Kingsley Benedict. The three young men are rivals for her hand and there is much amusing strife for her favor. The number is presented in a very pleasing manner.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Imp), July 20.—A story by Dwight Cleveland, featuring Wm. Wells, Wm. J. O'Neil and Frances Nelson. The girl is forced to choose the young police officer and the sport, who are rivals for her hand. She has a dream in which she marries the latter and sees them slip into the down and out class. When she awakes she chooses the policeman. Well pictured and quite pleasing.

A HAPPY PAIR (Rex), July 20.—A little comedy number which is pleasing in spite of its mere trifle of a plot. Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips appear as a couple of honeymooners, just getting past the billing and cooing stage. Their first quarrels prove very amusing.

THE CURSE OF A NAME (L-KO), July 21.—Harry Gribbon, Peggy Pearce and others disport themselves in this laughable low comedy. Both the park and office scenes are amusing and the film winds up with a rough house finish. This is acceptable throughout.

THE BURDEN BEARER (Big U), July 22.—A story of secret marriage, featuring Adele Lane, Edward Sloman and Harry Linkey. The girl clerk in a department store marries an architect; the marriage is kept secret so she can retain her job. Later the husband is untrue. He is killed and after his death she marries another. This plot is not particularly strong, but there is a certain naturalness about the story which makes it quite interesting.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Powers), July 22.—This is No. 5 of this series and bears the special title "At the Signal of the Three Socks." This number is one of characteristic nonsense, showing the way in which Detective Duck prevents Lady Baffles from stealing some supposed jewels. There are a number of laughs in this.

JEANNE OF THE WOODS (Victor), July 23.—A scenic number featuring Mary Fuller, Pedro de Cordoba and Charles Ogle. The girl and her lover meet with some diamond smugglers and have stirring adventures; they finally aid in rounding up the gang. A typical north woods story, well photographed and pleasing.

THE DUAL AT DAWN (Joker), July 24.—A low comedy number featuring Max Asher, Milburn Morante, Gale Henry and others. The use of the electric mat at the duel made a good feature. This has a number of laughs in it.

THE HONOR OF KENNETH McGRATH (Powers), July 24.—Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Val Paul appear in this number. Kenneth's uncle allows the blame to rest upon him for the loss of the girl's money, but the hero manages to set matters right. The scenes are so short and choppy that lack of feeling results; with less sudden changes in situations the story would have been much stronger. It makes an average number.

ACCORDING TO VALUE (Laemmle), July 25.—A film story by Harvey Gates and Frank Lloyd, featuring the latter, M. K. Wilson, Marc Robbins and Vera Sisson. The plot concerns a reformed crook and his brother, employed in the same office. The employer tries to induce the former convict to help him make away with some bonds. This is well-constructed and quite dramatic, particularly in the latter scenes where the girl defeats her father's plan.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE UNDERGROUND FOE (Universal Special), July 19.—No 5 of "The Broken Coin" Series. This number contains a number of hand-to-hand conflicts between those seeking to gain possession of the coin halves. There is a mix-up in Count Sachio's lodge, where the Apache gets half of the coin. Later Kitty and Rodeaux make a daring raid on the Apaches' lair. This is a characteristic number and continues the interest.

SCANDAL (Universal), July 19.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1945, issue of June 19.

HOMAGE (Gold Seal), July 20.—A two-reel number by Harvey Gates, featuring Wm. Worthington, Anna Little and Herbert Rawlinson. The story, which has some sympathetic qualities, pictures a financier being taken to prison, after bringing disgrace on himself and death to his wife. He serves a long term and when he is released goes to the home of his now grown son, who does not know him. The father takes work on the premises as gardener and later saves the son from following in his own footsteps. The cast is pleasing and the story well constructed throughout.

THE WEIRD NEMESIS (Victor), July 21.—A two-reel offering by G. E. Jenks, featuring Hazel Buckham, Alan Forest, Helen Leslie and others. A wealthy young idler makes love to a country girl, ruins and deserts her, the girl drowning herself. Inez, the sister of the victim, determines upon vengeance. She meets the idler and through her understanding of hypnotism works upon his conscience until he also drowns himself. The story is not at all pleasant, but has a certain weird strength. The construction is odd and the plot not so obvious as frequently happens.

THOU SHALT NOT LIE (Imp), July 22.—This two-reel story of an absconding bank teller holds the interest, in spite of its rather weak moral. The young teller goes to the country with his wife and child, becomes prosperous and returns the money he has taken from the bank. The bank detective still persists and finally locates him, but the teller's wife saves the detective's life and he refuses to prosecute. The development of this story is very good. Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau play the leads.

THE MAD MAID OF THE FOREST (Bison), July 24.—A two-reel number, written by Ben Cohen and featuring Gene Gauntier and Jack J. Clark. This story of the insane girl discovered in the woods by the young doctor, with two badgers as pets, is simple in plot and well constructed. There is a sort of picturesque wildness in both story and settings. It is the best number in which we have seen these two performers. Some of the photography is not so clear, but most of it is good; the yarn itself holds the interest.

William Duncan

WILLIAM DUNCAN, whose greatest part in moving pictures is William Newbold, in the picturization of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's remarkable story of life, "The Chalice of Courage," is a member of the Western Vitagraph Company, with studios at Santa Monica, Cal. Mr. Duncan was born near Dundee, Scotland, although the greater part of his life has been spent in the United States. During his early youth he indulged in athletic sports of every sort, his scholastic records being so excellent as to induce him to become a professional. He is the possessor of many trophies as the result of his prowess in competitive sports. Mr. Duncan has distinguished himself as a writer on the staff of the Physical Culture Magazine and was associated with the famous McFadden Physical Culture Health Home as physical director. Later, he opened a studio in Philadelphia, where he taught members of the Quaker City's foremost society.

William Duncan.

During all the years which Mr. Duncan devoted to athletics and the physical culture propaganda, a desire to make a name as an actor kept forcing itself to the fore until finally, unable to combat this longing, he became a member of the Forepaugh Stock Company in Philadelphia. In the world of mimic art he found his forte and achieved rapid advancement. Every succeeding engagement, which included membership in the Baker Stock Company, Rochester, New York, and the Hopkins Stock Company in Memphis, Tenn., added to his importance as a player. After obtaining a thorough knowledge of the requirements of his art in the school of stock experience, he won the plaudits of more cosmopolitan audiences through road tours as the featured member in such well-known productions as "Sowing the Wind," "The Parish Priest," "David Garrick," "The Man on the Box," etc.

Finding that pictures were cutting into his business, Mr. Duncan decided to "cut" into the pictures and joined a Chicago film producing company in the capacity of leading man, scenario writer, director and later, combined that of manager with his other duties. Mr. Duncan has written, produced and played the leads in over a hundred of his own scenarios.

Since joining the Western Vitagraph Company Mr. Duncan has added materially to his reputation as a leading man by his masterly life portrayals in such pictures as "The Man from the Desert," "A Child of the North," "Anne of the Mines" and "The Chalice of Courage."

Lloyd V. Hamilton

The "Ham" of Kalem's Famous "Ham" Comedies.

LLOYD V. HAMILTON can be said to be a man of one idea. This consists of a determination to get the last laugh possible out of every role in which he happens to be cast. A scenario is of little or no use to the director who produces the "Ham" Comedies for the simple reason that Hamilton does just as he pleases when in front of the camera. The result as every photoplay patron will testify, is invariably sheer, unalloyd fun.

According to Ham, his first venture in the theatrical field occurred when he was twelve years old. With two other boys of the same age, Ham ventured to give a performance of "Jekyll and Hyde." The performance was scheduled to be given in the barn belonging to Hamilton's father.

Lloyd V. Hamilton.

To make room for the production it was necessary for the youthful impresario and his assistants to move the stalls and put two of his father's horses into another man's barn. Now, Hamilton had seen Richard Mansfield in the title role of "Jekyll and Hyde." The particular scene which had impressed him most was the choking scene. Hamilton cast himself for the leading role and picked out a boy to choke whom he knew he could lick in case the victim got angry.

The admission fee was one gunny sack, or two bottles, for reserved seats. These consisted of chairs stolen from the homes of the various players. The show would have been a grand success had not the big brother of the boy whom Ham was choking, interfered. Perhaps it was lucky he did, because had he waited half a minute longer it would have been too late. However, Ham didn't care, he was richer by fifteen cents—the value of the gunnysacks and bottles taken in at the door.

Having been bitten by the stage bug it wasn't very long before Ham made another try at it. This time, however, it was with a real company. His first job consisted of carrying a spear in a Shakespearian production. In the course of time he graduated into speaking parts and eventually teamed up with "Bud" Duncan, who at present is his partner in fun, in the "Ham" Comedies.

Although Hamilton has appeared with James K. Hackett in such productions as "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Monsieur Beaucaire," and "Don Caesar's Return," and is rated as a finished actor, he has always possessed a special fondness for comedy work. Romantic drama was all very well, but—. Consequently, when Ham was given an opportunity to become identified with Kalem, he promptly accepted it and was assigned to one of the comedy companies.

It wasn't very long before Ham demonstrated that he was in a class by himself as a comedian. His droll style is unlike that of any other comedy character on the screen and it has won him a host of admirers. Some of the forthcoming "Ham" Comedies to be released by Kalem are "Some Romance," "A Flashlight Flivver," "The Spook Raisers," and "The Toilers."

Light (continued).

WHATEVER increases the energy of Molecules, increases in the same proportion the energy of vibration of each molecule as by increasing the amount of electric current or energy through the arc, its brightness is increased, and in some way which is not yet fully understood, the vibrating molecules pull the surrounding ether about, and set that ether in vibration. They do not simply dilate and contract, but they distort the ether as they vibrate, and the waves produced in the ether are waves of transverse distortion. As before explained, a transverse movement is one that is directly across or at right angles to the line of direction. The greater the amount of energy possessed by the molecules, the more energetically and also the more irregularly and rapidly they vibrate; and hence, while the molecules of a comparatively cool body will give rise only to waves of comparatively small frequencies, those of a very hot body will give rise to a mixture of waves of many frequencies, up to the most rapid known. All these waves are propagated through the ether with the same velocity, about 186,000 miles per second. The waves produced by the vibration of molecules range in frequency from about 20,000,000,000,000 to about 40,000,000,000,000,000 oscillations per second; and the wave-length in ether accordingly varies about $\frac{1}{3,250,000}$ of an inch to about $\frac{1}{1675}$ inch. The waves are therefore very small and their presence is a matter of inference from the phenomena to which they give rise, especially the phenomena of light.

The ether-waves, as they travel through the ether, are all alike in every respect except that of size: and in that respect they may differ in (1) wave-length and in (2) the amplitude of vibration.

In figure number one, AB represents a ray of light traveling in the direction indicated by the arrow. The curved line represents the light waves. CD is the amplitude or extent of the vibration and EF the wave length.

*Copyright, 1915, by The Chalmers Publishing Co.

Waves differing in wave-length differ in the kind of effect which they produce when they impinge upon a solid body. Within a particular limited range of frequency 392,000,000,000,000 to 757,000,000,000,000 per second—if they fall upon the eye they produce a sensation of light

Fig. 5—Daylight Studio of Ribbed Glass, With Auxiliary Electric Lighting Equipment.

Of these, the slowest the waves with the least frequency and the greatest wave-length produce a sensation of red light; as the frequency increases the sensation produced by them is successively that of what we call orange-red, orange, orange-yellow, yellow, yellow-green, green, greenish-blue, blue, blue-violet, and violet light. Waves of greater frequency than those which produce a sensation of violet do not produce any sensation in the eye at all; but they do affect a photographic plate; they induce chemical action and are called ultra-violet or actinic waves. Note, however, that there is no fixed line of demarcation between light producing and actinic waves; the former may also give rise to chemical changes such as the darkening of a piece of photographic paper; but their effect is not, with the majority of substances which are affected by light, as great as that of the shorter ultra-violet waves. Ether-waves too slow to be visible are called infra-red waves; and they are very effective in heating a body upon which they fall; their energy is taken up by the body upon which they strike.

and the body becomes hot. Note again, however, that there is no line of demarcation between the infra-red waves and the other kinds mentioned, for light-producing or luminous waves can heat a body upon which they fall, and even the infra-red waves can on the other hand affect chemical decomposition in particular chemical substances, so that for example, Major Abney has succeeded in making a photograph of a hot kettle by means of specially prepared photographic plates, exposed to the invisible infra-red waves radiating from the kettle. As it happens, however, the energy of the longer waves, as we find them in sunlight, enormously exceeds that of the luminous waves, and they are therefore more powerful in their heating effect; and they are distinctively called dark heat-waves.

These kinds of waves may be produced all at the same time, by the vibration of molecules; and the greater the energy of the molecules, that is the higher the temperature, the greater is the tendency to the formation of light-waves and actinic waves.

When the rare and infusible earth called thoria, mixed with a little ceria, is heated in the hot region of Bunsen flame, we have the bright incandescence of a Welsbach mantle. Other rare earths present analogous effects; magnesia and lime and zirconia have also been variously applied for the purpose of producing luminous incandescence, as in the lime-light, in which lime is heated by an oxyhydrogen flame.

The temperature which an electric spark causes the air in its track to attain makes that air glow brightly, so that a luminous flash is produced. The filament in incandescent lamps is caused to glow by its resistance to the electric current transforming the electric energy to radiant energy as in the carbon and metal filament lamps and the thorium glowers in the Nernst lamps.

When a hydrocarbon gas or vapor is burned in a flame, chemical changes occur: acetylene is produced; the acetylene contains much stored-up energy. When heated to a certain temperature it suddenly decomposes, with great evolution of energy: the decomposition is explosive: the temperature of the hydrogen and carbon produced by the decomposition is very high, and a large proportion of the waves into which the surrounding ether is thrown consists of waves of high frequency; hence the luminosity of a candle or gas-flame. Besides this, we have heavy hydrocarbonaceous residues from the hydrocarbon molecules, which are heated by the combustion of the hydrogen; they become white-hot and emit light, until they meet sufficient oxygen to burn them away, directly or indirectly, into water and carbon-dioxide.

When chemical action is rapid enough to raise the temperature, light may be produced: copper filings produce a flash of light when dropped into chlorine; phosphorus burns brightly in oxygen. Even the hardest steel wire burns with great brilliancy in oxygen gas. But if the process of chemical combination be slower, so that the heat liberated during the chemical combination is largely radiated or conducted away as it is evolved, the temperature therefore not rising materially the waves produced may be all too slow to produce the sensation of light.

Practically all modern studios employ artificial lights of some kind to supplement natural daylight on dull days and many studios use artificial light entirely for the illumination of their indoor or interior settings. The principle lamps used for this purpose are either arc lamps of one type or another or the Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor tubes; several other types of lamp such as the nitrogen filled metallic filament lamps and the Cooper-Hewitt quartz tube light have been tried for lighting but none of them have, as yet, gone into general use. There have appeared on the market lately several kinds of magnesium and aluminum torches to be used for exterior scenes at night and for assisting daylight in gloomy places, but they cannot be used to advantage for interior work on account of the enormous volume of dense white smoke which they produce while burning and in addition, they are very costly.

TYRONE POWER IN "A TEXAS STEER."

The late Charles Hoyt was among the world's most famous writers of comedy. Best of all, he confined his efforts to true comedy of American life and American people, hitting off the frills and foibles of the Yankees as cleverly and as good-naturally as did Gilbert and Sullivan caricature the weaknesses and the characteristics of the English in their comic operas. "A Texas Steer" is considered Hoyt's best comedy, although he was the author of many laughable farces. In this elaborate picture play in five reels, which will be released by the Selig Company on July 26, Tyrone Power, the distinguished actor, assumes the role of "Maverick Brander." The reputation of Mr. Power as a stage artist is too well known to necessitate any mention here. Suffice it to say that Mr. Power has brought out every little detail and shading in this role of great possibility, and gives "Brander" that human interest touch so essential to the success of the character. He is ably supported by an all-star cast of actors and actresses and nothing in the original comedy is omitted in this excellent film version. This film will be released through V-L-S-E as one of the famous Selig Red Seal Plays, and from hundreds of inquiries being received, it will be received with pleasure by the exhibitors and their patrons.

PATHE TO FILM ARNOLD BENNETT'S "HUGO."

Pathe has added to the long list of novels and plays by famous men already acquired, "Hugo," by Arnold Bennett, the celebrated English author. "Hugo" is in Mr. Bennett's very best vein, and may be considered to be the best of his works. It is an exceedingly powerful story, dealing with the surprising adventures of one Hugo, owner of a big department store, in trying to save a beautiful girl employee from the clutches of a Svengali-like villain, Ravengar.

To many Mr. Bennett will be best remembered as the author of "Milestones," the play which enjoyed such a phenomenal run on the American stage.

Details as to the cast and production of "Hugo" will be announced later.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

ALTHOUGH we are still in the mid-summer season there are distinct movements in many quarters of the theatrical field preparatory for the season of 1915-16. This is especially so in the Eastern field. The remarkable climatic changes of the past few years have encouraged the regular theatrical managers in the belief that they can reopen their houses with profit, although the time elapsing between the close of the Spring and opening of the Fall seasons appears to extend over a period of but a few weeks. Calls for rehearsals have already been issued and within a month many shows will be ready for the road again, if not already en route. A large number of professional people who took up picture work upon the close of the regular season in the spring are now signing new contracts and are daily expecting calls from the managements. The exodus of professionals from the motion picture studios for the stage will be more noticeable than in any preceding year. One of the reasons for this is that in no other season has there been so many applications for engagements at the picture studios as during the present one. The last season in their own field was a disastrous one and necessity, coupled with the promising features of photo play work, brought them to the various studios and agencies in droves. As the supply is greater than the demand the natural course for the professionals to pursue will be a return to the stage. When the summer season closes there will be more professional people still engaged in photo play work than at the close of any previous summer in the history of the business, yet the number returning to the stage will be so large that it may have a tendency to create an impression that the professionals are forsaking the photo play, which is certainly not the case. A well known agent stated the other day that notwithstanding the efforts of managers and players to discount failures in the regular theatrical field last season in face of the growing success of the photo play the condition of a great majority of professionals at the close of the season was deplorable. With all seriousness he added that on short notice he could furnish a mob of men and women at schedule rates for picture work. To them the early preparations for the Fall and Winter season are like rays of sunshine breaking through the clouds.

The climatic conditions that have brought about this apparently favorable outlook for the professionals have not laid as kindly a hand upon the exhibitors conducting airdomes. Proprietors of these places have complained bitterly. Threatening and rainy weather has cut into the business so badly the past few seasons that it would not be surprising if open-air shows should become things of the past, except where managers have combination out-door and in-door places. The "sand lot show" is evidently doomed. Two rains in a week will at least eat up the profit of such places, and where the management tries to give a good show such conditions will put him in a hole. It will not take an unusually keen observer to note that the small, cheap exhibitor is gradually being driven out of the picture business with nature as a strong ally of the larger exhibitors. A few years ago the motion picture houses were obliged to close during the summer for the same reason that the regular theaters did. With new blood and increased capital invested in the business structures that have ample ventilation and other modern conveniences now remain open all the year round, and as these places are multiplying the small exhibitor with his lone lot is decreasing in number. This is not to be regretted. There have been many worthy men in the business on a small scale and sympathy goes out to them when they must face the inevitable condition of "survival of the fittest." The passage of the nickelodeon type of picture houses is wished for on the principle that the sacrifice of the individual must not stand in the way of promoting the interests of the motion picture business as a whole. This does not mean the annihilation of the five and ten cent houses. Far from it. They alone can exist in some localities and they are a source of big revenue to both exchanges and the producers of films. But the construction and management of the cheaper places must be kept up to date if they are to survive, otherwise others will step in and take the trade.

One of the best arguments placed at the disposal of the people opposed to the professional censorship agitators is the decision of Gov. Dunne, of Illinois, in vetoing the Olson censor bill. The Governor held that as Chicago already has an official Board of Censors the exhibitors of that city would be subjected to double taxation if a State Board were created. A prominent attorney of this city states that if the taxation theory is made the battle cry throughout the country the agitators can be put to rout. The National Board of Censors in this city does not figure in the proposition because it is a voluntary organization and those operating under it do so voluntarily; hence, New York state, under present conditions, is not in a position to take advantage of Gov. Dunne's ruling. It has no local or state official boards, and therefore no official taxation. However, in every state where there are two or more Boards of Censorship and fees are charged for the examination of films, there is a splendid chance for a successful fight on constitutional grounds. The fees charged by these Boards, this attorney contends, are taxes. If the views of the attorney are correct it would seem an easy matter to pull the main prop from under the agitators. If the burden of taxation should be taken from the shoulders of the motion picture people as individuals and placed upon the towns and cities creating the political berths perhaps the taxpayers would sit up and give more attention to the censorship question than they have in the past.

The announcement that the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association has inaugurated motion pictures in its 12,000 seat auditorium at Ocean Grove, N. J., is belated information. Motion pictures were shown in the auditorium as far back as twelve years ago. Taliesin Morgan, who recently resigned as manager of the Broadway Theater in this city to become manager of the Auditorium, was motion picture manager of the same place at least ten years ago. The Auditorium had a big revenue from the pictures at ten cents a head before Asbury Park had the foresight to have motion picture houses of its own. When the people of that place woke up and the managements spent money and attracted the people with more up to date shows the Auditorium naturally suffered. No, the camp meeting people have not delayed to this late day to inaugurate motion pictures. They have only re-entered the field and if they exercise the same parsimony in the selection of programmes that they used to they will soon be out of it again.

The New York World facetiously comments upon the prediction of Mr. Samuel L. Rothapfel that in time the moving picture will do the work of our schools and colleges and says there is danger that the next generation will know too much if this educational revolution by films is carried through. The paper says if the pictures are to make high school graduates of children at twelve years and college graduates at sixteen we shall have boys graduating as picture lawyers and doctors before they are old enough to vote. This is indeed very humorous, but the editorial columns of the World would be better employed in treating the subject more seriously and endeavoring to persuade parents to take more interest in motion picture films of an educational character. No one, even the enthusiastic Mr. Rothapfel, will venture the prediction that motion pictures will supplant the schools and colleges. As an educational factor the pictures have been endorsed by leading schools, colleges and instructors of the world. Many of the travel views upon the market will convey to the minds of children more about the various countries, the customs of the inhabitants, the birds and animals, the uses they are put to, how the people live and provide themselves with the necessities of life, how the countries are reached, and various other sources of information than they could glean by reading and study for years after acquiring the voting age. The vividness with which the screen conveys the knowledge leaves an impression upon the mind far more indelible than that received by word of mouth or reading. Educational subjects have not become a very popular form of entertainment and never will supplant the ordinary films in the picture houses, but with a campaign of education which the press can very properly take up the educational films can be made invaluable to both old and young. Several weeks ago the Women's Club of Atlanta inagurated a series of educational motion picture shows at a theater every Saturday morning but the lack of interest shown by the parents and children has so discouraged the organization that it contemplates giving up the work. This opens up a field for the Atlanta and other newspapers. They devote columns to reviews of books and other educational agencies. Why not treat the educational motion pictures in the same manner? The only complaint thus far made in connection with such pictures is the scarcity of them. The answer of the producers is that such lack of interest as Atlanta complains of prevents them from making more expenditures on such subjects. Evidently the newspapers have failed in their duty to the people in this direction because, like the parents and children, they have been unable to get away from the amusement idea. As public educators, the newspapers have an excellent opportunity in the educational film field.

Famous Metro Star Talks of Art and Acting—Thinks Directors Deserve First Credit for Photoplays.

By Lynde Denig.

POSSESSING a militant artistic conscience, the kind of a conscience that finds itself at odds with the conventional interview, because in the conventional interview it is customary to be politely untruthful, Mme. Olga Petrova allowed her conscience to get the better of conventions and told the truth. These, then, are not the thoughts of Mme. Petrova, tinted, toned and softened by a tactful press agent. They bear upon acting on the stage and before camera; upon the psychology of an audience and how it must be recognized; upon the personality of players and upon what is required of a picture actor in contradistinction to the demands of the spoken drama. They bear chiefly on these things with occasional departures to related side issues; but first a sketch of Mme. Petrova.

Mme. Olga Petrova.

Under the direction of Herbert Blache, in the Popular Plays and Players productions, "The Tigress" and "The Heart of a Painted Woman," she showed herself to be an emotional actress of extraordinary power. She has just completed "The Vampire," and is engaged to act the leads in seven more pictures, one every three months. So much for her photoplay accomplishments and prospects. She was born in Poland, but was taken to England as a child, and when twenty years old made her first professional appearance in Shakespearean repertoire in that country. From her earliest recollection she possessed an impulse for dramatic expression that found an outlet despite parental objections. In America she scored in an odd vaudeville act of her own designing and again in "Panthea," played at the Booth Theater, won popular and artistic approval. She is still under contract with the Shuberts, who, in September, will star her in "Salvation," a play from her own pen, later to be done in pictures by the Popular Plays and Players.

Mme. Petrova is too pronounced, to virile a type to be classified as a pretty woman. She is, however, extraordinarily handsome, with a beauty vivified by a quick intelligence and ideas. Her voice is cultivated and, as not infrequently is the case with actresses of European training, she speaks English musically and correctly. Above all, she gives the impression of possessing a rich emotional temperament. It shows in her eyes, in her voice, in the fervor with which she states her convictions.

"How did you happen to go into pictures?" we asked.

"I was playing in 'Panthea' in Chicago without the first thought of photoplay work, when it seemed wise to accept an offer that did not interfere with my engagement. The first picture was a success and there was nothing to prevent my signing a contract for others. Merely considered from the standpoint of publicity, an actress gains more from being starred in pictures shown throughout the country than could be purchased for $50,000 expended in advertising. Acting in pictures is distinctly worth while."

"Artistically worth while?" we ventured.

"Oh, yes, of course, but the director really makes a photoplay," Mme. Petrova replied, "and the laurels belong to him. To my way of thinking the director is seldom given half enough credit for bringing a story of chaos. He selects people resembling the required types, shows them how a scene should be played, and granting the rudiments of acting and a facility for mimicry, a player should not have much difficulty in repeating his movements. With scenes being taken out of sequence, the last first and the first last, I imagine many players make an acceptable appearance without having anything like a clear conception of the story as a whole."

"What then are the requirements of a successful picture actress as distinct from those of the stage?"

To this Mme. Petrova replied: "Probably the first demand of the screen, if a girl is to become really popular, is that she appear attractive. This also is demanded by the stage, although not to quite the same degree. The pretty, winsome, appealing girl, who photographs well under all circumstances, may go far in pictures on the strength of those qualities alone. If she supplements them with intelligence so much the better. There is scope for a display of intelligence in facial changes and movements of the body. Many of the most gifted actresses in America are appearing in photoplays at the present time, but I suppose that does not alter the fact that a photoplay, insofar as the actor is concerned, at least, is intellectually simple when compared to the spoken drama.

"A stage actress, in any play worthy of the name, is appealing to an intellectually exacting audience and to do so effectively she must possess something deeper than a superficial knowledge of life and of the emotions experienced by the people to whom she is appealing. The charm that reaches out to an audience through an intangible expression of personality, as well as through the voice, may be completely lost on the screen. I'm rather inclined to believe that it generally is lost in our most strongly individual players. Photography has a way of neutralizing distinctive features. Red hair is no longer red, eyes lose their coloring, and while we get the correct outline of a figure, the substance seems different. On the screen a player may take on a new and equally likable individuality, but it is not the same. It is possible to lead a sort of double artistic life in this respect."

Being an author as well as an actress, Mme. Petrova explained how she arranged the act in which she successfully toured the country. The psychology of a vaudeville audience was simple enough, as she found it. She caught the eye on her first appearance in a startling serpentine costume; next the ear by singing in four registers; then she introduced an oddity for comedy effect, and after that there was no difficulty in presenting as serious an artistic effort as she chose. Of the attitude of a picture audience she has less definite notions, although she is inclined to believe that it is looking for mental relaxation, rather than exercise, which, of course, may be highly desirable. And quite apart from their benefit to the public, she regards pictures as a fortunate institution in that they give employment to so many thousand deserving men and women.

The Running Fight Improved by Pruning

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE writer upon a request of the producer has looked at the feature known as "The Running Fight" after a good deal of pruning had been done, reducing the length of the play from six to five reels. The pruning had been done most intelligently and painstakingly and substantially along the lines indicated in a review published in a recent issue of The Moving Picture World. The last reel especially was treated with considerable skill. All cutting was performed with an eye to simplifying and thereby strengthening the story. As a result there is marked improvement. The climax now appears logical and the whole action more probable. The titles have added to the general improvement.

Not too much stress can be laid on the excellent photographic qualities of the feature. The film is remarkable for this outstanding feature even in this day of high photographic standards. The camera man has handled his light and shade with consummate skill. A word of special praise is due to the strikingly realistic scenes portraying the "run" on the "Tri-State" bank. It is all true to life and the direction of these scenes is beyond all praise. There is a tone of realism in all the portrayals of the bank scenes which is deserving of the highest commendation and may be recommended for general imitation. Here is another instance of what can be done by judicious editing and assembling.

MELS IS LUBIN PUBLICITY MAN.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company announces the appointment of Edgar Mels, formerly photoplay editor of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, as its new publicity manager. Mr. Mels is a New York newspaper man, having been in the course of time dramatic editor of the old New York Morning Advertiser, managing editor of Pearson's Magazine, and associate editor of Satire.

THE AYLESWORTH PICTURES.

ERE LONG the forests will contain no secrets. The The hunted no longer carries guns to kill and destroy, rather he takes the camera to discover and record the habits and haunts of animals and birds. But a few years ago actual pictures of wild animals amid the freedom of their forest homes were a sensation; now they are of frequent occurrence. Formerly we knew little of the private life of the denizens of the wilds, now familiarity breeds contempt of danger. Kearton, Rainey and Saulsbury have each given us pictures of their daring hunts, raids and patient watching which have delighted and educated us; now we have the Aylesworth series, which is increasingly interesting, because they belong to our own hemisphere. Wild animal life—hunting big game in the Canadian Rockies and Alaska. Like their predecessors these pictures are all that may be expected of them, they are full of life and incidents at once thrilling, interesting and very instructive, they increase the value of this class of picture and cannot be too vividly exhibited.

THE BIBLE?

What has the Bible to do with moving pictures? From the various suggestions for these notes, it will probably appear that the Bible is very much in evidence in every phase of moving picture work:

Making of pictures—exhibiting of pictures, and—their reception by the public.

Making.

The Bible in the making of pictures has proved pre-eminent. Many of the best films are of Bible subjects, and, it may be, that the best films yet to be produced will come from Bible subjects, it is beyond all argument that for life portrayals the Bible is supreme. That eminent producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, says, "The Bible is the greatest book in the world to-day, and always will be, even aside from its religious aspect, because it is the only book which dares to tell the truth. I think the Bible contains the greatest food for motion pictures of any book ever published."

When motion pictures may fail, says Mr. Griffith, is "when they fail to grasp the stupendous immensity of the art they are supposed to represent." Pictures must be true to life, and, under no circumstances will artificiality replace truth. Another value possessed by the moving picture lies in the fact that it can reproduce and show emotions and feelings impossible to present upon the stage, here the screen is superior to the stage and can profitably use its superiority. An authority says "the motion picture can show anything, from the feelings of a plant, to the growth and fall of an empire." These statements coupled with the experiences of the past in the use of Bible subjcts speak volumes indeed, if from the few Bible scenes depicted there comes such power, what will be the result when the great volume is further explored by the capable producers.

Exhibiting.

In the exhibiting of pictures there is a standard of excellence to which the enterprising exhibitor aspires. That guide which is capable of giving rules of life for all mankind under all possible contingencies is held in the highest possible esteem, yea, even reverence by all. In like manner, in any particular phase of life that guide which is prepared as applicable to that particular phase of life is also esteemed.

In the exhibiting of pictures there is a standard, which must be observed if perfect results and educational values are to be attained. In a primary sense it would seem that there are three essentials to perfect exhibiting: Artistic projection, choice of program, highest moral results. Is there a guide whereby the exhibitor may feel himself safely led to attain these desirable results? There are several, and it is according to the free choice of the exhibitor which one he selects; it cannot seem possible that any of them are anything but good, but any one of them which seeks to reach the highest possible standards deserves special mention. Among exhibitors at large the writer reads in an English moving picture journal, The Moving Picture World is called, "The Exhibitors, or Film Bible." This title, while complimentary, was never sought in praise, but without doubt, if attaining an objective by actual merit and highest motives has been accomplished. The Moving Picture World has deliberately sought the position of leadership and looks upon the designation of the "Exhibitors Bible," as one to be lived up to in a larger measure in the future; surely such a title must never be stained. The three-fold aspect of truest kinematography—the picture, the projection, the moral and educational value are standards never to be allowed to depreciate.

The Public.

The average reception of the moving pictures by the public has been commendable. As a jury the people at large have proved trustworthy, swift to appreciate the good, equally swift to condemn the unfit, they have proved that a people whose standard is the Bible are capable of the proper censorship which the moving picture demands and expects. Of course, there are extremists, the pendulum of criticism always swings to the two extremes, when this occurs, a true judgment has to be sought; as an example here is a case in point: "This godless 'movie' craze is increasingly creating a morbid desire for Sunday amusement, that feasts as a vampire on the vitals of religion." The Rev. R. A. White, Nebraska. Probably this is about the most bitter denunciation of the moving pictures yet spoken and printed; how shall it be dealt with? The answer is simple, we will call upon the Bible to decide.

The wise man in the Proverbs says: "A man is first in his own cause, but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." The above reverend gentleman is certainly first in this—his own cause of bitter denunciation, but as his neighbor the writer must "search him." The statement that moving pictures are "godless" (presuming true Godlessness is meant), is absolutely false as there is no "amusement" in which there are so many "religious features" as in the moving pictures.

The stage which is the only other great attraction comparable, has no equal with the screen in its superior moral and educational religious possibilities.

The "creating a morbid desire" is certainly a newly manufactured criticism, even if applied to the Sunday question. Which answer would a certain New York clergyman who has made himseld and his church a new power by aid of the moving pictures make to this Nebraskan's violence. Rightly used the moving pictures are to those who know and use them, positively feeding religion, and not "feasting on the vitals of religion." This new critic is evidently very ignorant of the great cry being made against the pictures by the enemies of religion whose irreligious business are suffering because of the righteous and moral effects of the moving pictures. The principles of the Bible are in the pictures ever in a growing degree; truly small in the beginning, yet of fair proportions now and constantly increasing. The moving pictures are established educators, there is no choice of their acceptance or rejection, there are here permanently, and can be used as the moral educators of mankind, and, quoting Director Griffith again (a moving picture man and not a clergyman), "the Bible contains the greatest food for moving pictures possible." Is not this the opportunity the church should seize and enlarge upon?

THROUGH THE EYES OF THE CHURCH.

The Bishop of Peterborough, England, recently appointed a Social Service Committee to inquire into social conditions in the Diocese.

Concerning moving pictures this committee reports that they are "the prevailing form of amusement." The report further shows that 90 per cent. of the audiences are between the ages of 25 years and those in their 'teens. Of the pictures they say, "the majority are of the novelette description, often sensational, interspersed with accidents and crimes. There are, however, films of a much better character; scenic, natural objects, public events and subjects of general interest; it is also apparent that the characters of the pictures are of an upward tendency."

In conclusion the report records the opinion of the committee that the picture houses turn the young people from other and more common evils, saying: "It is certainly better that the young folks should be in these places of amusement which are in public view, orderly and under strict supervision, than that they should be on the streets or at the bars of the public houses."

The above report is both fair and commendable, it also shows that conditions in England are similar to those which exist in this country.

British Notes.

A QUESTIONABLE move toward "compulsory charity" has been introduced by the managers of a few prominent moving picture theaters in the provinces. In each case it takes the form of a penny war-tax upon the admission charges to the better seats of the house. Shilling seats at one place have been advanced to a shilling and a penny, while the ninepenny seats now cost tenpence. In each case the odd penny goes to one or other of the war relief funds.

The committee of the Kinematograph Exhibitors Association have been commissioned by the Parliamentary Recruiting Committee to prepare a film for the express purpose of stimulating recruiting through the medium of the screen. The author is Max Pemberton, whose fascinating fiction is known throughout the two worlds, and the productive responsibilities have been accepted by the London Film Company.

I have just had posted to me from an American friend in the Metropolis a recent copy of a certain New York daily newspaper containing an account of the advent into the British market of a syndicate already well known by name. Intelligent advertisement, whether in the form of a free boost in a newspaper or of the more easily recognizable trade display, is without doubt the finest lubricant for the modern business machine, but when these announcements seek to cast ridiculous aspersions upon one's competitors they fail in their main purpose and their intended stimulus degenerates into nausea. It is much too late in the day for any ordinary commercial undertaking to take the film industry by storm, either on this side or in the States, and too late at all to take in such a statement as—"American manufacturers have done little or nothing to exploit the foreign market properly. They have appointed agents. * * * In most cases mere automata. Their office hours are usually from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m., with Friday afternoons and Saturday off." Extension and developments from America seriously interests the entire trade in this country for their record so far is one of brilliant success, but whatever concern openly professes to outshine in ten minutes with its own electric luminosity the achievements of ten years had better remember the legend of the phoenix before it is too late.

The evergreen productions of Miss Florence Turner still retain their old popularity and at the first unspooling of "Alone in London," she was presented with a gold watch from a group of her trade well-wishers.

"Three Weeks," the picturization of the novel of Elinor Glyn, has been banned in Lancashire for about three weeks now. Last week, however, it received the censor's approval and the Reliable Company's feature is in general demand.

Mr. F. M. Thornton, who will be most familiar to American picture fans as the producer of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "Jane Shore," has made good use of the opportunity of utilizing Indian native soldiers in his forthcoming version of "The Faith of a Child," a story from the pen of Niranpan Pal. The wounded Indian troops from La Bassee and Neuve Chapelle recuperating in this country were employed for those scenes visualizing Indian frontier fights. This subject is the first release of the newly formed Lotus Feature Film Company, of Catford, London.

The trials and tribulations of James Slevin, the California camera man, who picturized Pope Pius X., have inspired Cleveland Moffat to romantic heights, and he has written an exceedingly interesting account of the epoch-making event.

The Hepworth Company have at last induced Sir Arthur Pinero to consent to the adaptation of his work to the screen. The Walton studios are now in a state of bee hive activity upon "Sweet Lavender," a drama founded of a barrister's life at the Temple.

At the annual meeting of the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association, held in London a few days ago, reference was made to the case in which the Vitagraph Company were sued by the London County Council for exhibiting films in an unlicensed theater. The judge, it will be remembered, dismissed the case, saying that trade projections rooms did not come within the meaning of the Act. The Kodak Company have generously consented to bear one-third of the costs of this and other legal actions instituted by the association up to a sum of $5,000. In connection with the British Board of Film Censors it was decided that the Committee of the Board should consist of four members of the Exhibitors' Association and four members of the Manufacturers' Association. The chairman of the Manufacturers' Association should also be chairman of the committee and the nominees of the Manufacturers' Association were empowered to have sole control over the finances of the Board of Film Censors. The new officers of the Manufacturers' Association are: J. Frank Brockliss, chairman; J. B. Wilkinson, secretary; W. F. Baker, treasurer; E. V. Blake, auditor; H. R. Bishop, Cecil Hepworth, H. A. Browne, T. A. Welsh and W. G. Barker, council.

Mexican Notes

Chihuahua, Mexico, June 27, 1915.

Managers have recently been obliged to raise the salaries of operators and other help, in some places as high as 200 per cent. While in this country there are no unions to enforce uniform wages or salary increases, the ever soaring cost of living has forced the increase. Most of the wage increases have been secured without friction between employers and employees; however, in some places this has existed. The employees of the Salon Azul, of Zacatecas, Zac., recently walked out on a strike when manager Juan Cabrera refused the asked for increase. But finally an arrangement agreeable to all was entered into and the employees returned to work. In several other cities action is contemplated by employees if managers do not grant the demands. Even with these increases, salaries paid operators, etc., in this country cannot be compared to those paid in the United States, but as an average, managers claim, the efficiency of the Mexican operator is much below that of the American.

An incident which happened recently in this city eloquently attested to the popularity of American pictures and photo players among Mexican picture fans. The Alcazar had been running Universal films, but due to the enormous rate of exchange, was obliged to change off to a Mexican service and run European films. By some coincidence one of the old "American" releases featuring Warren Kerrigan and Pauline Bush got on the program, and the minute the two favorites appeared on the screen, the audience broke into strenuous applause. Since the change in program the Alcazar management has been besieged with inquiries as to when King Baggot, Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, et al., will return. Surely, American pictures will dominate the Mexican picture field when peace once comes.

Plans are now being formulated which will eventually ripen into the construction of a first class photo play house in this city. The capital for backing the enterprise is already in sight.

* * *

In Durango at present there are two tent picture shows. The Sanabia and the Beas tents both report good business in that city. The Teatro Victoria, formerly a "legitimate" house is also showing pictures at present. Besides, the "Actualidades," the regular picture house, is also doing business.

* * *

Manager Symons of the Cine Club of this city, will soon install a Powers projector in his house.

* * *

Throughout the Republic, this summer has been the warmest in many years; however, strange to say, few exhibitors claim any decrease in attendance due to the weather.

* * *

J. Kennedy has resigned his position as manager of the Teatro Herrera, in Torreon, Coah. This house will soon close indefinitely, as it has not proved a profitable investment.

Motion Pictures in Other Lands.

Theaters in Canada Developing Rapidly in Numbers and in Elegance—American Subjects Shown to the Extent of 95%—High Taxes Prevent Progress in Lisbon, and High Admissions in The Azores.

Canada.

[Consul Henry P. Starrett, Fort William, Ontario.]

THE success and steady development of the motion picture theater in Canada has been, comparatively speaking, as phenomenal as in the United States. The methods of the business, both in the operation of the houses and in the distribution of films, have been placed on a highly efficient basis. Existing theaters have been remodeled, and the tendency in new construction is for more and more elaborate theaters and the very best equipment. As elsewhere, the encroachment of the picture theater upon the field of the "legitimate" stage has become a serious menace to the successful operation of the latter.

Generally speaking, the picture house has withstood the shock of war much better than the vaudeville and "legitimate" playhouses. In many of the smaller and to some extent in the larger cities vaudeville and drama have definitely given way to motion pictures. While it is true that some picture theaters have suffered keenly from present-day economic conditions and many have been forced to close their doors for lack of patronage, those that have survived the strain have been well rewarded by the larger attendance resulting from the reduction in the number of operating houses. Naturally these houses are competing very actively for the business—some by showing additional pictures, and a few by cutting admission prices. Where a monopoly is enjoyed by one theater, or where an understanding exists between the several houses, the reverse is true, for they have invariably advanced their admission charge to 15 cents and eliminated all extra film features and vaudeville acts.

Reasons for Development in Western Canada—Extent of

In middle and western Canada particularly, the great distances between important cities have always constituted a serious obstacle to the successful operation of "legitimate" and vaudeville houses. Principally for this reason, but also because of the picture-theater's appeal to the person of small means, the motion picture business in western Canada has developed to a wonderful degree, as is amply demonstrated by the elaborate houses constructed and the high order of films shown. The people are literally hungry for some sort of entertainment and the photoplay seems to fill the need admirably. The short summer season also contributes materially to the financial success of the picture theater, for even in the hot months the houses are surprisingly well patronized.

It has been estimated that during normal times there were approximately 2,200 motion picture theaters in active operation in Canada, these having a daily attendance of about 500,000 people. It is very doubtful, however, in view of present-day conditions, whether the number of such theaters now in operation will reach more than 1,500, and it is certain that the attendance has fallen off considerably. As statistics on these matters are practically impossible to obtain, any statement of this nature is largely a matter of guesswork.

Film Distribution and Leasing Prices.

As to the methods of operation of these theaters it can be stated that practically all films are leased from distributing agencies located at St. John (New Brunswick) Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Vancouver, shipments being made by express daily or semi-weekly, as needed. Each agency usually provides a selected list of reels, four of these constituting service; i. e., four different reels per day per week. The usual cost of service is $40 to $50 per week, but for serials and certain feature reels or for first option on new reels on releasing dates in competing cities as high as $350 per week per service has been charged. Most of the business, however, is done by the regular agencies and for regular services.

There are a few speculators who import "rainy" (worn out) European films at bargain prices, and these occasionally find their way to many Canadian circuits. A few good British and European films are regularly imported, but usually the films from the Continent are those that have become "exhausted" and are shipped to the Americas and other countries in which they have not previously appeared. Probably 95 per cent. of the films shown in Canada come from the United States. There is no regular production of films in the Dominion at the present time.

Licenses and Operating Methods

A board of censors in the capital of each Province passes upon all films shown, and inspectors are employed to see that the rulings of the board are carried out. In Ontario the provincial license fee for picture theaters is $150 per annum, and if one or more vaudeville acts are shown an additional $100 is charged. The municipal license fee ranges from $50 per annum in the towns to approximately $300 in the larger cities.

Theaters are open in the large cites from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m., the show consisting of four reels and the admission being 10 cents. In the smaller cities the hours are from 2 to 11 p. m., four to six reels being shown for 10 cents. Reels are changed daily, on alternate days, or semiweekly, according to the location and character of the theater. In towns and small cities where competition is not keen the theaters are open only at night and Saturday afternoons, the admission being 15 cents. Whenever vaudeville acts are given with the picture program the admission charges are higher and range in accordance with the number and quality of the acts. Picture houses are invariably closed on Sundays.

Kind of Films in Demand.

Canadian audiences are much like those in the United States in their tastes and preferences for pictures. They do not like costume plays, nor are they enthusiastic over educationals except in certain centers (suburban or family theaters), but exciting dramas and good comedies are very popular. The serials which have become so numerous during the past year were well received at first, but at present the increasing number of such reels has led managers to request their supplying agencies to restrict remittances to not more than one per week. Those houses that enjoy a family patronage or are located in the towns still find a continued interest in these serials and continue to use them.

The weekly news films have always excited the keenest interest and are certainly well received. Patriotic films, however, to be successful in Canada should be British in character, for the history and patriotism of other countries hold very little interest to the Canadian, especially at this particular time. The proposal of at least one of the large American service companies to put Broadway stars, famous plays, and best-selling books on their regular photoplay service program without extra charge to the picture theaters has created a favorable impression among Canadian managers, and they are of the opinion that this innovation will prove most welcome to their patrons.

In brief, the most popular films are strong dramas featuring favorite players in the cast, and comedies of exceptional merit. It is the experience among the managers here that the theater that features a Charlie Chaplin or a Mary Pickford subject is sure to be filled to capacity.

French Explanations Sometimes Needed—Duty.

While English explanations on films prove acceptable to the great majority of the Canadian theaters, there are many parts of the Province of Quebec in which only French explanations are successful. The Canadian customs tariff provides a duty of 32½ per cent. ad valorem (including the increase effective Feb. 12, 1915) on all motion picture films and machines. There is no provision whereby these films could be imported in bond for exhibition and then returned to the country of export without the payment of duties.

War Pictures Prohibited in Ontario.

[Consul Julius D. Dreher, Toronto.]

The Provincial Board of Censors has prohibited the use in Ontario of real or faked pictures of war scenes. Pictures of troops marching with bands playing and colors flying are permitted; but all films professing to represent the ghastly scenes of actual bloodshed and destruction on battlefields are prohibited in the moving picture theaters. This order has made it necessary to recall certain films of war scenes alleged to be the reproduction of actual operations on battle fields in Belgium.

Colombia.

[Consul Isaac A. Manning, Barranquilla.]

American film manufacturers have been trying to break into the Colombian picture field for some months past. The American consul at Barranquilla asked a young person who in the United States was a moving picture fan, and whose criticisms he had frequently heard on the films presented in Colombia, what was the matter with the American films, of which few had been shown, and none successfully. The reply was: "If the motion picture manufacturers of the United States wish to get their films on the market here they will find, in my opinion, such a thing utterly impossible until the venders of the films mend their ways. When the people of Colombia order pictures from the United States the exporters proceed to send them their lowest grade films. Now, the people here are just as critical as the American public, and as a result the American film is rarely bought, because only low-grade detective and Wild West stories and comedies are sent. The people have no objection to detective stories if they are good. The French and Italian companies send none but the best.

"Wild West pictures are not liked, nor does the Colombian care for pointless 'slapstick' comedies; yet these are what the film exporters of the United States are sending, and then they wonder why they don't get Colombia's trade. Let them try a few really good films; for example, the Broadway features and John Bunny comedies, plays like 'My Official Wife,' 'Uncle Bill,' etc., and short society dramas. Let the people here become acquainted with big film actors and actresses who sway the North American audiences in the grip of their personality. Stop using Colombia and the rest of South America for a 'waste basket' in which to dump the plays the American public refuses to see. Then there will be a chance."

Good Translations Essential.

Another thing that the film manufacturers should do, by all odds: See that all titles and descriptive matter are carefully translated into Spanish by some one who understands both languages well, and not into pigeon Spanish by some high school student. Then, care must be taken in copying and in printing all titles on the film. Nothing hurts the susceptibilities of an audience like being "stared at" by glaring errors of idiom and spelling. Hence these are important features in the sale campaign.

There are three motion picture shows in Barranquilla, two in Santa Marta, two in Cartagena and several in Bogota and Medellin. Bucaramanga, Cali, Manizales and other smaller centers all have them. One mining company has established a picture theater to keep its employees contented. Others may have to do the same. All these have depended on Pathe (France), Gaumont and Italian Films Company for their films.

American film makers should begin to look South America over as a field for business, but they must remember that what makes Pathe popular is understandable dramas, with some "blood and thunder" and the titles in perfect Spanish. Three to five reels are poular lengths, so two stories may be given, and then "La Napa" (the horse trader's "to boot") is usually a short, clean, comic reel that sends everyone away in a good humor, having laughed at some of the drolleries of Salustiano or of Max Linder—funny, and, above all, decent. Nothing that is not clean in story or action will take, so films for South America should be of such a character as to make a censor unnecessary.

Films That Have Proved Popular.

"Les Miserables," "Quo Vadis," "The Count of Monte Cristo," some adaptations of Zola's works, "The King of the Air" and other aeroplane stories have proved popular here. Nick Carter fills the niche for detective tales, and such films are sufficiently funny to attract. It must also be remembered that the South American is more acquainted with French and Spanish literature than with English or American.

Portugal.

(Consul General W. L. Lowrie, Lisbon.)

The motion picture theater has not reached in Lisbon as yet the popularity that it enjoys in most large cities of Europe and America. This is due partly to the high admission prices made necessary by the taxes which these places are compelled to pay. These include a municipal tax of $40 to $50 a month, depending on the size of hall; a police tax, four or five policemen being on duty at each theater in the evening and receiving 50 cents each (if the performance lasts over midnight they are entitled to double pay); and a firemen's tax, an equal number of firemen being also on duty at the theaters and receiving the same pay as the policemen.

The price of admission ranges between 9 and 21 cents. On working days there are three sections lasting about an hour and a half each, and on Sundays and holidays five. The best places have fairly good orchestras, which play acceptable music during the intermissions and sometimes in the course of the entertainment. The theaters are quite small as compared with the large halls in other cities, and rents are exceedingly high.

Films Obtained in Paris or Barcelona.

There are two firms that supply the different theaters with films. These companies secure their films in Paris and Barcelona—chiefly in the latter city, where the large continental film houses have agencies. The amount of the rental depends on the nature and length of the film.

French, Italian, German, Danish, Austrian and American films are exhibited, but principally French and Italian. Films of scientific or geographical interest are shown at the Portuguese Geographical Society, Lisbon. The tariff duty on films is 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Azores.

(Consul Walter H. Schultz, St. Michaels.)

The possibilities offered by the Azores to American film manufacturers are not of a very encouraging nature. The number of motion picture theaters and entertainment is extremely limited, but this in a measure can be accounted for by the high price of admission. If a 5-cent show could be produced in the islands the picture industry would probably prosper. The earning capacity of the people is low, but the large Portuguese-American element in the islands adds no little interest to the possibilities of the market.

Population of Island Towns—Attendance.

Of the nine islands of this archipelago three have motion picture theaters. Ponta Delgada, the largest city on the island of St. Michaels has three theaters, and there are small ones in four other towns of this island. There is one theater at Angra, the capital of Terceira Island, and one at Horta, the capital of Fayal. A second theater is under construction at Horta.

Films Rented from Lisbon Distributors.

The films used by all these theaters are rented from two Lisbon manufacturers and distributors. Leaders and inserts are in Portuguese or Spanish. Ordinarily 1,000-foot reels of photoplays are rented to the island theaters for 15 days at a rental of $1 for the period. The higher grade photoplays, colored films, etc., pay a rental of $0.05 a foot for the 15 days. On the longer series films this amounts to $5 or $6 a day. Films are sent out in care of some one traveling on one of the fortnightly ships from Lisbon, thereby saving freight charges. They are retained 15 days and returned. The customs duty is 15 per cent. ad valorem, but this amount is refunded when the film is sent back to Lisbon. The monthly demand now for all the islands is about 80 films of 3,000 feet or less and 18 of larger reels.

The shows in the Azores are much longer than those in the United States. The larger theaters usually present three sessions of four reels each, the last two sessions being made up of series films and the first of reviews, comics, fashions and the like. The smaller theaters exhibit six to eight reels at each entertainment. American adventure reels are popular, but before being sent here are made up with Portuguese or Spanish inserts and leaders.

Price of Admission—Direct American Service.

The average price of admission is about 10 cents. The Theatro Michaelense, at Pontar Delgada, is a large theater which was built for stage productions. Like Spanish theaters, it has four tiers of boxes extending clear around the pit. They accommodate from five to seven persons. A box may be had for $1 to $3 gold. Films are imported here in the tin boxes in which they are packed for American theaters. The Azorean climate is very humid, and theater men say it is beneficial, rather than harmful, to the delicate films.

Farrar Energetic

"Let's Get to Work" Her Terse Comment, Which Has Become the Slogan of the Lasky Studio.

ALTHOUGH she has had at various times in her long and brilliant operatic career the benefit of the leading stage directors of the world, Miss Geraldine Farrar has frankly confessed that her experiences this summer in motion picture acting have been a revelation. Aspirants to photoplay laurels would do well to comprehend Miss Farrar's point of view when she went west early in June to spend the summer at the studios of the Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, to appear in a photoplay version of "Carmen" and other plays produced under the personal supervision of Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Lasky Company. Miss Farrar had no definite idea of the demands of the motion picture studio, the limited stage, the broadness of expression permitted and the consequent limitations these liberties necessitate.

Despite the elaborate arrangements for her reception at Los Angeles and at Hollywood—a tribute of popularity which might have effected for several days the nervous system of an artist less equipped with poise—Miss Farrar was not long in throwing herself enthusiastically into her work. Mr. DeMille several days before her arrival had practically completed every arrangement for her work at the studio, where there was to be no delay in taking full advantage of the summer months in obtaining the very best results, histrionically and artistically, from Miss Farrar's co-operation with the Lasky forces.

"Let's get to work!" It was one of the first remarks of the prima donna when she had finished an inspection of the huge Lasky studios and had expressed every pleasure with the special provisions that had been made for her comfort and ease in a separate portion which had been set aside for her dressing and reclining rooms. Her suite included also a reception and luncheon room, a music room and a ward-robe room.

That short sentence, "Let's get to work!" became within a few days the slogan of the Lasky studios, passed from mouth to mouth at first in semi-jest and later in true earnestness as everyone in the studio came directly or indirectly into contact with Miss Farrar.

Neither lack of confidence nor over-confidence marked her early work in the studio. Frankly and unreservedly she sought from anyone and everyone whom she believed could help her, information about the photodrama.

Prior to starting work Miss Farrar had expressed her belief that she would have the benefit of her experience in singing for talking machines, assuming that in some respects there was similarity because in both the studio and the recording room the artist was expending her best effort unaided by an audience. Always before Miss Farrar will permit one of her talking machine records to be placed on the market she insists upon tests so that what finally goes forth with her name carries also per personal endorsement.

Such a scheme as applied to photoplay acting is not new, as Miss Farrar discovered. In the making of the scenes for "Carmen," however, greater preparation and care and rehearsing were used than is the usual routine, despite the fact that Mr. DeMille is one of the most painstaking of directors.

"Voice is the medium of expression which I know something about," remarked Miss Farrar in talking the first day in the studio with Mr. DeMille. "Surely, one doesn't have to keep silent while acting."

"On the contrary," said Mr. DeMille, reaching for the completed manuscript of the photoplay "Carmen," written by William C. DeMille. "You will notice that the characters in every scene have specific words to say, directly bearing on the scene they are acting."

"Then I will be all right," replied Miss Farrar, smiling.

And that is precisely the routine of "Geraldine Farrar in the picturization of 'Carmen.'" Every scene is a spoken scene, diligently rehearsed, photographed, shown in test, photographed again and exhibited again to the star and the Lasky studio staff.

If the combination of care, efficiency, and enthusiasm will count, "Carmen" in photographic form will be artistically sensational.

FREDERIC DE BELLEVILLE TO PLAY "WALLINGFORD."

The Pathe producers, the Whartons, announce that through the courtesy of Edward Rush and Abraham Levy of "The Garden of Allah," Inc., Frederic de Belleville has been released from his contract with "The Garden of Allah" that he may play "Wallingford" in "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," Pathe's next series.

Model Operating Room

Equipment at the New Filmore in San Francisco Said To Be Exceptional.

By George Blaisdell.

EXHIBITORS visiting San Francisco will find material for a mighty interesting half hour if they can secure the consent of Joseph E. Levin, the manager of the New Filmore Theater, to visit the operating room of that house and inspect the equipment and devices for the projection of pictures presided over by W. De Latimer. A World man put in an hour and a half there one evening early in May, and he was entertained and deeply interested every minute of it. Mr. De Latimer is a man who seeks the best that he can devise in the way not only of labor-saving contrivances; it is plainly to be seen that the impelling motive is not the lessening of the work he may have to do, but rather the elimination so far as possible of the element of human fallibility, the avoidance of the slips, the little slips, in the projection room on the part of a busy man that out in front on the screen may be magnified into something that interfere with a smooth performance, that may even slightly jar or distract the observer.

Take, for instance, a little thing like a one-candle power lamp in the head of the projector. As Mr. De Latimer threads his machine the faint illumination shed by this tiny light enables him to adjust the film in perfect frame. As the current is thrown into the driving motor the light automatically fades. Through a contrivance on his upper magazine a buzzer sounds when the film has just one minute to run; the operator steps to the alternate projector and prepares to throw in his succeeding reel without the shift being noticed out front. Through a small lens placed in front of an aperture in the lamphouse there is mirrored on the wall in front a perfect photograph of the crater of his carbon. From any point in the room Mr. De Latimer may determine the exact status of his lamp.

In front of the lamphouse on each side there is a key the turning of which shuts off the motor. No seconds are wasted in getting to the opposite side of the lamphouse to shut off the power, if by any mischance the film is snarling—and film runs a foot a second. Under each machine head there is a retainer which prevents the dripping of any oil to the film, to the machine or to the floor. Under each lamphouse are carbons, ready to hand. So, too, by each machine are set tiny slips of paper for insertion in the take in film wall, if it be noticed that there is a shift in the frame of the picture; when the film is rewound the misframe will be easily spotted and remedied.

In the little room adjoining the projection room proper, which is perhaps 18 feet in height and 18 feet long and 15 feet wide, there is $10 worth of felt under the generator. The rheostat for direct current is on a marble slab. The double sets if motors are on marble shelves well above the floor, which is of concrete. Outside of the operator's chair there is not a piece of wood in the room. All the benches are of marble. All wiring is concealed. For the storage of reels there is a tank with a capacity of twelve two-thousand foot spools. There is perforation for ventilation; and a combination of eucalpytus oil, water, glycerine and alcohol, the influence of which on the film is such that it leaves the theater in better condition than that in which it enters. Not a bit of paper anywhere clutters the floor or benches.

On the top of each lamphouse there is a pitched roof fourteen inches in height. Mr. De Latimer pointed out that this creates ventilation and prevents breakage of condensers. There is an extension hood on the condenser which, if memory serve, writing a month after the visit, separates the light from the film for a distance of eighteen inches. Mr. De Latimer uses Meniscus bi-convex lens. In the center of the ceiling there is a big ventilator for use in summer. As an illustration of the care given to the little things Mr. De Latimer keeps at hand tiny stickers, a quarter of an inch square, which he pastes over the abominable perforations which sometimes mar the closing feet of a reel's run. The rewinding arrangement is one of Mr. De Latimer's. He starts it going, but automatically it halts as the last foot of film passes over a spring placed between the reels.

There is no question that Brother Richardson's trained eye would have picked up a host of details that inevitably were bound to be overlooked by the layman. Even a layman, however, cannot fail to discover that in Mr. De Latimer the operators of the world at large have a comrade in whom they may take great pride; that here is one who as night after night he works in silence and in solitude, is contributing a big man's share to the advancement of the art of motion pictures—for until we had proper projection the motion pictures never had a chance to get out of swaddling clothes.

The writer had taken particular interest in that tiny lamp in the head of the machine, which is wired into a socket so that it cannot be short-circuited. Each of the three Power up-to-date projectors are fitted with the device. "Personally I think the public should never see a picture move up and down out of frame," said Mr. De Latimer in his quiet way. "The picture should not be out of frame—it should be started correctly in the first place right in the projection room. And that is why the light is there."

Besides the three Power machines there is a dissolver and also a wall full of mysterious voltmeters and ampere meters and all the other meters. The writer suggested to Mr. De Latimer that after having seen a film run once it would be possible for him to close his ports and get perfect results without once looking at the screen. "Why, yes, that is possible," was the confident reply; "in fact, I would guarantee it."

Brother Blaisdell wrote the foregoing and sent it to the Projection Department, I would not comment on the same, except that I wish to endorse everything Blaisdell has said about friend De Latimer. I had the pleasure of forming De Latimer's acquaintance while in San Francisco two years ago. In fact, he was one of the bunch who gave me a joy ride all over that section of the country, in his six cylinder Stutz. The San Francisco Union is made up of high class men. In fact, if you are a member of that organization and don't deliver the goods on the screen you are quite likely to hear from it, and that reasonably quick, too. De Latimer is a credit even to the high class organization to which he belongs. I think though De Latimer probably got that framing light scheme, which attracted Blaisdell's attention, from a certain department in the Moving Picture World.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

Donald Brian in "The Voice in the Fog"

DONALD BRIAN has started work on the photodrama version of "The Voice in the Fog," adapted from the original novel by Harold MacGrath. The scenes are being made at Hollywood, Cal., in the studio of the Lasky Feature Play Company, which will release the photodrama through the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

For several years Mr. Brian has been the foremost musical male comedy star in America. The late Charles Frohman raised him from the ranks of the less crowded environs of stardom and for the past few seasons he has appeared in "The Siren," "The Marriage Market," and "The Girl from Utah."

Donald Brian.

Mr. Brian began his professional career as a member of a Boston stock company. Although he was best suited at the beginning for juvenile leads, so called, he had the experience of appearing in many different characters, from elderly men to middle-aged husbands. His most notable musical comedy success before he became a Frohman star was as Prince Danilo in "The Merry Widow," a role he created in this country when the Lehar piece was first produced here. Mr. Brian was the originator of "The Merry Widow Waltze," forerunner of the dancing craze. For this responsibility, however. Mr. Brian asserts he has a conscience that bothers at such times when he sees to what consequences the modern dance craze has led a race of otherwise thoughtful persons.

Of striking masculine appearance, enhanced by youth and an unusually pleasing personality, Mr. Brian is exceptionally equipped in every way to win widespread popularity as one of the Lasky stars.

1916 Model Motiograph Ready.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. of Chicago have Their 1916 Model Motiograph Now Ready for Delivery.

THERE have been some radical changes in the mechanism and other parts of the machine so as to meet the demands of the exhibitor, which means a machine that will stand up under heavy grind with very little wear; also simple and easy to operate. The E. O. Co.'s expert mechanics are ever on the alert to improve the machine and increase the high standard quality already produced in the Motiograph.

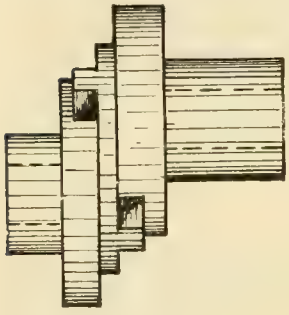

Fig. B.

The connection between the framer and the mechanism, which has been commonly termed the "ball arbor," has been discontinued and a sliding disc connection has taken its place, as represented by cut.

This connection has been thoroughly tested in the factory and also in several theaters and under severe tests has been found to show no wear. This enables the exhibitor to increase the speed of the machine when necessary without showing a wearing effect on the sliding disc connection, also to produce rock-steady pictures after many years of use.

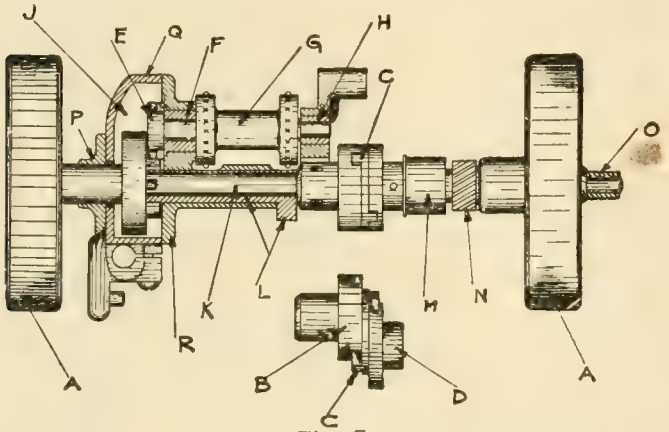

Fig. C.

The framing device and intermittent movement are illustrated herewith and the action of this mechanism is described as follows:

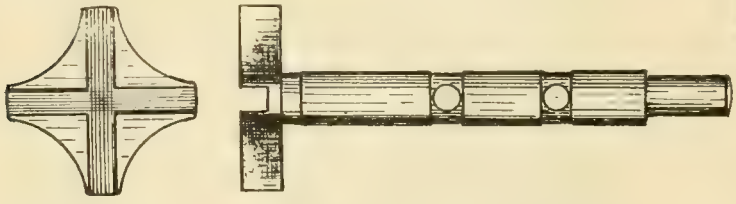

Fig. E.

AA—Represents the two balance wheels. The one shown at the right is built into the mechanism itself and supported by bushings M and O and driven by gear N. The balance wheel illustrated at the left is secured to the end of cam shaft K and mounted in the framing device which moves up and down to frame the picture, as in former models of the Motiograph. The up and down motion is accomplished by means of disc C, the action of which is illustrated in the lower portion of drawing.

This disc, made from high grade steel and hardened, is approximately 3-32 in. in diameter and may be rightly called a floating disc since it slides between grooves on parts B and D. The use of this device to accomplish framing is entirely new in motion picture mechanisms and it was not adopted until it had been put through an exceptionally rigid test, at the end of which it showed absolutely no wear.

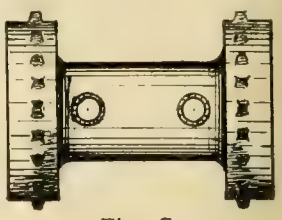

Fig. G.

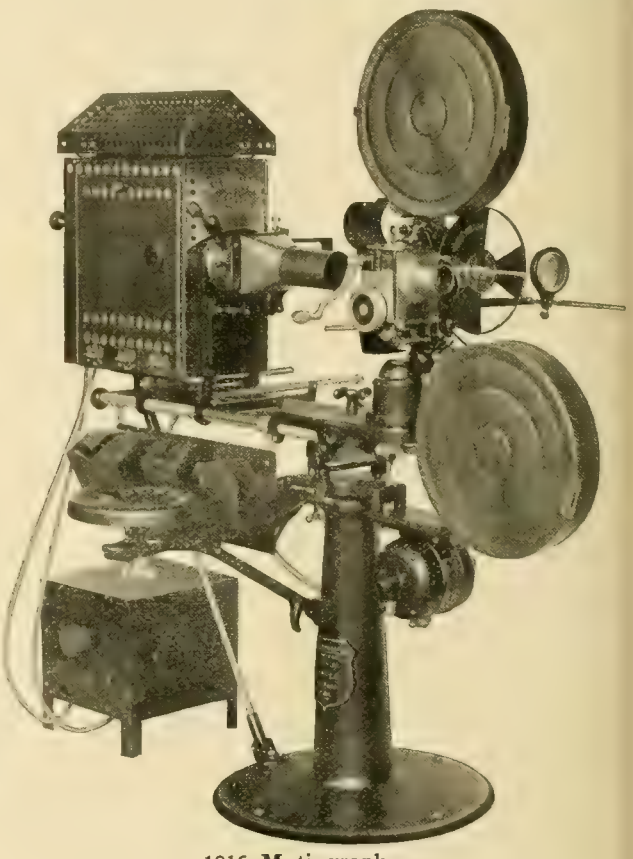
Geneva star and sprocket are shown as E and G, respectively, and Geneva cam as K, which is cut from one piece of steel and supported in eccentric bushing L. Cam shaft is made very heavy, being 5-16 in. in diameter, and is also supported by bushing P, which has a two-fold purpose, also preventing oil in the oil chamber J from leaking out. It can be readily seen by one familiar with machine design that wear on a mechanism of this kind must be reduced to a minimum.



1916 Motiograph.

The large bushings and equal balance on cam shaft keep the Geneva cam in perfect alignment with star, consequently reducing the wear and at the same time insuring steady projection.

The accurate adjustment of star and cam is accomplished in the usual Motiograph method except that the bushing on framer cap, which is held in place by three screws which should be unscrewed before adjusting eccentric bushing, and then slightly revolving eccentric bushing by means of set screws which hold it in place.

The star, cam and sprocket are made from light grade steel, hardened and ground. All parts are made and treated in the Motiograph factory.

Another feature of the mechanism is that all oiling can be done from the outside without removing door or plates; all oil holes being easily accessible to operator.

As lubrication for the intermittent movement a special grade of oil is advised. The Enterprise Optical Co. at the present time is preparing a certain grade of oil which is ideal for this purpose and is recommended for this use.

A new front shutter of improved design is also included, the shutter being driven by spiral gears from the machine and set at approximately 4 in. from the center of projection lens.

All former models of the Motiograph have carried a double inside shutter, and although the Enterprise Optical Co. endorses and recommends this type, they will substitute the front shutters to meet the demands of persons who have faith in its merits.

Another feature is an adjustable film tension. Should the operator for any reason desire to run his film at a greater than normal speed, he can add a slight additional tension by means of an adjusting screw, and as a result the picture will remain absolutely steady without undue strain on the film.

The lamphouse and general equipment will be much the same as that of the 1914 and '15 models, consisting of a large lamphouse and arc lamp, the arc lamp being very heavily constructed and especially designed for projection under heavy amperage.

A change has been made in the condenser mount whereby the operator can make a quick change in case of condensers breaking.

As to proofs of the above statements it might be added that the new mechanism was put to exceptionally severe tests, several machines having run for months at a stretch without stop and under considerable tension applied to the intermittent sprocket. To positively prove its merits these machines were occasionally allowed to run twenty-four hours per day with proper oiling and without any adjustment whatever; when tested with film it was noted that the pictures were absolutely steady and the machines noiseless.

The manufacturers are thoroughly convinced that it will stand the heavy grind of long runs and especially because of the fact that it requires little or no adjustment and care on the part of the operator outside of proper lubrication.

LOOKOUT FOR "J. ALLEN."

A man who signs himself J. Allen, at the present time is touring the country saying he represents the Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Music Co., and offers a professional copy proposition to piano players—in all moving picture theaters—collecting from them a fee of $1 for which he promises them a certain amount of copies during the period of one year—using our stationery, which misleads the public to believe that he really represents us, and as we offer no such proposition, we wish to say that this man is a faker. If by chance, the above party should approach you, we would like to have you cause his arrest, and notify us at once and we will do our utmost to send him to jail.

At the present time he is located somewhere in the state of Ohio.

H. M. WARNER HITS THE HIGH SPOTS.

Last Wednesday H. M. Warner, secretary and treasurer of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Incorporated, presenting the new Standard Program, left New York for a trip through the middle West which will include stops in all of the principal exchange centers of that territory. Important negotiations are under way in many localities for the exclusive handling of "Standard Pictures" and Mr. Warner's trip promises to result in announcements of live interest to those closely allied with motion picture affairs.

KLEINE FEATURES AT CHAUTAUQUA.

A unique contract was signed last week by George Kleine's Pittsburgh office when it completed negotiations with the Social Science and History Department of the Chautauqua School, Chautauqua, N. Y., where a complete line of Kleine features will be exhibited for the benefit of the big summer schools of that institution.

That the Chautauqua Schools are renting films is indicative of the ever increasing interest on the part of pedagogic organizations in education motion pictures.

Louis Burstein With Equitable,

WE welcome the return of Louis Burstein into the active field of producing after an absence of several years. Mr. Burstein has become affiliated with the Wizard Motion Picture Corporation which will produce and have the exclusive privilege to all the comedies to be released through the programs of the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Picture Company for the future.

Louis Burstein.

At the present time, Mr. Burstein has with him Burns and Stull, who are making one comedy a week. Among their recent successes are the "Pokes and and Jabbs" series and "Two for a Quarter," all of which have been run at the Hippodrome, Strand and other first class houses. Mr. Burstein will make one and five reel comedies for the above concerns. Within the last few days he has signed a number of well-known comedians, whose names will be announced in the near future.

Mr. Burstein's first entrance into the motion picture business was with Adam Kessel, Jr., and Chas. O. Baumann in the formation of the New York Motion Picture Company of which Mr. Burstein was a quarter owner, Secretary and Vice-President, until he sold his interests in that concern. He was the organizer and had charge of all of the Reliance productions in the early days of that concern.

Mr. Burstein is entitled to most of the credit in successfully terminating the litigations which were pending in the early days between the Patents Company and the various Independents. At the time the Patents Company was so determined to put the Independents off the field, it was through Mr. Burstein's untiring efforts that the first victory was obtained by the New York Motion Picture Co. against the Patents Company, when an injunction was denied the Patents Company against his concern. Mr. Burstein was the organizer of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co. and, being a lawyer, drafted all the necessary documents and papers for the organization of this concern. A short time thereafter he sold his interest in the New York Motion Picture Co. and retired from the active motion picture field.

In the past year, however, Mr. Burstein was instrumental in bringing about the settlement of the long drawn-out feud between Carl Laemmle and P. A. Powers and obtained purchasers for the entire William H. Swanson interests in the Universal Film Mfg. Co., through which deal Mr. Burstein became a stockholder in the Universal.

The new venture of Mr. Burstein's has been crowned with success from the start, especially with the productions that he has been able to give to the World Film Corporation.

The Wizard Motion Picture Corporation with which he is affiliated, is a half million dollar concern and well backed with sufficient capital to produce on a larger scale than has heretofore been attempted.

We can only see success ahead of him. We know from past performances that Mr. Burstein is a hard working, persevering young man and will leave no stone unturned to bring to success anything he undertakes.

Standard Has A $10,000,000 Contract.

Agreement Between Producers and Distributors Involves Large Minimum.

The Standard Program has closed a contract amounting to nearly ten million dollars with the Combined Photoplay Producers, Inc. This contract calls for the production, distribution and marketing of a minimum of nine million, three hundred and sixty thousand dollars worth of motion picture films and runs for a period of five years and was entered into to assure the control and permanence of the film supply.

Harold Lockwood

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, the handsome star of American feature productions, is fast climbing to the pinnacle of Fame's mountain. Lockwood has achieved a number of notable successes since joining the American, chief among them being his remarkable interpretation of the hero role in "The Lure of the Mask," the film version of Harold McGrath's famous best seller, and the hero role in "Secretary of Frivolous Affairs," filmed from May Futrelle's popular novel. Mr. Lockwood plays the lead, too, in "The End of the Road," an American four-part feature, which soon will be released as a Mutual Master picture.

This debonair young man is typical of the modern fiction hero. Perhaps that has something to do with the uniform success with which he meets in each pictorial interpretation of famous stories in which he is cast. Well groomed, always correctly attired, genial and impetuously enthusiastic, Lockwood's each screen appearance is as though he literally had stepped from the pages of a present day best seller. This photograph of Harold Lockwood was snapped recently at the American studios in Santa Barbara. The pose is characteristically Lockwoodian. The star, unlike many of his confreres, is exceedingly modest. The reading of his daily mail, cluttered as it is with perfumed notes from hero worshippers, never fails to bring blushes to his cheeks. Despite his modesty, however, Harold likes to know that his efforts are appreciated. He never fails to reply to his enamored correspondents.

South African Letter

BUSINESS is intermittent just now as regards moving pictures—everybody is talking war. Taking an average attendance all round, it is found, however, that the improvement index on the attendance register points to good.

For some time past, it was obvious that the Cape Colony showmen were laboring under a distinct disadvantage, in having to purchase all their requirements from the Johannesburg branch, or rather I should say headquarters of the Films Trust. However, this has now been remedied by the opening up of a branch establishment in Cape Town. The old question of censorship is again prominent in Natal. It has been brought up in the Provincial Council* principally as affecting juvenile morals. The entire press however regards it as a superfluous movement. Besides, according to the proprietors, children's matinees are especially catered for. It must be owned that the Trust do not exercise a sufficient control over the pictures imported so as to include a goodly portion of pictures, especially suitable for children.

The following pictures have been released and shown in the various theaters:

"Ambushed"—Essanay.
"The Sky Pirate"—Keystone.
† "The Reward of Thrift"—Vitagraph.
a "Thumb Prints and Diamonds"—Lubin.
"Disillusioned"—Universal.
b "Buster Brown Picks Out the Costumes"—Edison.
"The Face On the Bar Room Floor"—Keystone.
c "Across the Burning Trestle"—Edison.
d "The Heart of a Woman"—Broncho.
"Glimpses of Colorado"—Pathe Freres.

"The fact that over eighty per cent. of the bioscope proprietors in South Africa have already signed new contracts for film supplies with the Films Trust, proves conclusively that by fair and honest dealings the Trust has attained a position in the Film World, from which no amount of competition can ever succeed in removing them." So speaks the editorial of the April number of the African Film News. I quite agree with the eighty per cent, but as I personally know one or two of the twenty per cent and their reasons, I beg to state that "a pitcher can go to the well once too often." Then surely the last statement is in the nature of a challenge. If I had the necessary capital I confidently feel I could establish a rival exchange quite capable of doing well in South Africa. No doubt the Trust is well established and they certainly have improved the position a wee bit but still a lot remains yet to be done, especially in regard to projection and children's pictures.

Speaking of South African favorites, I notice that Bobby Bolder is performing with the Essanay. Which reminds me of a true story. In his South African days he was once in a bar in Cape Town amusing a crowd of the boys. A famous pianist, Hamburg I believe, entered alone, and being in a mood for company, stalked up to Bolder, tapped him on the shoulder, and bowed profoundly, then touching his own chest he said, "Mark Hamburg—Hungary." Bolder immediately struck an attitude, and, imitating the musician's gesture, said, "Bobby Bolder—Actor—Thirsty."

Just fancy a film being disinfected. Yes, owing to plague in certain areas of South Africa, all exchanges have been notified to use a disinfectant such as Lysol after handling films. No, this is no fake; I personally sold Lysol for the above purpose to an operator who explained the above rule.

SYDNEY H. CRAWFORD.

*Local parliament directing affairs strictly relating to the province of Natal, O. F. S., etc., as case may be.

†This picture was viewed in silence, and at the end was vigorously applauded; it appealed in the right manner to the mixed audience, and was of a distinct educational value.

a. A picture of an exciting character; detective plays always appeal to a South African audience, and this particular one was clean, and of a sensational and yet not too sensational character.

b. Lord, how people did laugh, especially the women. One theater in advertising this used the following sentence: "When a man picks out his wife's clothing, well you know what happens, if you don't, come and see"

c. Across the burning trestle was voted a splendid railroad picture; the very bigness of the American railroad industry is enough to excite the admiration of people, and this picture was a splendid picturized moving view.

d. Well a woman's heart is always interesting, and this particular heart was no exception to the rule. The theme was a trifle hackneyed, and yet viewing it on the whole it was an average production.

Motion Picture Laws*

"A Texas Steer"

Hoyt's Famous Comedy Reviewed in Pictures in All Its Mirthfulness by Selig, With Tyrone Power as Maverick Brander.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IT IS twenty-five years and over since I saw Hoyt's best comedy, "A Texas Steer," on the stage, and Maverick Brander, Major Yell and Col. Brassy Gall had become only faint memories—the "Ministah to Dahomey" among them—until I viewed Selig's photocomedy on the screen the other day. Then the past came back, and the same care-free laughter came just as spontaneously as it did on the other side of the bridge with its twenty-five arches.

It is good to laugh, and one may be prone to praise too highly the cause of it, but I can commend Selig's "A Texas Steer" unqualifiedly as a mirth provoker of high quality. The humor is rich and clean and sometimes boisterous, as it was of yore, and there is nothing to impede its constant, natural and mellow flow. Situation follows situation in happy succession, as the story is revealed, until the laughter evoked by the closing scene is tinged with the shadow of regret.

The rapid fire of mirth owes no small debt to the crisp and well-worded subtitles. When Maverick Brander's buggy breaks down near his home, to which he is returning after a self-imposed absence in order to escape being elected to Congress, he asks a passerby to call at his ranch and tell them to send him a "hoss." But during his absence his constituents have elected him willy nilly, and when they learn of his plight they turn out and welcome him in mass. "I told him I wanted a hoss, and he sent me a pack of jackasses," said the exasperated Brander. "What do I want in Congress? I'm an honest man. I'd rather be Balaam's ass than a Congressman."

"Be hold de nex Ministah to Dahomey," says the negro political boss to his followers in an eloquent speech, after their votes have elected Brander. And then, after long months of waiting and physical stress that results from an empty stomach, he finds that there is no such dignitary as the "Ministah to Dahomey," and is proud to announce that he has "receibed" his appointment, viz.: the "supervision ob the dumpin' ob the wastebaskets" in the House of Representatives, which has been secured for him by Congressman Brander.

Tyrone Power, as Brander, shows his first efforts in photodramatic acting, and I consider the characterization masterful. He dominates, as he should, the entire pictured story. He succeeds admirably in conveying to the spectator the varying moods of the big, fearless, kind-hearted Texan, who is easily imposed upon by sharpers at Washington, in nearly everything except in a game of poker. In one of these games he cleans up a jackpot on a pair of deuces, and explains to his wife, whom he had kept waiting at a select dinner party, that he had "stopped playing as soon as he had all the money in the crowd." Mr. Power succeeds in bringing out clearly the changing lights and shades in Brander's character, so that we know the man as well as if we had heard him speak and tell us.

Bossy Brander is in the care of Grace Darmond, who gives a quite clever and piquant impersonation. The Major Yell of Walter Roberts is a finely drawn character, and so is the Col. Brassy Gall of Frank Weed. The actor who impersonates the "Ministah to Dahomey" also merits praise, although his name does not appear in the cast. The remaining characters are competently sustained.

"A Texas Steer" is a Selig "red seal" photoplay, and will be released through V-L-S-E, Inc., July 26.

"Kindling"

A Genuine Film Masterpiece Featuring Charlotte Walker and an Ornament to Any Program.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

I DO NOT hesitate to say that this is one of the best samples of the Lasky school of motion picture art. When at its best this new school beggars comparison. It is pleasing, it is powerful, it scores in every scene and there are no weak links.

To be sure the theme of this play lent itself to the use of the intelligent screener with a most singular aptitude. The young wife of a poor workingman living through dire necessity in a squalid, soul-destroying tenement feels herself a mother. The joy which this foreboding spreads in every woman's heart is "sicklied o'er" by the contemplation of the surroundings into which the child will be born. Lack of sanitation, prostitution of all privacy, ignorance, poverty, despair—all the evil spirits that hover about the crowded tenements waiting on human decay and human degradation show their malign influences in the wretched habitation where her child is to draw its first breath of life. The young wife's soul is seared in an agony of distress. Her husband, not knowing the condition of the wife, voices his hope that their first child will be born in the country where God's air and the blue sky favor and foster the growth of the child. She hears that for a hundred dollars she can go out into the great West where Nature still looks as it came from the Creator's hands. The thought haunts her by day and by night. Temptation steps in her path. If she will let a burglar come into the house of the woman for whom she is sewing at a wage of five dollars a week her share of the plunder will be a hundred dollars.

At first her conscience takes alarm. "Thou shalt not steal" struggles with the instinct of the mother to preserve the tiny life which is destined to issue from her. Her scruples grow less and less as she sees that the woman who has hired her for the miserable pittance draws the profits from ill-kept and unsanitary tenements which her husband calls a "Hell-hole." She sees, too, how this woman uses the money wrung from wretched tenants to pamper a pet dog, providing that dog with a maid and with luxuries which are enjoyed by but few human beings. As the day of her joy and her labor draws nearer the maternal instinct drowns out the voice of conscience and she becomes the confederate of the burglar. The dramatic elements in such a situation are obvious. The director has handled them to the greatest possible advantage, creating many stirring moments, moving our pity and arousing just anger. To call attention to this excellence of the play does not describe it fully. To give my reader a more faithful and accurate picture of this production I must dwell on the director's ability to show atmosphere. To portray atmosphere and surroundings in one or two brief touches is art of the highest order. It is the title to greatness of the distinguished painters of all ages. The scene entitled "Where the Devil Wins," depicting a typical section of the tenement district of a big city, is as graphic as anything that ever came from the hands of Hogarth or Rembrandt. It is complete in every detail and true in every detail.

Just as the periscope draws a complete ship with its surrounding seascape within its small compass, giving a view in miniature, the screen is capable of doing this very thing in portraying all the phases of life. This film play gives a very fine example of it. All through the picture we find the very reverse of padding; this director epitomizes, abbreviates and condenses. Space forbids a further amplification of the extraordinary merits of this film. The cast was exceptionally good. Charlotte Walker has a strong, striking and magnetic personality and great emotional power. At times her excess of zeal threatened her skill and power, but in all the great scenes her work was flawless.

"The Fox Woman"

Four-Reel Majestic by John Luther Long, Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STORY of Japan, "vaguely delineating the real and intimating the over-real," a drama of fatality, inclining to the poetic in some exquisitely chosen glimpses of nature, the two strong points of "The Fox Woman" are those of characterization. Brought into active and constant contrast are the roles of The Fox Woman, Signe Auen, and "Jewel," a little Jap wife portrayed by Teddy Samson. The latter is a child-wife, one of those little flower-like souls that need the constant nourishment of demonstrative love, that do not fade, petal by petal, but shrivel and die quickly under a brief spell of cold neglect. Her husband becomes the model for an American girl of unusual talent as a sculptor and a mystical influence over men that causes her to be regarded by the Japs as a reincarnation of the fox.

The Jap husband has a mind that is lost in the mists of antiquity—he knows nothing about taming foxes until they will eat out of your hand—and he yields to the fascinations of the sculptress as if under a spell, whereas she is only amusing herself as our girls sometimes will when dealing with men so eager and unsophisticated as to imagine a woman is to be won by silent adoration. The little wife bears humbly the indignities gradually heaped upon her until she is satisfied that love will never again be her portion, then she goes to self-destruction with the pitiful courage of a fatalist. The tragic death of the Fox Woman releases the husband from thralldom, and he saves his child-wife when she is about to release her soul by suicide at the tomb of her ancestors.

"Heritage"

A Four-Part Universal Drama Dealing With Inherited Tendencies and the Influence of Environment.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

LIKE "Scandal," a production in which the Universal Company takes great pride, "Heritage," a four-part feature to be released under the Laemmle brand may be classed among pictures with a purpose. It treats a sociological theme in a dramatic fashion, moreovor there is a semi-scientific background to add significance to the characters and the problems confronting them. At the opening of the story and at occasional intervals during its unfolding, the thesis that engaged the attention of the author is presented in the form of an excerpt from a book. In substance, the argument seems to be that heredity is stronger than environment.

Whether or not the picture bears out the contention is of less importance than the fact that Robert Leonard has produced a very human drama in which the depiction of sordid slum life leaves little to the imagination. His tenement settings abound in atmosphere and his characters look as if they felt at home in the surroundings. In one of the most depressing of the tenements we meet an unhappy, ill-nourished little girl, whose chief excitement in life is in witnessing fights between her drunken father and overworked mother. A few years later the child is obliged to earn her living in a factory; then she is left an orphan and presently comes under the kindly notice of a young woman much interested in the uplift movement.

Transferred from poverty to luxury, the girl soon learns how to wear pretty clothes and how to ape the manners and speech of her wealthy benefactress, but after marriage she reverts to type with alarming suddenness. Because of jealousy she hurls the bric-a-brac at her husband and then leaving him, returns to the slums. In recovering her, he is advised to adopt the tactics of a Bowery gangster, and the girl, who does not respond to kindness, is easily won by force—a popular notion seldom supported by fact. In changing from a little girl to a young woman and in meeting the varied dramatic requirements of the principal role, Ella Hall gives an admirable performance. Mr. Leonard is sympathetic in the character of an unselfish lover willing to sacrifice his own interests and for the rest it is a first-rate company well directed.

Irene Fenwick to Go to Mountains.

When the negative of George Kleine's film version of Owen Davis' "The Woman Next Door" is finished, little Irene Fenwick will be ready for what she pleasantly terms a "rest." If present plans do not miscarry, this "rest" will take the form of a jaunt to the mountains, where every minute of light will be utilized for the production of a series of dramas possessing a mountainous locale.

Yet to Miss Fenwick the excursion will constitute a much-needed vacation, as she has been steadily engaged for a long time in the Kleine studios by day and the Eltinge theater by night. The recent close of "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge wound up a period of day and night work that would have broken down many a stronger constitution than that of the diminutive ninety-eight pound Irene. Hence, the change of scene and freedom from the inevitable "call-boy" appeals to Miss Fenwick with a warmth and fervor equaled only by that of the school-boy about this time of year.

Miss Fenwick, who is an accomplished rider, swimmer and an ardent golfer, will have an opportunity to demonstrate these qualities in the work before her.

Olcott to Direct Mary Pickford.

Sid Olcott, veteran of the studio and one of the best known film men in the business, has been selected by the Famous Players to direct the next picture put out by that organization in which Mary Pickford will play the leading part. Work on the picture will be started in a short time, once Miss Pickford has been rested from her trip east.

It is a significant thing that Mr. Olcott should have been chosen for the next Pickford picture in view of the fact that it will be his third picture since joining the force of directors at the Famous studio. His first picture was "The Moth and the Flame," and his second was "The Seven Sisters," in which Marguerite Clark was starred.

Mr. Olcott is perhaps the most widely traveled director of the American exponents of the art of making pictures. He was sent to Palestine and Egypt to film "From the Manger to the Cross" and went last year to Ireland to make a series of pictures which are now being released by the Lubin Company. In all, Mr. Olcott has put American actors before the camera in 14 different countries.

"The Earl of Pawtucket"

Lawrence D'Orsay Appears for the Universal in Original Role in the Well Known Augustus Thomas Play

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE five-reel version of the well-known Broadway play as presented by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company on their Broadway Universal Feature program is a distinct success. To Harry C. Myers, we understand, belongs the credit of the adaptation of the play, as well as the direction of the picture, which has been elaborately set and produced artistically and with a realism that never fails to find its mark through its comic characteristics.

Playing opposite Lawrence D'Orsay is Rosemary Theby, who is attractive and amusing as the young divorcee. But in spite of all the efforts put forth by any of the other members of the cast, D'Orsay as the monocled English aristocrat holds the limelight.

The play is one that is particularly well adapted to the screen. Nothing could be more delightful than the refined strain of burlesque, which practically constitutes the body of the play, and Director Myers, who also impersonates one of its characters, is to be especially commended for the clever manner in which he has thrown into basrelief the eccentricities of the Englishman. One of the most thoroughly amusing incidents of the picture is the extinguishing of the fire among the curtains by the Earl, when he has been disturbed at his bath by the distressed calls of a lady fair. To thoroughly appreciate the humor of the scene in question one has to see it.

The reproduction of the foyer of the Waldorf Astoria which is used frequently throughout the picture is one of the most impressive sets of the kind that we have ever seen. It is deep and spacious, and is an exact reproduction of what it is intended to represent. And moreover, there is a constant flow of action throughout the foyer that brings the spectator immediately into the atmosphere of the great hotel.

There has purposely been no attempt in this review to outline the story of the play, because its intention and the significance of the pictured version is blazoned in large and extremely comic type on the face of the production, namely, the burlesqueing of a slow-going, deliberating English aristocrat.

"The Disappearing Necklace"

A Remarkable Two-Reel Kalem Detective Story—Second in the Series of Mysteries of the Grand Hotel.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS second of the series of pictures from stories by actual hotel detectives, being put out by the Kalem Company, is the first that this reviewer has seen and he found it most enjoyable. It is sure to be amply serviceable and likely to be decidedly popular. A series of pictures all as good as this will give the Kalem program another boost.

These hotel stories came in reply to a circular letter sent to many of the bigger hotels of the country asking for accounts of real episodes and for which to those who answered a liberal payment was made. This one, "The "Disappearing Necklace," is a composite of several adventures made to fit plausibly in a plot. The entertaining things about it are the clever newness of the crook's methods, the convincing and freshly handled atmosphere of the lobby of the hotel and the plot contriving in which along the thread of the approved and expected melodrama, unexpected things are made to happen—in the region of life it exploits, the most improbable things are accepted as belonging and so are quite convincing. It was written by Hamilton Smith and James Horne directed it. Most of the action of the first reel takes place in the hotel lobby and for sustained interest, due to little things and for the effect it has in making one believe himself in a great hostelry (leaving out some of the army of supers who probably were not expected to seem unconscious), it is worth high praise. There is no dragging at all in the picture, although that part where the woman whose husband is fighting with the burglar rushes down the hotel stairs might have been made much more tense and easily.

A Westerner and his wife (William H. West and Ollie Kirkby) come to the hotel, where the house detectives (Marin Sais and Charles Cummings), have been finding things to do and have shown themselves capable watchers. "Dude" Duncan (Frank Jonason), swell thief, discovers that the new lady guest has gems. He makes a very bold and quick-minded attempt to get them. The woman is alone, but her husband comes in and captures the thief. They get the lesser jewels, but the necklace is not found—it has been put in the vacuum cleaner pipe. How the house detective finds them makes an exciting story.

"All For Old Ireland"

First of Series of Irish Stories Produced by Sidney Olcott for the Lubin Company.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PHOTOGRAPHED in the picturesque Ireland of romance and history, this three-part subject made by Sidney Olcott has a rare charm that in itself is enough to assure popularity. As the action unfolds, we have engaging pictures of the Lakes of Killarney, the rocky shores of South Kerry, the Black Rock Castle on the River Lee and the famous Ballymallis Castle, built something over 600 years ago. If the photography is not always of the clearest, one may attribute the haze to the Irish climate and feel that the beautiful scenes

Scene from "All for Old Ireland" (Lubin).

—valleys, rivers winding through pasture lands and jutting rocks lashed by waves—appear much as they do in reality. At all events, the locations in this photoplay are so thoroughly in keeping with a romantic story that there is no need to complain of a lack of sharpness in the details of a background.

In finding an historic period for the intital release in the series, Mr. Olcott went back to the Ireland of 1798 and conceived an appropriate tale of heroism, introducing the patriotic peasants in their struggle for liberty. Myles Murphy (Pat O'Malley) is the sturdy young hero, who assists in smuggling slaver. Hope is saved; for three detectives make an arrest at the moment. Her mother dies after a row over the booty. Hope now becomes Circe in a classic dance and a famous fascinator of men—she keeps her impresario jealous, but when she sees him kissing another of the chorus she runs away to the seaside.

Her one-time father, who has become rich and bored, also arrives at the hotel. He has not forgotten his little girl, but doesn't recognize her. She marries him. The "Cup of Chance" incident comes when she, growing tired of the slow life at home, runs away to the theater and she and her former impresario come back to the house together, thinking that the husband is away. He finds them, pours out two glasses, puts poison in one and makes the girl serve himself and the other man. The impresario gets the poison. The picture has a cleverly worked thread of sentiment suggested by a lullaby. After the tragedy, it plays up this once more and very effectively and closes with a startling incident that makes an acceptable thrill.

In photography sets, scenes, acting and general direction for the most part it will hold its own above the average. The story is just the kind for screen picturing, though in this case it cannot be annalized. As an offering it will be liked.

"The House Divided"

Two-Part Pathe-Balboa Production Which Has Been Subjected to the Exquisite Pathe Hand Coloring Process.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"THE HOUSE DIVIDED" is deserving of special comment as much for its exquisite properties of coloring as for any other reason. The production is based on the old story of a misunderstanding between husband and wife and a reconciliation brought about by the children. The human interest of the picture has been heightened by the conversion of one of the children into a cripple through a fall from an upper story window, and which occurs while he is in pursuit of a ball.

The father, who has taken with him the little daughter of the house at the time of his separation from his wife, becomes a common laborer, leaving the beautiful home and all it contains with his wife and young son. Later, through the two children playing together, a circumstance arises through which the separated parents are brought face to face, and the unhappy conditions caused by selfishness and misunderstanding come to an end in a happy climax.

The production has the advantage of capable direction, and a good cast, the photography is clear and beautiful, the locations chosen for the staging of the picture are attractive, forming an excellent foundation for the hand coloring process to which the film has been subjected at the Paris plant of the Pathe Freres. The absence of subtitles in the film when viewed by the press has prevented us from giving a fuller outline of the story of the film, or a more analytical review. We can, however, emphasize the fact that even with the presence of this drawback the production is entertaining

"The Cub"

Thompson Buchanan's Comedy Is Brought to the Screen in Excellent World Film Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THOMPSON BUCHANAN'S story of a cub reporter in the mountains of Kentucky is comedy seasoned with melodrama. When Douglas Fairbanks played Steve Oldham on the stage there were more laughs than thrills in the performance, for the incidents in the White-Renlow feud could not, of course, be visualized as they are Director Maurice Tourneur's graphic picture. In the screen version of "The Cub," with John Hines playing Steve and Martha Hedman in the role of Alice Renlow, the comedy is not sacrificed, although the quantity of excitement easily exceeds that offered in the original play. Mr. Buchanan's plot fits into a photoplay more neatly than most plots devised specifically for the screen, and the production reveals the craftsmanship of a director who ranks high in the first class. The scenes of a mountain feud, culminating in the destruction of a house, challenge comparison with any that have been made.

Scene from "The Cub" (World Film).

While Martha Hedman, owing to her well earned stage prominence, is starred in the picture, her role, by the very nature of the story, is secondary to that handled in a broadly humorous manner by Mr. Hines. Having received word of the renewal of the White-Renlow feud, the editor of a newspaper sends Steve to cover it because he cannot spare anybody else and Steve might as well be in the mountains as loafing around the city. The cub reporter proceeds to live up to his reputation of being a happy-go-lucky fool. His antics with the donkey that refuses to move, except when so disposed, are ridiculous enough to be laughable and audiences will appreciate his unsuccessful attempts to remain neutral in the White-Renlaw altercation. His predicament is made the more embarrassing by affairs with two young women, one sought by him, the other unsought but equally unavoidable.

The plot which follows the progress of the feud is varied enough to be interesting without becoming in the least confused, and it keeps working up to a climax. The "truce" dance really marks the beginning of the end for Steve. It is here that he hopelessly antagonizes the White clan and his hasty exit from the hall starts a prolonged struggle to escape being "shot at sunrise." The comic and the serious are well mingled in the concluding reel of the picture that introduces a number of effects at once stirring and novel. Miss Hedman is pleasing as Steve's sweetheart, who assists in his rescue, and the supporting cast is efficient. Locations are excellent.

Two MinA Subjects

"A Night's Lodging" and "The Fighting Kid," Two One-Reel MinA Comedies of Merit, Produced by the Western Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE best feature about "A Night's Lodging," a recent one-reel Mina comedy, is the incessant rapidity of the action. The plot is of the happy-go-lucky order, who's one object is to create laughter. Milton H. Fahrney, the director of the film, is awake to the necessity in staging this kind of irresponsible farce, of keeping ahead of an audience's ability to analyze the incidents. The story deals with the comic adventures of an impecunious but still cheerful individual, impersonated by George Ovey, who takes lodging in a fashionable hotel and experiences great difficulty in remaining in his own room. Mr. Ovey's lively and clean-cut comedy methods enable him to register his points with unfailing ease and telling effect. Director Fahrney and the photographer have kept the mechanical and artistic requirements of the picture up to the most exacting standard.

"The Fighting Kid."

Another late release by the Mina Company is "The Fighting Kid," a topsy-turvy farce which closely resembles "A Night's Lodging" in speed production and power to amuse. A slender but well-chosen plot has been skilfully amplified by humorous incidents and clever bits of business. George Ovey leads the cast, which also receives valuable assistance from Goldie Colwell and Louis Fitzroy. Mr. Ovey impersonates the same coinless but joyous gentleman of the other farce, and his manner of knocking out a pugilistic rival is the source of the film's fun supply.

"When Ambrose Dares Walrus"

A Lively Two-Reel Keystone Containing Several Original and Ingenious Mechanical Devices.

Review by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHOEVER plots out these Keystone farces, whether it be Mack Sennet or his aids, seems to have an almost inexhaustible genius of invention, for they keep bobbing up regularly with something new in each release, and often, as in "When Ambrose Dares Walrus," with several entertaining novelties as relief from the expected buffoonery. The ridiculous pranks of the acrobatic performers, Mack Swain, of athletic eyeballs, or Chester Conklin of curious contortions, are anticipated with a sense of amusement—one is ready to laugh at almost anything they do, but their work might easily pall if kept up in any monotonous line of action. Such is not the case; there is a happy variety in each new presentation, and "When Ambrose Dares Walrus" is even an improvement on its immediate predecessors.

Possibly the most amusing feature of this very consistent farce—it is a genuine play—is the balancing of Conklin on a stream of water thrown by the fire department on his burning house. He has neglected to pay his fire insurance until the last moment, and then finds himself in dire straits, but he manages to raise the money just as the house catches fire. He dashes to the agent's office, pays the premium, takes a short turn outside, returns and demands the full amount, but discovers to his horror that he has left the policy in another coat than that he is wearing. He dashes for his burning home, outrunning a 'flyvver" driven by the fire chief, and manages to reach an upper window when a stream from the hose elevates him into space and balances him there. The story is a laugh-winner soon after it gets under way.

arms into the country from France and is imprisoned by English soldiers. Eileen Donaghue (Valentine Grant) becomes an important factor in his escape, effected by lowering himself on a rope, suspended from a window and down the side of a high castle wall.

While the production is not lacking in dramatic elements, its strongest bid for recognition is on the score of the fine locations, already mentioned, combined with a seemingly accurate portrayal of the life of the Irish peasants. The natural simplicity of many of the scenes is delightful. Miss Grant is a good type for Eileen and Robert Rivers gives a thoroughly artistic performance as Fagin, the spy in the employ of the English.

by those who found and sheltered her on that fateful day in the month of roses and brides and uncertain weather. She does not know her father when she meets him in her grownup years, although he is not greatly changed and she has a miniature of him in the locket she wears. Her father is a bad lot. His decadent habits drove her mother to suicide, and he is an unscrupulous valet of a cad when the daughter first meets him. It is the father who masks as a clergyman and performs the pretended ceremony that ruins so many innocent young girls in screen life.

When the girl's destroyer abandons her to spend a few years in South America, and she is compelled to sell her jewels, then it is that the faithless father sees his own picture in the locket she wears. He becomes attached to her interests thereafter and ready, even villain that he is, to atone for the wrong he has done. The girl marries, all unwittingly, a chum of the man who ruined her, and she conceals reluctantly an account of her past. She is happily married and has a sweet little child when the wrong man returns from South America and is invited to the house by her husband. Situation! This well-known situation admits of new treatment, but the wife is weak enough to visit the wrong man at his rooms in a hotel, and she is there compelled to kill him in defense of her honor. Her father now commits suicide and leaves a confession that he is the murderer. Wife, husband and baby presumably live happily ever after.

"The Mating"

A Five-Reel Mutual by C. Gardner Sullivan Directed by Thos. H. Ince and Featuring Bessie Bariscale.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS story, while it is well handled and presents many bright ensembles, does not give Miss Barriscale the opportunity that suits her temperament, nor is the motif original. She impersonates a school girl of ambition who finds herself socially neglected. In order to raise her importance among her associates she writes a letter to herself from an idol of the hour, a football player known as "Bullet Dick Ames." The scheme works to a degree when it becomes known that this fascinating hero is in correspondence with her and has proposed marriage by letter, but there are skeptics among the girls of larger social experience, and Bessie is finally called upon to meet her supposed admirer face to face.

All this is nicely told, and Miss Bariscale cannot fail to hold attention by her interesting personality, but a similar play, a three-reel feature, was released only a short time ago, "Her Proper Place," if I am not mistaken in the title, in which a girl neglected socially writes a proposal to herself from a political idol of the hour. In both cases the men are softened by a sense of pity that is followed by love and marriage. It is probable that neither director knew that the other was handling the theme, and such coincidences are all the more unavoidable in the rush of incessant production, but a story loses value from such a decided similarity. Miss Bariscale displays high intelligence in her part—she is consistent throughout—but she has done much finer things and is capable of characterization more powerful in roles better suited to her talent.

"The Cup of Chance"

Knickerbocker Three-Reel Picture With Alice Brady—Well Acted, Entertaining Melodrama.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT IS its story that makes this three-reel offering, "The Cup of Chance," produced for the Knickerbocker Company by Joseph Levering, good. With Alice Brady in the leading role as a young woman whose life was handicapped from the first by her having a bad mother, the story holds well and chiefly because the thread running smoothly through its plot construction keeps flashing into incidents unexpected and startling enough to prod the attention so that the pretty leading woman and the excellent cast that supports her can please the eye with the way they draw the situations. It tells a real picture-story full of action and it gets over.

In the opening stages of the picture when "Hope," the heroine, is merely a child and in the way of her very cold-hearted mother, there are places in which the characters do not stand out clearly defined due to weak subtitling, but one feels no lack of distinctness when once the real story gets into its stride. Hope as a little girl has a hard time of it.

Scene from "The Cup of Chance" (Knickerbocker).

Her precious mother, a widow, is "fast." Yet of her two suitors she takes the one who is only a poor clerk. Things get monotonous and she runs away with the other man, taking the child whom she doesn't love, presumably knowing that she may grow up to be of some use. Many years pass and we find her with her master selling on shares the now grown Hope to a white

"The Rug Maker's Daughter"

An Oliver Morosco Production Presenting Maude Allan in an Attractive Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE OLIVER MOROSCO PHOTOPLAY COMPANY, in association with Bosworth, Inc., did well in securing Maude Allan for the leading role in this picturesque romance. Of course, Miss Allan is primarily a dancer, a classic dancer, but she is also enough of an actress to give life to a character such as Demetra, the Turkish maiden, who is made the heroine of "The Rug Maker's Daughter." Some of the most interesting scenes in the photoplay reveal the graceful dancing for which Miss Allan is renowned, and it is to the credit of the director that these exhibitions are worked in as a natural part of the story.

There is no pretense of offering forceful drama in this picture, for the somewhat conventional plot is simple and not unexpected in its turns; but in lieu of thrills we find a wholesome story enlivened by a pleasing vein of light comedy. Forrest Stanley, as Robert Van Buren, the young American of the musical comedy type, who falls in love with the rug maker's daughter and proceeds to woo her with Yankee directness, handles amusing incidents with considerable finesse; Howard Davies makes an imposing Osman and Herbert Standing is appropriately cast as Halib Bey.

Adding appreciably to the romantic flavor of the story, are luxuriant gardens and sumptuously furnished rooms in which most of the action is centered. Rare selective judgment was exercised in the choice of these settings and the director permitted no incongruities in the costumes. The plot concerns the efforts of the rug maker to marry his daughter to a wealthy suitor, her objections and the effective interference of Robert Van Buren. The action shifts from Turkey to New York, where the young American checks the scheme of his rival and marries Demetra.

"The Clue"

A Lasky Production Featuring Blanche Sweet And Built On a Successful Play.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

ONE cannot resist the feeling that this story might have been told with less expenditure of celluloid, but the excess is so completely fraught with charm and art and scenic beauty that even a stickler for brevity in dramatic construction is apt to relent and lose himself in the admiration of such glorious settings.

The scenes in the "Sunken Garden" for scenic beauty and idyllic charm parallel the best that has been shown along these lines. The part of a Japanese is taken by a genuine son of the Mikado and is on the whole taken well. The man succeeds in creating and sustaining to the last the atmosphere of mystery on which the success of the play hinges. In the final scenes his realism is overpowering and perhaps a trifle too strong.

Blanche Sweet does not carry the whole burden of the play as she has been expected to do in other productions; her part is sympathetic and she carries it off well. She has not lost one whit of the girlish beauty and the singular charm of manner which have won her such a host of admirers. Edward

Mackay gave a good rendering of a somewhat difficult part and Billy Elmer did the best possible with the hard task that had been set before him. Two Russian brothers looked remarkably like two young Americans. Page Peters did not seem sure at all times as to just what was expected of him. Ernest Joy, in common with many screen actors, has a habit of expelling air from his lungs when apparently at a loss just what emotion he is to betray next. One never knows whether it is a sigh or a life-insurance test of respiration. It is a foolish mannerism and ought to be dropped.

"Jane Eyre" is Well Produced in Three Reels—Fine Locations for "Ashes of Inspiration."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE Biograph Company is following a praiseworthy policy in bringing many famous works in English literature to the attention of motion picture patrons. Also, wisdom has been displayed in the selection of stories offering enough dramatic incident to permit of photoplay treatment. This time we have Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre," done into a three-reel picture by Director Vale, with Louise Vale in the title role, and Franklin Ritchie playing Rochester. As a drama, quite apart from the sentimental interest attaching to the visualization of so renowned a novel, the production is eminently satisfactory.

The very human story is made to live, not entirely in the period of the author's inspiration, to be sure; but at all events it lives, so why cavil about the director's up-to-dateness in presenting his people in modern apparel. Something of the atmosphere of Bronte's novel may be sacrificed, but being human and dramatic, the picture serves a better purpose than a more precise transcript of the original, lacking these qualities.

There is no glossing over the tragedy on which the plot of "Jane Eyre" is reared, starting with Rochester's marriage to the unfortunate girl who soon goes insane. Nowadays, she would be committed to an asylum with little ceremony; but in the period described by Bronte, it no doubt was natural for a wealthy man to confine his demented wife in an especially prepared room in his own house, or rather mansion. The woman pounds her head against the padded walls without injury and under the care of a nurse, even her presence is kept a secret from the other inmates.

With the appearance of Jane Eyre as governess for Rochester's ward and the growth of the love affair between the young woman and her employer, the inevitableness of the tragedy is readily appreciated. This sense of impending evil is heightened by frequent glimpses of the insane wife, from whom, owing to the laws of England, Rochester cannot get a divorce. A telling situation is met when the marriage of Rochester and Jane is interrupted, and for a concluding thrill, Director Vale arranged a spectacular fire scene. In this he was favored by finding a half-burned house of dignified proportions that just suited his purpose. Miss Vale and Mr. Ritchie share the acting honors with Gretchen Hartman, who has the very trying part of the insane wife.

"Ashes of Inspiration."

The artistic beauty of the seaside locations in this two-part drama is marked. The story is not exceptional, but it more than suffices when combined with scenes of such an engaging quality. If the locations call for first mention, two members of the cast warrant second, for they possess enough individuality to attract attention—Jose Ruben, playing a young artist, and Ilean Hume as the sweetheart whom he cannot marry. In the garb of a fisherman's daughter, Miss Hume is a remarkably fetching girl, sweet and unaffected and quite the partner for Mr. Ritchie in a photoplay romance.

The material for this plot was found in the predicament of an artist afflicted with a selfish wife. She is irritating and hinders his work until a kindly uncle thinks it wise for him to take a vacation at the seashore. With a pretty girl for inspiration and her jealous suitor to make trouble, the outcome may be imagined. But in the end the artist remembers his duty to his wife and child. The picture is so well handled that it is worth while.

Myrtle Stedman Appears in Person

The Los Angeles premiere of Oliver Morosco's photoplay, "The Wild Olive," was made a special event by the management of the Alhambra theater on Hill street, where the stirring American-Argentine romance was exhibited. The feature which was responsible for the packed house was the announcement that Myrtle Stedman herself, co-star in "The Wild Olive" with Forrest Stanley, would give a selected program of songs. Miss Stedman, who was a noted light opera star with the Whitneys in Chicago before going into moving pictures, was in splendid voice and her reception amounted to an ovation. The audience showed unmistakably what a strong appeal is made when a film star appears in the flesh after having appeared upon the screen. A large delegation of notables from the photoplay world was on hand, and participated conspicuously in the general demonstration.

"Fate's Daughter"

Inez Wallace, Formerly of the Legitimate Stage, Features Herself in Picture from Her Own Scenario.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHEN Inez Wallace, after struggling with the conditions that confront those who would reach the privileged front rank of moving picturedom struck out single handed against the tide with nothing but her talent and the courage of her convictions to aid her, it behooved us to admire the enterprising spirit which prompted the young woman.

"Fate's Daughter," a reel of some seven hundred feet of film, marks Miss Wallace's initial effort in the line of film production. With this film it is her intention to play the various large picture houses between Cleveland and the coast, commencing with the Orpheum theater in Cleveland, augmenting the picture performance in which she plays the feminine lead, with an explanatory talk which will no doubt be intensely interesting, especially as it will give the audience an opportunity to become acquainted with the bright personality of the author-actress first hand.

Miss Wallace is a graduate from the legitimate stage, having been identified with "Paid In Full" and other well-known productions of the speaking stage. She has also appeared in picture theaters throughout the West, delivering a talk on pictures and picture studios, and is therefore more or less well known to exhibitors in that part of the country.

Inez Wallace in "Fate's Daughter."

The picture itself has no extraordinary characteristics, the story being slight and rather hastily developed. But it may be added, in justice to all, that the entertainment will not depend for its drawing power entirely on the quality of the picture, but on Miss Wallace's bright and charming manner of presenting her story.

"The Scar"

A Three-Part Vitagraph Melodrama with a Drug Fiend for the Villain—Some Gripping Situations.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS THE author of an ingeniously contrived scenario, Donald I. Buchanan is first of all responsible for the suspense and the thrills and the shudders of fear in "The Scar." Following the lead of the author, Director William Humphrey piled on the horrors relentlessly and altogether made a very damaging case against the dope fiend. He is a dreadful person, this Clifford Stanley, malicious in the extreme and dangerously resourceful in planning and carrying through his dreamed of revenge. There is nothing he won't do and almost nothing he can't do, one is inclined to believe, after watching him plot the ruin of his successful rival. The lesson of it all, for the picture is called "a melodramatic preachment against the drug habit," is that save for cocaine, Stanley would have remained a respectable citizen and deprived Mr. Buchannan of his story.

Scene from "The Scar" (Vitagraph).

For a plot of so many twists and turns, that offered in "The Scar" is unusually free from inconsistencies. Of course, it is rather far fetched at times, but if an audience accepts the characters in the first place, concedes Stanley's maniacal desire to injure Morton, and admits that coincidence may be a tremendous factor in shaping lives, there is no reason to balk at the series of incidents which place an honorable youth in the light of a thief and a murderer. Save for the scar on the arm of the dead man, used by the dope fiend as an instrument of revenge, the carefully worked up case might reasonably have terminated as its instigator intended.

The story is cleverly developed to keep the spectator in uncertainty about the outcome. In fact the author seldom allows more than an inkling of what is going to happen next and every now and again springs a real surprise. Harry T. Morey appears somewhat robust for a dope fiend, but his acting of the character is convincing enough. Gladden James, Estelle Mardo and Mary Maurice are others in the cast.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE NEW JITNEY IN TOWN" (Universal).

Adventure-loving sweethearts have been married in balloons in our grandfathers' time, on cowcatchers in the '80s, on tandem bicycles in the '90s and in aeroplanes in recent months, but Jane Gail and King Baggot of the Imp Company were recently married in a jitney bus. Yes, by a real live moving picture clergyman. And those benighted denizens of thither New Jersey who witnessed the ceremony really thought the ceremony was genuine until a small boy discovered a cameraman in a covered wagon nearby.

Herewith is reproduced the interesting ceremony with the spectators herded out of range of the camera lens. You will notice the tired New York business man (King Baggot) taking a minute off while the knot is tied. His fiancee (Jane Gail), like most ultra modern young women, takes the ceremony as a joke and regards the minister as a fossilized old fogey and remnant of the dark ages. Of course she ought to be jolly well spanked for her general air of impudent insouciance, but then New Yorkers are such a blase lot and marriage is such a trivial matter, don't you know—Reno, South Dakota, establish a residence, decree and more wedding bells immediately afterward.

As can be seen from the sign on the radiator of the car, Mr. Baggot is running a jitney bus more for his health than for the profit in it. He has just met his jolly passenger, proposed marriage before she paid her fare and now is ready to slip the minister a five spot for his trouble. The jitney marriage can be seen in the Imp comedy, "The New Jitney in Town," featuring King Baggott and Jane Gail, which will be released on July 27 by the Universal.

"CHIMMIE FADDEN," NEW COMEDY FEATURE.

That Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Lasky Feature Play Company, has struck upon a new and revolutionary comedy figure for photoplays in the character of "Chimmie Fadden" as portrayed by Victor Moore, seems unquestioned following the hundreds of communications from exhibitors that have been received by the Lasky offices since that photo-comedy was first released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on June 28.

Mr. Moore as "Chimmie" is a comedy figure as far removed from the "slap-stick" type of comedian as one could imagine. Mr. DeMille, under whose personal supervision the production was made, has started preparations for a series of "Chimmie" Fadden productions, the next of which will be "Chimmie Fadden Out West," in which Mr. Moore will star, of course, and which will be released through Paramount probably in September. The production will be made in the Lasky Studios at Hollywood, Cal.

This Irish boy of the New York streets, "Chimmie," has been declared by literary critics to a place alongside famous boy characters in American letters. He is a type as true to New York as to localities in every American city. He is a leader, a champion of justice and right, an enemy of hypocrisy and a soldier against the street bully. E. W. Townsend, now a Congressman from New Jersey, conceived the character of "Chimmie" when he was a reporter on the New York Sun some years ago.

His adventures should form a very interesting series for the motion picture screen.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE CASE OF BECKY."

Blanche Sweet in a style of photodrama work that is not only original with her but likely to place her, through the medium of forthcoming productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, in a position as a star and favorite which she not yet has attained, is the unqualified promise of the Lasky offices.

For the second time since her engagement exclusively with the famous producing firm, she will appear in the leading role in a Lasky-Belasco production. The play will be "The Case of Becky," by Edward Locke.

Perhaps no play from the legitimate stage offers such opportunities for the ingenuity of the director and the art of the star as "The Case of Becky" provides in photodrama form. Margaret Turnbull, who wrote "The Clue," Miss Sweet's most recent production, has prepared "The Case of Becky" for the studio, and the production generally will have the benefit of the united co-operation of the studio force. Henry Reicher will be the director immediately in charge.

DEELY AT CENTAUR STUDIOS.

Ben Deely, of vaudeville fame, is producing a one-reel comedy picture called "Won by a Leg" at the studio of the Centaur Film Company in Bayonne, N. J., in which the cast is composed exclusively of vaudevillians. Mr. Deely and Miss Marie Wayne are playing the two leading parts, and with them are Miss Hazel Harrington of Bernard & Harrington, Miss Mona Ryan, Harland Dixon, of Doyle & Dixon, and others. Walter Pritchard is cameraman. The picture is to be released through the World Film Corporation.

"THE CLIMBERS" ON V-L-S-E PROGRAM.

In the space left vacant by moving forward "The District Attorney," the V-L-S-E have decided to release the five-reel Lubin feature, "The Climbers" on Aug. 2.

This production, adapted from Clyde Fitch's drama, that under the same title was a decided success on the speaking stage, gives Gladys Hanson her first opportunity to appear on the "Big Four" program. This play abounds in the entangling situations brought about by the dealings of high financiers and the extravagant efforts put forth by those mortals, whose main objective is the social heights.

In outline, the story unfolded is that of a captain of industry supposed to be possessed of limitless wealth, whose spectacular dealings in the stock market finally result in bankruptcy. The story is filled with thrilling moments, without being sensational.

It is one of the strongest dramas ever written by Clyde Fitch, and its tragic and humorous side are general in their appeal. It is said that the work of Gladys Hanson in this production is exceptionally finished, and that George Soule Spencer, who shares starring honors with her, presents one of his best dramatic efforts.

"THE BATTLE AT ELDERBUSH GULCH" (Biograph).

PERHAPS the strongest endorsement "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" could have is D. W. Griffith's assertion that this two-reel production is one of his three greatest triumphs, the other two being "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Birth of a Nation." It is unquestionably the greatest two-reel battle picture ever produced.

It is difficult to witness this production without thinking of D. W. Griffith's later success, "The Birth of a Nation," the detail and technique being so similar that they at once establish the mark of the director. And again, the production is so entirely different from the present day offerings, the action being caught in the first few feet and carried at an interest-absorbing pace throughout the entire picture.

Scene from "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" (Biograph).

While the production as a whole is a massive spectacle, care has been taken to keep up the interest of the story, through the introduction of several humorous incidents which are sure to register with any audience. Mae Marsh is particularly effective in work of this nature, while Lillian Gish and Robert Harron have parts which call for more dramatic acting. Chas. H. Mailes shows to good advantage, the same being true of Kate Bruce and W. Chrystie Miller. Henry Walthall has a small part in the second reel, that of a troop commander.

The photography of the panorama scenes is excellent, the acting and directing throughout is perfect; in fact, it would be difficult to find a two-reel picture that offers the volume of entertainment found in this production.

"The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" is a feature that is sure to be booked as freely when it is released, which is July 30, as it was when first released some time ago.

JOSEPH LEVERING, PRODUCER FOR KNICKERBOCKER.

Joseph Levering, who has had a long and successful record as an actor-director, has signed with Knickerbocker Star Features, and has just completed his first three-part feature, "The Cup of Chance." Mr. Levering is among the younger directors in the field and is distinguishing himself as a capable producer in this drama, which calls for a wide variety of work for both actors and director. He directed Miss Alice Brady in "The Cup of Chance" and succeeded in surrounding her with a most capable cast of players and showed remarkable ability in the selection of settings.

Back of Alice Brady, John Reinhard. Standing beside Miss Brady, Joseph Levering, director. In the group are some of the actors of the Cabaret scene.

In the illustration Mr. Levering is seen explaining a scene to Miss Brady and the cast. This set alone required about 50 actors, which included some of the most popular cabaret dancers of New York.

"The Cup of Chance" was a difficult drama to produce, owing to the fact of its dealing with the shady side of life, a drama which has for its morale the fact that degraded motherhood leaves a lasting mark on the character of the child, all of which so affects its character that the destiny of the child is seriously affected, and through the child other lives are equally involved. In order to properly portray the story it was necessary to show the inside of life on the margin, all of which Mr. Levering has handled with delicacy and skill.

Mr. Levering's strong feature in producing is in holding true to the story. He believes in a story, and has strong views on the subject of technique, and holds that the scenario has the same relation to the finished drama as the architect's plans have to the building. Miss Brady declared that this story alone assured her of the wisdom of writing dramas expressly for the screen, as "The Cup of Chance" could almost be given without titles.

PATHE TO RELEASE SIX PART COLORED FEATURE BY SARDOU.

Pathe will release in the week of July 26 a superb six-part colored feature, "Pro Patria," written by Victorian Sardou and based upon the famous "Patrie" of that great French dramatist. This great picture features Henry Kraus, who played Jean Valjean in "Les Miserables," a most eminent actor of France, and is especially timely, dealing as it does with that time in the sixteenth century when Flanders, the modern Belgium, was overrun with Spanish armies of conquest, and when superhuman efforts were made by the despairing Flemish to rid themselves of their oppressors.

"Pro Patria" is magnificently put on and was staged in Louvain since to meet with such a tragic fate. The old world buildings, now marred and ruined beyond redemption by German shells, are used as backgrounds. The acting is truly great, and the whole picture grips from start to finish.

Sardou, the author, was born in Paris in 1831, and died in 1908. As early as 1877 he was admitted to the "Academy," that goal of the most brilliant Frenchmen. He was a past master in stage effects, and troubled himself but little with psychology.

"THE STRAW MAN" (Majestic).

A scare-crow who comes to life and is promptly captured by Georgie will furnish great amusement to all children who see the Majestic child comedy, "The Straw Man." The scare-crow comes to life simply because an escaped convict rushing through a field in his prison uniform has seen the possibilities of concealing himself. He assumes the dress of a scarecrow and maintains it as long as possible, but when the children come he still tries to act the part of a scare-crow, but one animated and endowed with uncouth movement.

Scene from "The Straw Man" (Majestic).

In addition to the effective scenes dealing with the capture of the convict, there are many school scenes of equal interest. The small hero, Georgie, is shown in school with his friend. Violet Radcliffe, the villain of the Majestic children's company, plays a bad boy at school. There are also the boy who is forever hungry, the tattle-tale and other school characters.

The straw man is played by Augustus Carney. George Stone is the hero. Carmen De Rue is Georgie's best girl and Jack Hull and Charles Gorman have parts. Georgie's grandfather, who materially assists with a rifle in Georgie's capture of the convict, is played by Carl Formes, Jr.

"THE PRETENDER" (Reliance).

Exceptional variety in screen subject marks the Reliance two-reel production, "The Pretender," which was filmed under the direction of F. A. Kelsey from the scenario of Bernard McConville.

The story is that of a man who is hurled into the sea from a liner and whose place in society is taken by a pretender. As Livingstone, the victim of the pretender, is picked up by savages and made a slave on a South Sea island, some of the scenes of this feature deal with primitive life. The variety is continued with scenes dealing with Winifred Gale, the girl whom Livingstone's father had wished him to marry. Social life in which she is the central figure, scenes in Australia, scenes on shipboard add to the variety.

Scene from "The Pretender" (Reliance).

An odd touch is added to the photoplay by the courtship of Winifred by Livingstone. When he escapes from the savages and returns to his own country, he goes to Winifred's home out of curiosity. He wishes to see what kind of girl it was his father ordered him to marry. As an unknown and with the pretender in control of his fortune and home, Livingston woos and wins Winifred. A murder by the pretender eventually gives Livingstone the proof he desires and he is able to regain his fortune, with Winifred as his wife to share it.

Felix Modjeska is the Livingstone. George Walsh is Rogers, the scientific crook who becomes the pretender. His accomplice is Vester Perry, while Elsie De Wolfe is Winifred Gale.

"THE NEWER WAY" (American).

"The Newer Way," a two-part "Flying A" drama to be released July 26, actually is startling in its modernity. Electrical contrivances of all kinds and descriptions are introduced into the story, which is a narrative dealing with the elimination of the human farm hand in favor of the electrical. Vivian Rich, one of the foremost "Flying A" stars, appears in the leading role, that of Petty, a maid of the mountains. In the hero role Joseph Galbraith, playing the part of George Ross, electrical inventor, is exceptionally pleasing. Briefly the story of the drama is this:

Scene from "The Newer Way" (American).

Ross undertakes to run a farm belonging to John Bates for a year. Immediately upon taking possession he installs every kind of electrical device, with the result that at the end of the stipulated time the farm is a high-paying proposition. Meanwhile, Ross has made the acquaintance of Petty, a sweet little mountain girl, and between the two a strong friendship has sprung up. Ross discovers eventually that Petty really is his own daughter. Through the girl he is united with his wife, from whom he has long been estranged. There is great rejoicing as a reunion is effected and all live happily ever after.

The story, especially the introduction of the elctrical inventions, is entirely new. An element of comedy is introduced when Bates, the real owner of the farm, a man as set in his ways as a man can be, visits the place and stares in open-mouthed wonder at the transformation.

Shades of Ben Franklin! When Poor Richard flew his kite in the thunder storm these many years ago, little did he realize what his discovery meant to posterity. The striking magnitude of electrical efficiency of today is cleverly demonstrated in "The Newer Way." It is a safe prediction to say that this two-reel "Flying A" production will meet with enthusiastic approval of film fans in every city, town and village where it shows.

FROM SHIPPING CLERK TO MANAGER IN SIX MONTHS.

World Film is keeping up its record for rapidity of promotion among its sales staff. In October last J. O. Kent was in charge of the shipping department of World Film's Detroit branch. He was appointed salesman and was so successful that he was advanced to assistant manager. Again he made good, with the result that a month ago he became manager of the branch. Mr. Kent is only 24 years of age; he is very ambitious and popular, and having the interests of his company at heart, is bound to go still further in its service.

"THE PURSUING SHADOW" (Picture Playhouse).

"The Pursuing Shadow," most recent of the Picture Playhouse Film Co.'s releases, is a feature which stars Tom Terriss, well known English actor who is now heading his own photoplay manufacturing company known as the Terriss Feature Film Co.

Scene from "The Pursuing Shadow" (Picture Playhouse).

and releasing exclusively through the Picture Playhouse concern. "The Pursuing Shadow" is based upon one of the best known of the Victorian Sardou plays which has been tried and found appealing on the legitimate stage by both the younger Mr. Terriss and his father who, up until the time of his death, was one of the best actors of his day. The story told is intensely dramatic.

V-L-S-E RELEASE CHANGES.

The Selig Company announce through the V-L-S-E that they have withdrawn their forthcoming five-part feature, "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," and have substituted Charles Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," featuring Otis Harlan, Grace Darmond and Rita Gould, for release Oct. 18.

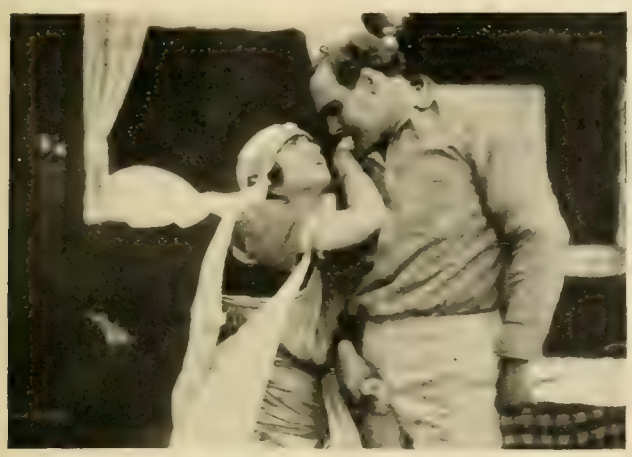
This action was taken to avoid any possible confusion that might result through the fact that the Lubin Company have released a three-part feature entitled "Whom the Gods Would Destroy."

BURN MILLIONAIRE'S MANSION.

Spectacular fire scenes, for the making of which a California millionaire's home was set on fire with the authority of the local fire department, provide one of the big features in Biograph's forthcoming three reel production of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, "Jane Eyre." A daring leap from the roof of the blazing structure, undertaken by Gretchen Hartman in the role of the demented Bertha Mason, caps the climax of these vividly realistic scenes.

"THE DEAD SOUL" (Lubin).

"The Dead Soul," by Wilbert Melville, a three-act Lubin production, is a powerful and unusual story, splendidly produced and illuminated by vivid and sincere acting. It tells the story of a sea captain, brutalized, unfeeling, with ungovernable impulse. His is the dead soul. It tells the story of the regeneration or rebirth of that soul through the example and self-sacrifice of a man of God who has been transferred to a ship and who sacrifices his life that the dead soul may be reborn. In the cast of "The Dead Soul," which is released July 28, are George Routh as Red Carson, the dead soul; L. C. Shumway as the Rev. Paul Stoddard; Eleanor Blevins and Riccardo Espino.



Scene from "The Dead Soul" (Lubin).

"THE PATRIOT" (Vitagraph).

The Vitagraph Company has begun production on the dramatic satire, "The Patriot," by William Hurlburt, picturized from the original story by Marguerite Bertsch. Theodore Marston is the producing director and has been given a cast that includes Charles Richman as Richard Cartwright, Joseph Kilgour as George Washington, Charles Kent as the Missionary, Arline Pretty as Elizabeth Bradbury, Rose Tapley as Mrs. Bradbury and Little Bobby Connelly as Robert Bradbury. "The Patriot" when completed will be in six parts and released as a Blue Ribbon feature.

"RAGS," A TYPICAL CHARACTERIZATION.

It has been a subject of frequent discussion by exhibitors and photoplay followers that Mary Pickford, the world's foremost motion picture star, has attained the greatest of her past screen triumphs clad in rags. It is therefore of odd interest, and particularly appropriate, that "Rags" should be the title of the latest photoplay starring this popular screen idol. In "Rags," scheduled for release on the Paramount Program Aug. 2, the great story of a girl's triumphant rise from the lowest strata of life to a position of social importance, through which she finds it possible to marry the man she loves, Mary Pickford, for whom the story was especially written by the noted novelist, Edith Barnard Delano, finds a typical and effective characterization. In interpreting the various human emotions with which this impersonation is crowded, Miss Pickford parallels her recent histrionic achievement in "The Dawn of a To-morrow."

Scene from "Rags" (Famous Players).

"Rags" is the daughter of a drunkard, who abuses and mistreats her, but whom she loves with all the ardor of a strong young soul. Her mother was loved in her early life by a wealthy man to whom, however, she preferred the worthless man she married, dying after the birth of her daughter.

How Rags, through the invisible influence of destiny, becomes so enmeshed in the web of fate that she meets the nephew of the rich man whom the mother had rejected, and falls in love with him, although realizing that his social position is too far above hers to ever permit a marriage between them, and how eventually her mother's former lover learns of her unhappiness and takes her to his palatial home to live with him, where his nephew again meets her, and who in the new surroundings renews his love, and convincingly and sympathetically related in the film.

"THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY" (Thanhouser).

Producer Moore has made a living document of Oscar Wilde's famous story of Dorian Gray. It tells of a young rake, who notwithstanding his gay and festive indulgences, shows no traces of it as the years slip by. He gradually becomes sensitive of it; it becomes an obsession with him, and it weighs so heavily on his mind that he begins to see it in a portrait of himself which a friend has painted. The picture seems to mock him, for the image of himself looks older each time that he gazes on it. He finally puts it into a secret room, for no eyes but his own. He goes there regularly, the face in the frame becoming more hideous and aged each time, until in an insane paroxysm, he hacks the canvas to bits, and drops dead before it. And the mystery is never solved.

Scene from "The Picture of Dorian Gray" (Thanhouser).

Harris Gordon plays the title role in sensational fashion, well supported by Ernest Howard, Ray Johnston, Morgan Jones and Claude Cooper. The production is in two reels.

VIOLA ALLEN AT THE OLD MILL.

Lobby displays have a strong tendency to make new patrons as proved by many progressive exhibitors.

The Old Mill theater in Dallas, Tex., has employed many unique ideas in lobby display for years past, and through them this playhouse has built a reputation that extends throughout the South. The above illustration speaks for itself on the matter of exterior advertising display. The one seen above is mainly of electrical floral decorations, when lighted each bulb is converted into a brilliant white rose.

"THE ISLE OF CONTENT."

"The Isle of Content" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, produced by George Nichols, from the story written by A. E. Himes, with action in every inch of film.

After trouble at home, Captain Spragot and his daughter Jane, make their home on a lonely island. Jane, in the years that pass, becomes a beautiful girl. Ralph Ashton, a young society man, loses his inheritance and ships on a vessel as steward. He is shipwrecked and is washed ashore on the Isle of Content. Jane, whose father has died, discovers the body and drags it ashore. They live alone on the island for a year and learn to love each other.

Scene from "The Isle of Content" (Selig).

One day looking for an old coat, Ralph discovers a bag of diamonds. Thereafter he is not content. He spends hours watching for boats. One day a ship is sighted and it takes Ralph Ashton and Jane Spragot back to civilization. Somehow the girl cannot adjust herself to the change of circumstances and Ralph seeks more congenial company. He becomes fascinated with Rossett Van Nott. Jane overhears the woman and her husband planning to elope. She is urged to secure a divorce, but she cries: "He is mine. I dragged him from the sea, and I won't give him up." Jane plots with a sea captain to save her husband. One night Ralph is overcome by assailants and chloroformed. He does not awaken until the old island is reached. He recovers consciousness and finds himself again on the Island of Content with Jane, whose plot to save him from himself has been successful. Beautiful scenery and convincing acting, presented by such artists as Eugene Pallette, Vivian Reed, Anna Luther and Al Filson add realism to this noteworthy story. It will be released Thursday, July 29th.

"GETTING THE GARDENER'S GOAT" (Falstaff).

This offering is in line with its predecessors of the Falstaff comedy. It is a deliciously rare little notion, in which Riley Chamberlin runs Peck's Bad Boy one better. It is unusual to see an old character play all the pranks on a young man, instead of the time-worn reversal. Riley dons it to undo one of Scene from "Getting the Gardener's Goat" (Falstaff).

Lorraine Huling's suitors who incurred his ill-will and the old fellow succeeds with flying colors. A feature of the comedy is the beautiful locations of the story, and the charming work of Miss Huling.

"THE SECOND IN COMMAND" (Metro).

The concluding scenes of "The Second in Command," which will be Metro-Quality's production, introducing Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow on the Metro Program for the first time, are now under way at Quality Pictures' Los Angeles studio. This important feature will be ready for release on the regular Metro Program on Monday, July 26.

Mr. Bushman will appear in the role made notable by John Drew on the regular stage, that of Colonel Miles Anstruther.

Scene from "The Second in Command" (Metro).

Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow are now permanent stars on the Metro Program and they will appear for the next five years exclusively in productions from the studio of the Quality Pictures Corporation, one of Metro's important allies.

Important regimental scenes were taken on the grounds of the Soldier's Home in California, where a stage was erected for taking them by permission of the superintendent of the Home. The British Consul at San Francisco was consulted about the costuming and was interested sufficiently to attend the staging at the Soldiers' Home, where he made several suggestions for verisimilitude. It may be said "The Second in Command" will be absolutely correct in all details representing British military manoeuvres and military equipment.

There are many scenes showing actual scenes of war in Africa between the British and the Boers, with a grand display of cavalry in motion and infantry and artillery in action.

Westinghouse at Exhibition

Exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Has Much to Interest Motion Picture Men.

AMONG the more practical and educational groups of intensely interesting sights that will greet the eye of the delegate or visitor to the Motion Picture Convention is that of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, showing the apparatus which this company has developed for use in projection work. This consists of mercury arc rectifiers and motor-generators for changing the alterating current usually supplied by lighting companies to the direct current so necessary for securing a good clear picture on the screen.

Westinghouse Exhibit at Exposition.

The main exhibit of the company is located at the intersection of the two main aisles of the Palace of Transportation. On entering the building from any door the eye of the visitor is at once greeted by the huge Westinghouse-Pennsylvania locomotive mounted on a turntable and slowly revolving in full view of the thousands who daily throng the building. Immediately adjacent to the turntable is a 55 ampere (4½ kilowatt) motor-generator set and control panel used to furnish direct current to the motion picture machine of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company located in one of their new steel cars in adjoining space. This set is in actual operation about eight hours a day, giving one an excellent idea of the ease and simplicity of operation afforded by this means of converting alternating to direct current.

The Westinghouse Company also has an exhibit in the Palace of Machinery. Here is shown a moving picture mercury arc rectifier in actual operation. This device takes the alternating current from the line, as supplied by the lighting company, and by means of a tube filled with vapor of mercury, changes it to direct current which is fed to the projection lantern. The peculiar greenish light given off from the mercury vapor bulb never fails to attract the attention of the passerby, and is often made use of by motion picture theater people as an advertising medium. This device is very simple to operate, has no moving parts and is an efficient means for changing alternating to direct current.

In addition to its own exhibit, the company has installed throughout the grounds a large number of motor-generators for use by other exhibitors, among whom may be mentioned the following:

The Precision Machine Company, New York, manufacturer of the Simplex projection machine, who have four of these sets installed in different exhibits; two in the motion picture theaters operated by the United States Department of Education, and the Precision Machine Co.; and one in theater of the United Shoe Machinery Co., and one in exhibit of the United States Steel Corporation. These machines are in daily operation furnishing direct current for use in showing reels dealing with the respective industries.

The Nicholas Power Co., in its attractive exhibit in the Palace of Liberal Arts, also has a Westinghouse motor-generator set, switchboard and rheostat installed, showing it in actual operation with a Powers machine.

These sets form a part of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company which will be represented at the Convention by H. W. Cope, Director of Exhibits, P. N. Harrison and J. A. Nadon.

"SAFETY FIRST" (Komic).

The funny and talented Fay Tincher is featured in "Safety First," Komic comedy by Edward "Komic" Dillon and Chester Withey, and of course directed by Mr. Dillon. Miss Tincher is ably supported by Frank Darien, Chester Withey, Max Davidson, Porter Strong, while Bobby Fuehrer leaves the ranks of juvenile players to become a crook with Mr. Dillon's forces.

Miss Tincher has the part of a wealthy young woman whose bonds and hand are desired by Mr. Duke. Duke hires a crook to rob the safe in which the bonds are kept. The central situation deals with the efforts of the crooks to rob the safe. Max, the famous detective, is hired to guard the office. He locks himself in the safe in order to be on the ground first.

The crooks, however, lower the safe from the window while the police keep the crowds back under the impression that regular safe movers are at work. When they have taken the safe to a place of hiding they push a stick of dynamite into a hole. Max, in the safe, just saves his life by cutting the fuse before it burns down to the dynamite. The second fuse is put through, but Max lights it from the inside. An explosion blows Duke and the crooks out of the window.

The safe robbing scenes are very effective. When the safe was being lowered for the picture big crowds were present and were really held in check by the police. The passage of the safe from the fourteenth floor of a commercial building to the ground with a hired acrobat perched upon it, performing funny feats, was caught by the cameraman.

"A MAN AFRAID" (Essanay).

This is a subtle psychological study of the influences that go to make a man a coward. The leading character in the story had been a coward all his life. Morally he was unafraid, but physically he shrank from any danger. He fought determinedly to overcome this tendency, but when suddenly confronted with danger all his resolutions vanished and he was an abject coward. His sweetheart discovered it and rejected him. His entire life was made miserable because he could not conquer his cowardice. Finally he met with an accident. The doctors operated and found that a piece of bone was pressing on a certain part of his brain which so affected his mind as to make him a coward. Though somewhat doubtful of himself he went out into the world and discovered to his great joy that he no longer was afraid, proving the contention of the surgeons.

While this problem is the underlying theme in the photoplay, yet there is planty of action to make it thoroughly interesting and at the crises thoroughly exciting. Richard C. Travers and Renee Noel play the leading parts in this two-act drama with unusual realism. Released July 31.

"ON THE JOB" (MinA).

Director Milton H. Fahrney has introduced in the new MinA Films a "Jerry" series, so called because each of these releases picturize the funny experiences of a peculiar but interesting character to whom the name Jerry is applied.

There is no connection of one release with another except that "Jerry," always in the same character, is the central figure in every story, each of which is distinct in theme and treatment.

In the release for Thursday, July 22, Jerry obtains a job as nurse to the gouty Mr. Rich. His duties call for him to wheel Scene from "On the Job" (MinA).

Mr. Rich about the home and through the streets, but simple as such duties may seem Jerry finds them difficult to fulfill properly. George Ovey, in the role of "Jerry," brings out a multitude of laughs. Others in the cast are Louis Fitzroy, Goldie Colwell, Jefferson Osbourne, Janet Sully and Gordon MacGregor. The release date is July 28.

"UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE."

It is not all beer and skittles directing, and acting in motion pictures as every student of these pages and of the movies thoroughly well knows. The players and their associates have to work hard, physically and mentally, and very often at grave risks of their lives, otherwise they would never make good, and there would be no movies to speak of.

But there are times when the lash of the director is mitigated, and an occasional cessation of toil before the camera is permitted. And the public is growing more and more interested in the intimate lives of favorite motion picture folk; what they do and how they do it, their recreation, hobbie, and leisure occupation, what they look like and are like in real life. It is a harmless and pardonable curiosity. Here is a World Film group of prominent players which will interest many. In the tree is lovely young Jose Collins, the star of a forthcoming World Film, "The Impostor." The gentleman with folded arms is the "lead" of that photoplay, Alec B. Francis. Nonchalant and smiling, the happy looking man in the foreground is the famous director, Albert Capellani.

Happy looking bunch, isn't it?

METRO HAS ART POSTER DEPARTMENT.

The Metro Pictures Corporation, in the lead as always, has been the first of the large picture distributors to realize the need of better posters for picture advertising.

In following out this line they have established a separate poster department under direction of Robert E. Irwin, who has had much experience in the designing and printing of artistic and attractive poster advertising. In this new department he will make it his chief endeavor to give exhibitors paper which will be distinctly in advance in quality and design of anything seen heretofore in the line of motion picture paper.

Among those who have already made posters or are making them for Metro may be mentioned C. B. Falls, the well known illustrator, Robert J. Wildhack, probably the best poster artist in this country; Ernest Haskell, whose poster portraits of Mrs. Fiske and Mrs. Carter were the first really art posters produced in this country; Edward Penfield, F. G. Cooper, whose Edison posters have attracted the attention of the world; Rae Irvin, of Life, D. Cory Kilvert, Sewell Collins and others.

Notes of the Trade

DOUGLAS GERRARD, leading man with Mary Pickford in the Famous Players organization and prior to that of the western Kalem company, has rejoined his first and old love, the Universal, and will play the lead with Anna Pavlowa in the Smalleys' eight reel production of "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

* * *

George Nash and a company of stage celebrities are now at work under Oscar Eagle's direction in a William A. Brady play called "The Cotton King," which was a great stage success. Oscar Eagle is famous for his association with the Selig company, for years, and before joining the motion picture forces, he had won a great reputation as a stage director with David Belasco, and the Liebler company.

* * *

General Manager Rowland of the Metro Company announces the acquisition of numerous new plays for Metro's producing companies. Among them are "Pigs in Clover," "Richard Carvel," "Rosemary, for Remembrance," "The Purple Lady," "Baccarat" and "The Silent Voice."

* * *

Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis are featured in the two reel Majestic, "Victorine" which is adapted from "The Goings on of Victorine" by Julian Street, the novelist. Work upon "Victorine" is in full swing at the Reliance-Majestic studios under the direction of Paul Powell.

Charles Stine plays the part of an oil painting in George Ade's fable of "The Tip and the Treasure," an Essanay comedy-drama. He is the artist's conception of an old "sea dog" who has stared for years out of an old gilt frame into the den of his home by the sea.

* * *

Through the kindness of E. S. Manheimer of The Film Exchange, the Salvation Army Home for Children at Spring Valley, New York, has been able to show feature films of David Garrick and other high class features for their entertainment. This policy of The Film Exchange is very commendable as it affords entertainment for many children whose parents are unable to give them the price of admission to a picture theater.

* * *

Victoria Forde, the popular actress has been signed by the Selig Polyscope Company and will play opposite Tom Mix, when that daring actor gets in action at the new Selig studio at Las Vegas, N. M.

* * *

For Vivian Martin's next picture "The Little Dutch Girl," it was necessary to build a complete Dutch Village. The buildings are located at Watson's farm near Fort Lee.

Ethel Barrymore has decided to appear in her last season's success, "The Shadow" in which she created a decided impression. Miss Barrymore will begin work shortly at the Rolfe-Metro studio at Broadway and Sixty-First street, New York.

"Billie's Rescue," a Reliance production in which Joseph Hennaberry, Irene Hunt, Bert Hadley and Chandler House appear is nearing completion at the Reliance-Majestic studios under the direction of Ray Myers.

* * *

Maurice Tourneur is busily engaged on a play which is called "The Ivory Snuff Box." In this Holbrook Blinn is to make his second appearance in the World Film productions. It is a thrilling story on the detective order.

* * *

Seven companies are working at the World Film studio constantly, and with the crack directors that are making features there, the World Film program can boast of knockouts that other feature companies are unable to bring into action.

* * *

Henry Kolker, last seen on the dramatic stage in "Her Great Name," under the management of Henry W. Savage, will make his first appearance in the Rolfe-Metro release "The Bridge." This play was acted with success by Arnold Daly.

May Limit Theaters

City Council of Minneapolis Now Working Over Plan to Restrict Picture Houses —Method Followed In Defining Saloon Districts Has Been Suggested for Film Shows—Would Limit City to 95 Theaters—Duluth Watching the Scheme.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

UNDER the plans of the Minneapolis city council for restricted moving picture theaters the city would be limited to 95 photoplay houses. There are already 90 in sight.

The council, which has been harassed time and time again by neighborhood fights near theater locations, suggested that the patrol limits be used as in defining saloon territory and in limiting the number of dramshops be tried.

A special committee of thirteen members was appointed to make a survey. It fixed on a number of 95, which allows an expansion of five. There are now fifty-five houses operating, fourteen licenses have been issued, two more applications have been approved and nineteen applications are on file.

Tentative plans will bar all new houses from the third and thirteenth wards. In the second ward, the photoplay territory will be limited to 4th street, 13th to 15th avenues; Como avenue, 15th to 16th avenues; Central avenue, Main street to 8th street; Oak street, Washington avenue to Delaware street; Washington avenue, Oak street to Ontario street. In the 11th ward, it will be Franklin avenue, from 13th to 23d avenues; Cedar avenue, 7th street to Franklin avenue; Riverside avenue, 23d to 23th avenues.

Duluth is watching the plan with interest and it has been suggested there that the theaters be limited one to each 5,000 persons. However, if the proportion is greater at present, it is not urged that any licenses be revoked.

MAY FILM OLD STEAMBOAT DAYS.

James J. Hill and other notables may take part in producing a film of early steamboating on the St. Croix river, the filming of which is planned for the latter part of July. The pioneer river men of Minnesota are planning an excursion to Taylor Falls and former Governor S. R. Van Sant himself an old steamboater, suggested the historical film. Every detail such as the loading and unloading of a picturesque assortment of freight will be included.

James J. Hill was a check clerk and it is hoped to induce him to go through the routine again before the camera. State Commissioner George B. Hazzard will be steward and the other positions will be filled by men now general passenger agents and holding other high positions in water transportation service. The passengers will be widows and daughters of the old steamboat captains. As another realistic touch a band of Chippewa Indians with their birch bark canoes will be secured.

Lou Scott of the Metropolitan at St. Paul, who was a steamboat clerk, has been suggested as stage manager.

MICHIGAN GOSSIPY ITEMS.

The Rath & Seavolt Film Manufacturing Company has moved to its new two-story fireproof building at 821-823 University avenue, St. Paul. The building, of Spanish style of architecture, contains besides the laboratory and offices, a complete projecting room.

W. L. Buck has sold the Princess theater at St. Peter to Harry J. LaDue.

B. C. Hazle has purchased the moving picture show at Alden from C. H. Henderson.

Lawrence Jung is contemplating opening a moving picture show at Lewiston. The Oviatt show there has been closed.

C. A. Watkins of Hayfield has purchased a complete moving picture outfit from the Monarch company of St. Paul.

The Majestic theater at Austin is giving a travel certificate with each paid admission.

George Ridley has leased the Brown & Mather building at Riverton and opened a moving picture theater. He will give shows two nights a week.

A. D. Beaudreaux of Wadena has bought the Majestic at Belle Plaine from Manager Webber.

Charles A Pierce has sold the Gem theater at Hill City to A. C. Abrahamson and M. L. Smith.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

GAIL ALLEN has sold the Royal, at Indianapolis, to O. R. Sebring. Mr. Sebring is to run Apex features at the Royal. He also owns the Wallace at Peru, Ind.

The Lyric, the Alhambra and the Colonial theaters, Indianapolis, are running photoplays continuously, and their success has been exceptional. The Alhambra has been charging fifteen cents for the night shows, and the increase in price has had no effect whatever on the crowds. Apparently they pay fifteen cents as readily as they pay five, at any rate the crowds are about all the house can accommodate. In the opinions of the managers of these three houses, the photoplay is a boon to the business.

Hal Kelley has installed a new machine in the Star theater at Montpelier, Ind. Recently Montpelier went "dry" and Kelley is interested in statistics to determine whether the change will affect his business.

The moving picture men at Anderson, Ind., seem to have won the day. Joseph Denneston, manager of the Grand Opera House, and Lloyd Richardson, his operator, were arrested June 27, charged with Sunday violation, but Prosecutor S. L. Brooks refused to file affidavits against them, saying that he did not believe the prosecution would be backed by public sentiment. Sunday, July 4, all the houses were open and ran without molestation, Chief of Police Mountain saying that it was useless to make arrests that would not be prosecuted. The houses were only open from 1.30 to 6.39 p. m., so as not to be in conflict with church services, but it is expected that hereafter they will be open at the usual hours. The churches, through members, will file affidavits now, it is said.

Walt Archer, Monon, Ind. after herding with the section gang on the Monon Railroad for his health's sake, has returned with a coat of tan and muscles on his back to his job as operator at the Lyric, Monon. The wops, he said, would be all right for a change, but not as steady companions.

Quincy T. Lyons has bought a picture show at Knightstown.

Alfred F. Brentlinger, appointed receiver for the Minuet Amusement Company, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has resigned and Jess Edson has been named in his stead. The suit for receivership was filed by Haywood Brothers & Wakefield, who have a claim against the company.

The Indiana Daily Times at Indianapolis and the Lafayette Journal, Lafayette, Ind., are scoring local boards of education for failure to take advantage of educational films by the installation and use of movie machines in school work.

The Pathe company, through J. R. Johnson, of Indianapolis, state manager, has promised to film the Associated Christian Workers pageant at Ft. Wayne.

Manager Rembusch of the Alhambra theater, Shelbyville, Ind., has installed what he says is the largest exhaust fan in captivity. The installation was made by the Typhoon Fan Company at a cost of $600. The particular fan was built for the National Exposition of the Moving Picture Art at New York and shipped from there to Shelbyville.

The amateur nights at the Orpheum, Hartford City, are drawing good crowds.

The Coburn Company made films of the A. A. U. swimming meet at Indianapolis. The first run will be shown at the English theater, Indianapolis.

Though the county prosecutor, S. L. Brooks, has said that he does not believe public opinion will back prosecution of theaters for Sunday opening, the movie managers of Elwood have announced that they will not antagonize the churches in Elwood by running on Sunday.

The George Ade fables are making big hits with Indiana audiences, according to reports being received. The Chicago speedway race won by Resta also is getting good attendance.

Tipton, Ind., evidently will not support two picture houses, though other towns of the same size are crowding three and four houses. The Habit, under the management of Arthur Haggerty, after rowing against the stream for some time, has quit. The house profits have never been encouraging.

The Crystal theater, Ligonier, Ind., has installed a pipe organ and musical attachments which amount to a full orchestra.

English's Opera House, Indianapolis, running pictures and vaudeville, has announced a Chaplin contest for amateurs.

Brentlinger and English at the Orpheum theater, Ft. Wayne, showed for the first time in Ft. Wayne July 8, "The Garden of Lies," in which Jane Cowl is featured and were unable to accommodate the audience. The house seats 1500.

The Alhambra at Shelbyville, Ind., owned by F. J. Rembusch is now using the Universal Program.

The Grace theater at Martinville, owned by Mr. Rembusch also is using the Universal program.

The United Film Renting Company of Indianapolis, with offices in the Lyric theater building, has installed a Rex renovator and is prepared to do outside work in adition to its own business.

NORTHWESTERN NOTES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANAGER Bogard has sold the Cody Opera house at Cody, Wyoming, to James Corder.

Members of the Modern Woodmen of America at Cheyenne, Wyo., were admitted free to the Lyric theater when "The Man Who Came Back" was shown.

Films of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen Castle dedication at Des Moines, Ia., were shown at the Dream theater at Puyallup, Wash., under the auspices of the local lodge.

Demands were so numerous that Manager Fairchild of the Curran theater at Boulder, Colo., found it profitable to play a return date of Selig's "Chip of the Flying U."

While the Grand Army men of Washington were encamped at Everett, the Central theater in that city featured the three reel "The Heart of Lincoln," which made a hit with the veterans. In addition, Captain Lawrence, formerly chief trumpeter for Colonel Roosevelt, gave a lecture on the European war and Miss Marie Lawrence, who assisted him in giving trumpet calls, illustrated a lecture on Red Cross nurses with costumes used here and abroad.

Henry M. Wilson has undertaken the task of reviving the Lakeside theater at Kirkland, Wash.

The Grand theater can no longer profitably run "legitimate" and Aberdeen, Wash., hears that it is to be dismantled. The popularity of the moving picture is blamed for the inroads upon the box office receipts.

DETROIT BASE HITS.

H. W. Irons has resigned the management of the new Norwood theater to again become associated with the John H. Kunsky theaters. He will take charge of the various Kunsky theaters while the managers are on their annual vacations, and later in the season will be given permanent charge of one of them. Frank Mellon, one time manager of the Gladwin Park, has succeeded Mr. Irons at the Norwood.

Every employe of the John H. Kunsky enterprises and the Casino Feature Film Company will get a vacation during the summer. Those who have been with the company previous to October 1st will receive two weeks with full pay, while those who came after that and before January 1st get one week with pay.

The Bijou theater, on Monroe avenue, Detroit, one of the first playing moving pictures in the middle west, discontinued business on July 1st, the lease having expired and the building sold. The Bijou was owned by William F. Klatt. It started originally as an upstairs theater, and later the theater was moved on the main floor to comply with the new building code, which prevented upstairs theaters. The Bijou was a big money maker always. The only exclusive Monroe avenue picture theaters now are the Royal and the Family. The Columbia, Palace and National play a combination of vaudeville and pictures.

When the writer asked George Trendle, secretary of the John H. Kunsky enterprises, what he thought was the future of the moving picture business, he said: "The demand for quality film is increasing so fast that the time is bound to come when there will be fewer producing companies. As in every industry, there are only a limited number of men able to constantly think out new things. The result will be fewer theaters of larger capacity, but better theaters than those now in existence."

John H. Kunsky and George Trendle returned July 1st from a trip to New York, where it is understood that they acquired a new program for the Casino Feature Film Company, one of their enterprises. This new program is said to be on a par with some of the best. Full announcement will be made in a few weeks.

All customers of the Casino Feature Film Company, Detroit, are now being supplied complete musical scores with each Paramount picture. The company, through its special musical department, works out a complete musical program for each feature, which it uses in connection with the John H. Kunsky theaters. The complete program goes with each feature, which is proving a great help and convenience to Michigan exhibitors.

The Pallister theater, 1640 Woodward avenue, Detroit, is now owned by the Woodward Theater Company, which makes the company's fifth house. The five Detroit houses are the Woodward, the Comique, the LaSalle, the Rosebud and the Pallister. Henry S. Koppin is president of the company, and Bert Williams general manager.

The V-L-S-E has opened a Detroit office at 502 Peter Smith building, with R. R. Hutton in charge. Mr. Hutton was formerly with the Pathe Exchange in Chicago. All V-L-S-E features will be booked through the Detroit office, and Manager Hutton assures Michigan exhibitors the very best treatment at all times.

Abe Siegel, manager of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation, attended the district managers' meeting in New York City July 1 to 6.

Rex Minkley, former manager of the Forest theater, is now traveling representative for the Fox Film Corporation's Detroit office.

The Henry S. Koppin interests of Detroit have sold the Empress theater in Toledo, Ohio, to J. B. Gardner, of Toledo, and L. B. Solether, of Bowling Green.

Universal Office Moved

Detroit Branch of Universal Film Company Has Moved to 159 East Jefferson Avenue—On First Floor and Just a Step from Woodward Avenue—Increase of Business Required Bigger Quarters—Equipment and Personnel of Office Force.

By Joseph Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

INCREASE in business has made necessary more room for the Detroit branch of the Universal Film Company, hence the removal from 87 Woodward avenue to 159 East Jefferson avenue, which is just around the corner from the old location. The Detroit Universal Film Company started in business at 87 Woodward avenue about two years ago, occupying a part of the second floor. Within a year the business grew to such proportions that the entire upper three floors were taken. About six months ago the Universal Film Company purchased the business, since which time the list of customers has been increasing by leaps and bounds.

The new quarters are 25 by 100 feet in size, and are most conveniently located, being on the first floor, even with the street, and just a step from Woodward avenue, Detroit's leading thoroughfare. The top floor of the building is to be used for the mounting department. The poster department will be in the basement. On the first floor are the general and private offices, the inspection department and receiving and shipping departments. An addition has been made to the rear of the building in the form of a fireproof vault, 15 feet square, where all film is kept.

A valuable feature of the new quarters is the two front windows which are used for displaying projection machines and other accessories for moving picture theaters. This is something which no other film exchange in Detroit has, due to the fact that none of them are on the first floor. That it is a valuable feature is proven by the fact that after two days of window exhibition, the exchange sold two projection machines, the purchasers admitting that they were attracted by them in the windows.

There is a small reception stage on the first floor, and then the space is partitioned off for the different departments. All partitions are stained in mahogany. The whole arrangement of the new quarters is bound to give exhibitors the very best service, and the fact that everything is on the one floor will greatly facilitate promptness in making shipments.

The staff of the Detroit branch consists of the following: George Weeks, manager; Ray Branch, assistant manager; Joe Deiner, booking manager; Norm Millard, shipping department; Emory Gill, poster department; Clara Kohane, auditing department; Bill Bailey, traveling representative. The Universal Film Company also has a branch office in Grand Rapids, Mich., in charge of B. L. Davis; one in Escanaba, Mich., in charge of Harry Brackett, and another in Toledo, Ohio, in charge of Charles A. Stimpson, all of which are under the direct supervision of the Detroit office. Grand Rapids takes care of Western Michigan; Escanaba of the upper peninsula; Toledo of Northern Ohio, and Detroit of Southeastern Michigan.

Two things are responsible for the success of the Universal in Michigan. One is the fact that they are producing better pictures all the time, and another is the fact that the company has George Weeks handling its affairs. Mr. Weeks is exceedingly popular in Michigan, knows the business thoroughly, plays square with everybody, and is hailed "the prince of good fellows." In Ray Branch he has a very able assistant who is close in touch with everything going on at all times.

THEATERS CHANGE HANDS.

Among the theaters which have changed hands recently are: The Warfield, 1030 Hastings street, formerly owned by Brown & Harding, sold to C. W. Ruse, who has already taken hold; Jos Green has sold the Wigwam theater, 1126 Mack avenue, to Herman Schulte, a member of the common council; Metropolitan theater, 1659 West Fort street, formerly owned by J. R. O'Dell, has been sold to Nicholas Payley, of the United Film Service; Alfred St. Onge has disposed of the Lester theater, 374 Hastings street; the Savoy, 229 South Chene street, formerly owned by R. F. Stuart, has been sold to S. H. Halstead; the Perrient, 930 Chene street, formerly owned by Ed Hilkie, has been sold to George F. Watkins, who also owns the Hippodrome theater, 1129 West Warren avenue; W. J. Cousins has sold the Ila theater, 341 Dix avenue.

J. O. KENT TO MANAGE WORLD FILM OFFICE.

J. O. Kent, formerly city salesman with the Detroit branch of the World Film Corporation, has been promoted to the position of manager, succeeding Joseph Klein, who has been transferred to the Chicago office of the company. Mr. Kent has been associated with the Detroit office since it was first opened. Here's wishing "Jimmie" the best of success.

UNITED OPENS NEW BRANCH.

The United Film Service Company, of Detroit, has opened a branch office at Escanaba, Mich., which is to handle the Northern Michigan business. Herbert Fowser, traveling representative, is temporarily in charge of this new branch office. He recently completed a three weeks' trip of the upper peninsula and the copper country and reported that business with the motion picture exhibitors was very good. Nowhere did he hear the least complaint. He said that a new theater was being erected at Escanaba that would seat 700, to be called the Bijou, that the Marquette opera house was now playing pictures, and that feature pictures seemed to be greatest in demand. "Wherever I went I saw exhibitors reading the Moving Picture World," said Mr. Fowser. "In fact, often in discussing pictures some exhibitor would say, "Well, according to the Moving Picture World," and so on. The exhibitors in Michigan certainly place a great deal of confidence in the World and they read it thoroughly."

SUCCESS AT BROADWAY-STRAND.

A lot of people who predicted "failure" for the Broadway-Strand theater are now beginning to "sit up and take notice." Harry I. Garson, the present lessee, who took hold of this playhouse after it had been in the rut and was ready to be torn down, despite the fact that it is a new building, says that the Broadway-Strand has been doing excellent business since it opened a few months ago and that he has plans under way which will make the Broadway as successful as any theater in the country.

To accomplish what he has so far with this theater has certainly required a lot of backbone and grit, but Mr. Garson was determined that the Broadway should succeed, and he set out to bring about that result. He has been able to secure unlimited capital and his latest improvement is the installation of a $35,000 pipe organ. But he does not mean to stop there. He is working on a dozen big things which will materialize before the summer is over. The same people who predicted failure for the Broadway at the start are now congratulating Mr. Garson on what he has been able to do.

No More Boys in Booths

Michigan Fire Marshal's Department Has Started a Vigorous Campaign Against Allowing Minors to Run Projecting Machines—Warrant Out for Manager of Savoy at Hancock Where Boy Lost Life In Booth Fire.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE crusade by the Michigan State Fire Marshal's department against moving picture managers who allow boys to run their machines or to be in the operating room has been started.

A representative of the Fire Marshal's office has secured a warrant for the arrest of Ben Gettleman, owner of the Savoy theater, Hancock, where, on June 9, Bernard Ohmann, a 17-year-old boy was burned to death.

Manager Cook of the Grand at St. Ignace, was fined for employing a boy under 18.

Deputy Marshal Samuel Robinson reports that fifteen managers have been arrested this year for violation of the fire prevention laws and twelve houses have been closed for non-compliance with orders of the department.

GRAND RAPIDS OPERATORS ASK ABOUT PROPOSED LAWS.

Moving picture operators of Grand Rapids have asked the city council, through their secretary, Bernard Kulms, whether there is to be any action on the proposed ordinance prescribing rules and regulations for operators.

MICHIGAN FILM ITEMS.

Citizens of Mt. Clemens had an Americanization Day celebration July 5, the feature of which was a lecture by W. W. Florer, of Michigan University, illustrated by patriotic moving pictures.

Col. W. S. Butterfield was at Saginaw recently to take a lease on the new Franklin theater to be used as a vaudeville house. While there, he approved plans for overhauling his photoplay properties. The Jeffers will get a new front and also a new name—the Strand. The new decorations will be in white and black enamel, with lattice work effects, following the general style of the Bismarck Gardens in Chicago.

The Bijou also will be redecorated and the seating plans altered. Both will remain exclusive picture houses.

A moving picture theater is a feature of the pleasure pavilion at Saugatuck, Grand Rapids, which has been opened by the Saugatuck Amusement company with E. E. Weed as manager.

Mertz Brothers sold the Princess at Cadillac to S. E. Veazey who has been connected with the Bijou Amusement company at Saginaw.

The Royal theater at Calumet has closed a voting contest in which it gave away a Ford car.

W. A. Chancellor and George Eichelberger of Arcanum, O., who have opened Dreamland, a new moving picture theater at Reading, are running General Film company service three nights a week. Chancellor has his own camera outfit and expects to film things of local interest.

Daniel Reinelt has taken over the Star theater at Gaylord.

"Salambo," the World Film Corporation feature, was booked by the new Garden theater at Marshall for its opening—July 14.

A. Berlin, of Chicago, recently was at Owosso negotiating for control of the Family theater to become part of an Orpheum circuit playing two reels of pictures and four acts of vaudeville. Grand Rapids, Bay City, Battle Creek, Jackson and Saginaw would be included in the circuit.

Birmingham is having a Sunday show agitation. Citizens have signed petitions asking that the seventh day performances be prohibited.

The Lincoln Theater Company of Wyandotte has been incorporated with capital stock of $20,000.

MORE CHURCHES USE FILMS.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE attitude of the Grace M. E. church trustees in Elgin in regard to moving pictures in church services indicates a gradually broader outlook. The two members of the board who did not vote for the use of films but, instead of being rabid opponents, remained neutral. Time was, when a similar proposition in almost any Illinois Methodist church would have precipitated a community-splitting row. Rev. George Gable, the pastor, will appoint a committee to help him censor films.

SUNDAY SHOWS IN LITCHFIELD.

Opponents of Sunday picture shows in Litchfield are urging the city council to close them. There has been no complaint of the character of the pictures run and the editor of the News-Herald fears that if the shows are closed the young people will find injurious places of amusement. "The small city is apt to make the mistake of being overzealous in its small things to do more harm than good," he warns.

"It looks inconsistent to vote from a dry town that a beer depot may run and then close the picture shows on Sunday. Don't strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," he adds.

HAS A RIGHT TO BE CHESTY.

Manager Dicke of the Dicke theater at Downer's Grove, is a bit chesty. After Deputy State Fire Marshal McMurtie looked over the Dicke and gave it a clean bill of health, he made an addition in the form of a notation that it was the safest, cleanest and best equipped of any theaters he had inspected.

THE DUNNES IN FILMS.

The Dunnes—the governor of Illinois and his family have been doing their share to uphold the dignity of the photoplay industry. The same week that the executive put a quietus on state censorship by vetoing the Olson bill he went to Aurora to be the central figure as governor of the state in the Illinois reel of the Lincoln Highway film.

Maurice Dunne, a son, took the leading part in a home talent film made in Springfield, playing the part of a newlywed who was feted and treated to a tour of Springfield's showplaces. Miss Maria Petefish, a society girl, was the bride. An explosion in one of the big mines near Springfield is the thriller in the piece. The camera work was done under the direction of O. W. Lamb, with the Paragon Feature Film company, of Omaha, Neb. The work was interrupted by a message from Mr. Lamb's Kentucky home saying Mrs. Lamb was ill and he left at once.

MERCHANTS AND MOVING PICTURES.

Even though the city may have lured all the band boys from Neoga, the merchants will not deprive the townspeople of their customary Saturday night festivities. A screen has been erected and films secured for a series of Saturday night shows. The Commercial club at Sherrard is working along the same line, having a Wednesday night open-air entertainment by an 18-piece concert company and three reels of moving pictures. Elsewhere the local picture theaters are utilized. A big "Get-Acquainted Day" at Poplar Grove finished with a bargain moving picture show for only nine cents at Renne & Robinson's house. Fifteen merchants in Chester have combined to allow their patrons the joys of Manager Schubert's photoplay shows at the Opera house. Manager Miller of the Princess at Woodstock has an arrangement whereby the retailers have special matinees every Friday and Saturday in July. These are absolutely free to the patrons of the stores. Separate shows are given for townspeople and rural residents.

HERE AND THERE IN ILLINOIS.

The Perfect Feature Film company has been started at Gibson City to specialize in advertising films. The first output was shown at the Princess theater in Gibson City, the reel being made up of local scenics. O. B. Lowry is active in its affairs.

R. S. Hopper, who sold the Alhambra, at Freeport, will devote all his time to moving picture photography, having a plant that has been keeping him busy. He has been filming the Grant Highway between Rockford and Dubuque, Ia., for the road association.

The Bon Feature Film company of Springfield has made arrangement to produce a local story at Hillsboro for Thomas O. Dowd, of the Colonial theater there. Bookings also have been made for Coffeen, Witt and Nokomis.

The Lincoln J. Carter company of Chicago is contemplating producing a local picture at Belleville.

W. L. Busby, of the Empire Hippodrome at Quincy, recently was in New York booking attractions for his house. It is the intention to use several big moving picture features next season.

The Elysian, at 2008 Main street, and the Illinois, in the 1300 block on Adams street, Peoria, have been closed.

Manager George S. Olmstead, of the Academy of Music at Sterling, has started moving picture and vaudeville shows.

Moving picture shows were transferred from the Majestic to the Illinois theater at Rock Island while the artisans were making the Majestic a roomier and more delightful photoplay house.

Manager Wilson has booked "The Spoilers" for the Airdome which he has opened at Cuba.

H. A. Faltz announced he would not renew his lease on the opera house at Somonauk after July 15. His two closing attractions, "Captain Swift," and "Atlantis," indicate he tried to give the people a good show.

A. N. Coles, proprietor of the Rock Falls Printing company has purchased the Lyric and Grand theaters at Rock Falls from W. McKim who will enter the photoplay field in Peoria.

W. E. Boyington, of Freeport, has purchased the Alhambra theater in that city from R. S. Hopper.

A moving picture airdome has been opened at Basco.

E. J. Burns is remodeling a building at Elizabeth for use as a moving picture theater.

The reconstructed Coliseum at Chicago Heights has been leased to a Chicago man who has rechristened it the Washington theater. The house, which seats 760, will be devoted to photoplays.

Fred Andres has again taken over the Fashion theater at Chicago Heights and will operate it as a five-cent moving picture house. Shows will be ten cents on Saturdays and Sundays.

J. R. Carrick has leased the opera house at Medora and will give two moving picture shows a week.

The Dorsey-Expedition pictures made in Japan and booked by the United Photoplays company were shown at the Palm in Rockford, then one of the first featured engagements in Illinois outside of Chicago.

Construction of a new moving picture theater to cost $12,000, which will be operated by Mr. Stevens has started at Downers Grove.

Manager Swanson has opened a moving picture show in the Auditorium at Electric Park, near Plainfield.

LETTER FROM WISCONSIN.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Grand theater at Oconto Falls is to have a new home, Manager Sam Cohodas having taken a five-year lease on a building which will be remodeled.

Fred Fischer, operator at the Murray Avenue theater, 464 Murray avenue, Milwaukee, acted quickly in a film fire in his operating room. He threw out five reels and then hurled out the blazing reel. He was severely burned about the face and arms.

Harry Graham has severed his connection as manager of the Butterfly theater at Milwaukee to become manager of the new theater in the Merrill building in that city.

Zander & Pufahl have sold their lease on the Crescent at Shawano to R. C. Feister and H. Cohodas of Menominee, Mich., and Sam Cohodas of Oconto Falls. The new proprietors operate four houses, one at Iron River, Mich., two at Menominee and one at Oconto Falls.

The Crystal at Monroe is playing up the "jitney" idea in its advertising, having "jitney nights."

B. E. Newman, the moving picture photographer, husband of Myra Dietz Newman of the Cameron Dam films, has purchased a 240 acre farm near Wausaukee and Mrs. Newman will make her home there.

The Majestic picture show under canvas, at the Fourth of July celebration in Cassville, changed its program for every show during the afternoon and evening.

The Wisconsin State Agricultural College has had moving pictures made of the alfalfa harvest at the big Cornfalfa farms near Waukesha.

The Wisconsin Film corporation of Milwaukee has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are W. S. Griswold, Mabel A. Griswold and Gladys Aitken.

QUESTION NEW KNOXVILLE TAX.

R. R. Shaw, of Knoxville, Tenn., is taking a prominent part in investigating an ordinance now before the City Commissioners of Knoxville. This ordinance provides an increase of nearly 250 per cent. in taxes. A meeting of four of the leading moving picture managers of the city resulted in the appointment of Mr. Shaw to make the investigations. The managers expect to appear in a body before the commissioners. A number of the managers believe that the tax should be assessed according to the number of seats in a theater. This special tax is embodied in the revenue law that passed the last meeting of the general assembly.

DARKIES TO SEE A SERIAL.

Whether or not serial pictures will appeal to colored patrons of moving picture houses will shortly be known by the management of the Star theater, of Nashville, a theater on Cedar street which operates a theater for colored people. The fifteen episodes of the "Black Box" will be shown at the theater, one of which will appear every Monday. The Star is the oldest of a number of moving picture houses for colored people in Nashville, and it enjoys a large daily patronage.

WILL MAKE SOUTHERN FILMS.

A. F. Harlow and Walter M. Cline, of Chattanooga, are now busy organizing a company to be known as the Southland Motion Picture Company. The company will have as its object the manufacture of Southern mountain and plantation films. A film has just been completed by the two men individually. This film is a moonshiners' story which was made in the mountains of eastern Tennessee, and which is said to be full of action throughout. The title of the film is "The Message of the Waters" and a number of prominent Chattanooga people are in the cast. The film was recently run off before a private audience at the Alcazar theater, and was said to be exceptionally good.

To Test Sunday Laws

Chattanooga Exhibitors, Led by Howard Graham, Manager of Majestic and Quality Way Theaters, Will Arrange Test Case to Get Definite Understanding of Law in Tennessee on Sabbath Opening of Picture Houses—Think It Not Forbidden.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

HOWELL GRAHAM, manager of the Majestic and "Quality Way" theaters, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is working with the theater owners of that city in arranging to test out the Sunday-closing regulations which now are enforced in the city. A number of theater owners claim that there is really no law against staying open on Sundayfl. Mr Graham stated that a test case would be arranged as quickly as possible so as to get a definite understanding of the law.

"The moving picture men are not disposed to abuse the law," said Mr. Graham, "they simply wish to understand whether it is constitutional or not and they are going to find out as quickly as possible." He stated that in his opinion the law should allow the moving picture theater to operate if it allows drug stores or tobacco shops to remain open.

Opposition To Sunday Opening.

For three consecutive Sundays the theaters of the city maintained open house while running charity plays for the purpose of securing funds for a policeman and fireman's club. At the end of the three weeks the owners decided to continue running open on their own hook, but quickly found that the movement would be opposed. M. N. Whitaker, the Attorney-General of the state, served notice on Sheriff N. P. Bush, of Hamilton County, that the carrying on of one's ordinary business on Sunday was an indictable offense, and that he expected the chief executive officer of the county to execute the law as he found it, which meant that he was to arrest all owners of motion picture theaters who ran open. The managers of the theaters agreed quietly to open on Sunday regardless of the orders from Whitaker, and ignore the orders to the Sheriff as they had not been delivered to the theater men, and they were not supposed to know anything about them.

Several weeks ago when the benefit shows were operated Commissioner Betterton asked City Attorney Carden to render him an opinion as to his duties and powers in the premises. The legal advisor ruled that, in his opinion, the operation of motion pictures on Sunday is not against the Tennessee laws and that no city ordinance in Chattanooga prohibits the operations of theaters.

Court Decision On Sabbath Breaking For Business.

Atty.-Gen. Whitaker in a letter sent to Sheriff Bush cites a portion of the language used in a Supreme Court decision on the case of Parker vs the State of Tennessee, relative to the following of one's secular avocation on Sunday, as follows: "The statute makes it unlawful for any one of the enumerated classes to follow his secular avocation on the Sabbath day, because it is immoral and of pernicious effect, and though it may be conceded a single offense and be liable only to the penalty prescribed in the statute, yet a succession of such acts becomes a nuisance and is indictable. . . . Nor is it necessary to a conviction that the proof should show that any person was disturbed thereby. It is sufficient that the acts, which the law holds as illegal and forbidden, have been done in such public manner as to have been open to the observation of the public. Their tendency is to corrupt public morals, and the example is pernicious and contrary to law and the well being and good order of society."

Mr. Whitaker advised the sheriff that if the proprietors of moving picture theaters operated their theaters more than one Sunday they were indictable and could be punished, and it was the sheriff's duty to arrest and present all parties to the Grand Jury.

Theaters Open; Managers Are Summoned.

The theaters opened as agreed between the managers and six managers were summond to appear before a local magistrate on a charge of violating section 3029 of Shannon's Code, which arranges for a fine of $3 on conviction. There were no prosecutions on the summons to the magistrate's office as it was a first offense, the three prior Sundays not being considered, as no proof had been obtained as to whether the theaters were operated for profit, or just why they had been open, therefore it was construed as a first offense, but one which would subject the owners to the $3 fine. However, the attorney-general stated that the case was more in the nature of a civil proceeding than a criminal case, and that the $3 forfeit was not binding.

Degree Of Offense Not Clear.

Section 3029 to which references have been made included a holding of the Supreme Court that a violation of this provision is not an indictable offense under section 437 of the Shannon Code, which provides that the performance of any act prohibited by statute, where no penalty is imposed, shall be a misdemeanor. These two sections and sections 3030 and 3031 of Shannon's Code, referring explicity to barbering on Sunday, constitute the entire legislation in reference to observing Sunday in Tennessee.

It is the opinion of some people that the law does not make a violation of section 3029 a misdemeanor, but provides a penalty to be recovered in an explicit way by a definite procedure.

Exhibitors Arrested.

Those arrested for the first violations were: Howell Graham, manager of the theaters operated by the Mountain City Amusement Company, and the Majestic Amusement Company; H. M. Lusk, manager of the Picto; C. C. Bobo, manager of the Bonita; P. Block, manager of the Royal on Main street, and H. M. Silverman, manager of two colored houses on East Ninth street. Bud Bryson, manager of a colored house on Main street, was the only manager in the city to escape a summons, and his house was not open.

Pictures Soon At The Lyric.

Considerable interest has been manifested in Chattanooga over the recent announcement that the Lyric theater would again become active. For several seasons there has been any number of rumors concerning developments to be made in which the Lyric would figure, but the developments were always in the future and generally failed to materialize. It was stated at various times that the building would be remodeled into a department store, office building, club, or other things, including an elaborate restaurant. However, definite plans are now being worked out whereby the oldest amusement house in Chattanooga will shortly open as a moving picture theater under the management of the Signal Amusement Company, a recently incorporated company. A large photoplay-organ is being installed, the theater freshened up, and arrangements have been made whereby the "Island of Regeneration" will be the first picture shown. Vaudeville will probably be added later in the fall, as the management feels certain that it will be possible to attract crowds to Sixth street again.

Economic Films Free

Missouri Rural Towns to Be Provided With Pictures Showing Vocational, Industrial and Economic Subjects to Be Shown Free In Churches, Schools and the Like—Transportation Only Charge—Bureau of Economics Owns Films.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Business Men's League of St. Louis has procured twenty-three films of commercial, industrial and vocational subjects that will be sent out to schools, colleges, churches and any other organization that will agree to exhibit them at educational meetings to which the public will be admitted free. No charge will be made by the league for the use of the films beyond transportation expenses.

The reels are the property of the Bureau of Commercial Economics of Washington, D. C., an association of institutions, producers and transportation lines, whose object is to disseminate information by means of moving pictures. The Business Men's League will act as distributors for Missouri, and the films will be loaned out to any country town in the state.

The Federation of Commercial Clubs of Southeast Missouri, whose headquarters are at Cape Girardeau, have asked to be sent reels dealing on the subject of good roads.

The popularity of the films has been so great that a number of preachers have used them in their Sunday evening services. The Rev. Douglass Buchanan, of the North Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. John L. Brandt, of the First Christian Church, cut their sermons in half on Sunday night, July 4, and entertained the assemblages in their churches with the Economic films for the balance of the service.

LAFAYETTE THEATER CHANGES ITS MANAGEMENT.

The Lafayette, at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, and the Russell Garden, between Jefferson and Missouri avenues, on Russell avenue, which have been under the direct management of S. Warner, of the Jefferson and Russell Amusement Company, have been put under the direction of W. C. Rauschkalb, who has been connected with the Virginia Garden for a number of years. The new management went into effect Sunday, July 4th. The policy of the house will not be changed, and big features will be run Monday and Tuesday nights, such as "The Spoilers," "The Christian," etc.; Wednesday and Thursday, pictures and high class vaudeville; Friday and Saturday, pictures and dramatic stock; Sunday, an extra big picture bill and vaudeville. The prices will be restored to the original figure of 10 cents. Mr. Warner, the former manager of the Lafayette and the Russell Garden, has been ill for some time.

PATRIOTIC SYMBOLS AT NEW GRAND CENTRAL.

The New Grand Central, at Grand and Lucas avenues, used a very pretty symbol that was greeted with enthusiastic applause by the audiences at every performance during the week of July 4th. As a fitting and appropriate feature Manager Wm. Sievers secured the powerful and gripping photoplay drama made from Israel Zangwill's famous novel, "The Melting Pot," with Walker Whiteside in the leading role, and at the end of each performance, while patriotic Americans were emerging from the symbolical melting pot, the "Star Spangled Banner" was struck up by the New Grand Central orchestra, to the accompaniment of rousing cheers from the audience, who rose to its feet as one man. Afterwards a large portrait of George Washington was flashed on the screen to the strains of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and at the same time a white dove, carrying an olive branch in its bill, descended from above the stage over the audience. "The Melting Pot" will run two weeks, and from all indications at this writing will run to capacity houses during the entire engagement.

TWILIGHT MUSIC AT SKYDOME.

The Lyric Skydome, at Delmar and Taylor avenues, is giving a concert on the lawn of the garden between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock each evening before the performance begins. The Lyric skydome, which is one of the handsomest alfresco theaters in the country, is laid out like a garden, with fountains, gravel walks, pergolas, flowers and a lawn that give it a right to its name of "Garden" in the fullest sense of the term. The tendency of the audience to come early and stroll around in the garden at least an hour before it was dark enough to start the pictures led the management to arrange the concert. The Skydome is one of the Cornelius group of theaters.

DISCONTINUES SUNDAY MATINEE.

The McKinley theater, at Jefferson avenue and Accomac street, has discontinued the Sunday matinee that was a feature of the house, since the warm weather has set in. The McKinley, which has the only roof garden in St. Louis, or perhaps in this part of the state, is one of the most attractive little theaters in the country, and is prospering greatly under the management of Mrs. Klingler, who is one of the few women theater managers in St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS NOTES.

The Plaza theater, at Clara and Etzel avenues, will remain open all summer this year. Manager Townsend gives his patrons an exclusive moving picture program with high class features as the special attraction.

Announcement was made in the daily papers of St. Louis that the big feature, "Cabiria," could be seen on the nights of July 8 and 9 at the Nebraska airdome, Nebraska and Park avenues, for the first time in the city, at 10 cents admission. J. W. Dubach, manager of the Nebraska, has been giving his patrons as many of the high class features as he has been able to secure since the opening of the airdome, and the admission has never been above 10 cents.

Freund Brothers, proprietors of the New Favorite summer theater, at Cherokee street and Ohio avenue, are advertising their enterprise on large 24-sheet permanent wooden bill boards. The boards are painted in three colors and are very attractive.

ATLANTA TRADE NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The Montgomery theater last week advertised the following:

"Owing to the fact that F. T. Montgomery has no connection whatever, financial or otherwise, with the Montgomery theater, on Peachtree, and owing to the further fact that Mr. Montgomery is planning to actively re-enter the motion picture field in Atlanta, the management has decided to change the name of the Montgomery theater."

The management decided to let its patrons select the new name, and a contest was started Monday morning, July 5. Blank coupons were presented at the box office to each patron. The winner will receive an annual pass to the theater.

The Forsythe theater, the home of vaudeville, is the latest to take a hand in the moving pictures in Atlanta. When Jake Wells a few weeks ago looked over the list of available talent to take the week of July 5th in the vaudeville at the Forsythe he declared there was nothing doing. He would not send acts to Atlanta unless they were of the right sort, hence vaudeville takes a few weeks' vacation at this popular theater, and moving pictures will hold forth. "Scandal" will be shown four times daily during the week. All seats will be reserved as usual. The prices are put at 25 and 15 cents.

The Grand theater has booked this week Maud Allan in "The Rugmaker's Daughter"; Viola Allen in the "White Sister," and Blanche Sweet in "The Clue."

Among the local feature exchanges none perhaps keep busier than the North American Film Corporation, where R. V. Anderson presides over the destiny of the "Diamond from the Sky" in the South. Mr. Anderson was formerly the local manager for the General Film Company for the South, and his popularity among the exhibitors in this territory assists greatly in placing contracts for the "Diamond from the Sky."

J. D. Danford, manager of the Almo No. 1, is doing the best business of this popular theater's career, playing to almost capacity daily.

The Laurel theater, at Laurel, Miss., together with its equipment, was destroyed by fire Sunday night. The loss is estimated at $50,000. It is said a lighted cigarette dropped into a trash barrel caused the fire.

Many Dalton, Ga., people saw a moving picture in real life Monday, when a company of actors and actresses of the Essanay Company staged a motion picture at the county fair grounds at Dalton. The work was under the direction of Captain Calvert. The party made the trip to Dalton from Chattanooga, Tenn., in automobiles, going over many famous battlefields of the Civil War.

Evins Bros., of the Vaudette theater, are getting some of the best pictures now being produced, and the theater is crowded to capacity each day. All their pictures are first-run and no repeats.

The Montgomery theater, soon to change its name, announces for the full week "The Eternal City," at an advance to 25 cents. July 4th the theater was playing to full capacity.

B. Lee Smith, a newspaper man in Atlanta for years, and one of the best publicity men in the South, leaves the newspaper field this week, having accepted a position with the local branch of the V-L-S-E feature productions. He assumed his new duties Monday. Mr. Smith was for a while manager of the Strand theater, but resigned in order to again enter the publicity department of the Hearst interests. Mr. W. C. Brandon, manager of the V-L-S-E, is building around him an organization of efficiency that will soon be hard to beat, and the addition of Mr. Smith will greatly strengthen this organization.

Frank T. Montgomery announces that the "Regent theater," on Peachtree, at North avenue, would be finished and opened to the public July 8. This is the first of a series of high class neighborhood theaters Mr. Montgomery is planning to open in various residential sections of Atlanta. His policy is to present high class pictures, in programs which will be the equal of anything that can be seen in theaters in the business sections. The experiment is a new one in Atlanta, and will be watched with unusual interest.

That beautiful Theda Bara, whom Atlantians have come to know as the "wicked actress of the screen," is playing "The Devil's Daughter" this week at the Strand.

General council, Atlanta, Monday, July 5, adopted an ordinance reducing the license tax on motion picture theaters from $150 to $100 per year. It was pointed out to the tax committee, which framed and recommended the ordinance, that the theaters were not doing as big a business this year as formerly.

PERCY L. SMITH.

Below is a photograph of Percy L. Smith, managing Director of the Picture Play Amusement Company of Montgomery, Ala., operators of the Empire theater, which is an exclusive feature theater and the first theater in the south to contract for the exclusive feature contracts. Mr. Smith is well known in the film circuits, having represented the Southern Paramount Pictures Company under Mr. C. E. Tandy, general manager. Mr. Smith is known most familiarly throughout the south. In fact he is considered the best known film man in the south, and it is said that he is known by more exhibitors than any other man in the entire south.

PERCY L. SMITH.

Mr. Smith has operated theaters in different parts of the country and has opened a number of theaters in the states of North Carolina and Virginia and is said to be the busiest man in the south at the present, having been given the nickname by the newspapers of Percy L. "Inside" Smith. Besides having the management of the Empire theater and handling as a side line the Minusa Screen and frames manufactured by the Theater Specialty Mfg. Co., of Cleveland, Mr. Smith is at present engaged in producing a serial picture called the "Tourist Girl," featuring one of Montgomery's leading society girls, Miss Isabelle Norwood.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Sydney Lencher, road man for the Alco Film Service, Pittsburgh, has been temporarily transferred to the Chicago office. He is one of the most successful road men in the business.

The pictures of the Knights Templar field day exercises at Schenley Park were shown at the Garden theater, Northside, last week. They made a big hit at the beautiful Northside house.

Clyde W. Eckhardt is manager pro tem of the Hudson local office during the absence of Al W. Cross, who is in New York on business.

Sidney E. Abel has severed his connection as manager with the Continental Feture Film Company, Pittsburgh. There seems to be general regret expressed by the film men and exhibitors that Sidney is leaving the Steel City. It is said that he will become identified with the V-L-S-E.

Manager O'Brien, of the Grand, at Clarion, Pa., has repainted and overhauled this house.

George Panagotatos, of the Grand theater, in Johnstown, Pa., was a visitor in Pittsburgh last week. Mr. Panagotacos has changed the policy of his house; he has cut the regular program out and is now running first run Fox pictures, Liberty and Picture Playhouse features.

Three Exchanges Sold

Universal Film Manufacturing Company Buys Three Pittsburgh Exchanges, Independent Film Exchange, Independent Display Company and Film Department of Feature Film and Calcium Light Company—Personal Notes.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE main topic of discussion in the Pittsburgh motion picture field and one regarded with more than usual interest is the sale of the Independent Film Exchange, A. S. Davis, manager; the Independent Display Company, T. D. Miller, manager, and a part of the film department of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, D. C. France, manager, which took place in the office of Mr. Davis, Saturday, June 26. As a result of this deal the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has taken over the above-named firms; M. H. Hoffman, Universal's general manager of exchanges, negotiated the deal.

The Universal films, heretofore handled by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, including the serials, have been moved to the present location of the Universal exchange at 412 and 414 Ferry street. Mr. France will manage the serials and feature department of the consolidated exchanges and has his office located here also. The poster department, which has been conducted by the Independent Display Company at 416 Ferry street, has also been moved into the Universal headquarters.

The Universal program was put on the market in this territory about four years ago and has been very successful under the capable management of Mr. Davis, who will continue as manager of the consolidated exchanges.

POKE BUILDING THEATER.

Henry Poke is having his motion picture theater built at a cost of $60,000 on Shiloh street, Mount Washington, Pittsburgh. The theater is to seat 1,200, will have a balcony, lounging room, smoking room for men and a retiring room for women. The building will be of steel, concrete, brick and terra cotta, the main facade to be of colored ornamental marquise. It is to be one of the finest and most up-to-date motion picture houses in the city. Ground for it was broken some days ago and it is to be finished by October.

I. & D. FILM CO. REORGANIZED.

The Industrial & Domestic Film Company, located at 2534 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has reorganized and increased its capital and is now in a better position to handle the work. The new officers are: R. E. Spencer, president; Cassius M. Mitsch, secretary, and W. B. Jones, treasurer and manager. This company's office and studio is on the ground floor at above mentioned location and they are equipped to do anything in the motion picture business, from the taking of the pictures to the finished product. Some very important jobs have been produced in the past.

HUDSON FEATURE MAKES SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, has announced that it has closed contracts with R. R. Roberts, of New York, which entitles it to handle the following subjects in West Virginia: "Neptune's Daughter," "After the Ball," Beulah Poynter in "Lena Rivers," and "Protect Us." This is in addition to the Western Pennsylvania territory now supplied by this exchange.

The management states that there is a lively demand for "Should a Woman Divorce" and "The Frank Case."

The Hudson has arranged with the Interstate Film Company, 224 Columbia Building, Cleveland, O., to handle features in Northern Ohio. This is a new concern in Cleveland which recently bought out the Ideal at the same location.

DIRECTOR FITZMAURICE WITH STAR CAST IN STEEL CITY.

The three principals announced for George Fitzmaurice's production of the well known melodramatic success, "Via Wireless," indicates that the production is surely going to be an all-star one. Gail Kane, whose success in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "The Miracle Man" will be remembered, will be the leading woman, and opposite her Bruce McRae will play. Paul McAllister will have the character part.

For the production of these scenes showing the making of a modern sixteen-inch gun, Director Fitzmaurice recently had his principals in Pittsburgh and there staged the scenes in the actual atmosphere.

THE STRAND A PERFECT HOUSE.

One of the most perfect houses in Pittsburgh, the Strand, was opened July 1. This house is owned by C. J. Keller, who has left nothing undone and has been most liberal in his expenditures to make this house one of the finest in the city. It is located at the corner of Lincoln and Lemington avenues. The building is designed in the Greek style of architecture. The auditorium, the floor of which is arranged so as to give an unobstructed view of the pictures, is a very important feature in the construction of the building.

The decorations are worked out in green, gold, ivory and autumn brown and lighted with indirect fixtures.

ANVIL NOTES FROM STEEL CITY.

A. M. Mueller, of the Cincinnati branch and P. C. Mooney, of the Cleveland branch of the Fox Film Corporation, were visitors in Pittsburgh last week, where they met Manager Harvey B. Day of the Pittsburgh office and the three proceeded for New York to attend the first annual convention of the Fox managers.

The only moving picture theater operated in Cherry Valley, the Rex, has installed an electric piano and is reported to be giving good results. This house is run by August Caleffe and his two sons.

The seating management in the New Avenue theater, in Bellevue, Pa., was changed last week so that every one could have an unobstructed view of the screen.

Mr. Evans, of the Precision Machine Company of New York, is spending a few weeks in the Smoky City and is making his headquarters at the office of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company.

Charles Schatz, owner of the Lyceum, in Meadville, Pa., has opened his theater, "The Grand," at Exposition Park, Conneaut Lake, where he is offering all the latest releases.

Charles Brown, the well-known manager of the Scenic, in Bellefonte, Pa., has left for a two-months' trip to the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Meyer Goldstein, of the Rex, on Preble avenue, Pittsburgh, was married last week to Miss Rae Mancosky, of 2376 East 43d street, Cleveland.

The "Devil's Daughter" was played at the Davis theater week before last and made a decided hit. Every performance saw the house crowded to capacity. It was repeated last week at the Lyric, another Davis theater.

Censor Fee Contemplated

Secretary of Portland, Oregon, Board Proposes a Central Viewing Place and a Fee for Each Reel Viewed—Some Opposition to Plan by Exchange Men—Censors Will Recommend It In Monthly Report to City Council.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BELIEVING that a central viewing place will enable the censor board to handle its work more expeditiously, Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, proposes to initiate an ordinance before the city council providing for the establishment of such a place and the fixing of a fee for viewing each reel of pictures. Heretofore it has been the practice for the film reviewers to make the rounds of the exchanges and view the films in the exhibition rooms. Now, says Mrs. Colwell, the distribution of films in Portland has increased to such an extent that this method of viewing is unsatisfactory.

While the proposition is merely a tentative one at the time of this writing, the exchange men who have expressed themselves on the subject are not in favor of Mrs. Colwell's plan. They already have their exhibition rooms, machines and operators which must be maintained in any event to show films to their customers and they believe that the maintainance of a central viewing place will be an unnecessary expense. Mrs. Colwell will make her recommendation to the city council at the time of her monthly report.

ROUSE COMES TO NATIONAL.

M. M. Rouse, formerly of Los Angeles, has taken over the management of the National theater, vice Melvin G. Winstock, resigned. Up to the time of leaving Los Angeles Mr. Rouse was assistant manager for the Paramount-Progressive Service at that city, having been conected with the Paramount company for two years. A coincidence worthy of note is that Mr. Rouse received his early education in the film game from Mr. Cummock, who recently came from the Paramount-Progressive office in Seattle to join the managerial force of the People's Amusement Company. Mr. Rouse is contemplating renovating the house and making important changes in the manner of conducting it.

Mr. Winstock, the retiring manager, will attend the exhibitors' convention in San Francisco and the Rotary convention and from there will make a trip to Seattle. Mr. Winstock advises he has several propositions in view for the future, including the management of a theater in Seattle and a producing company in Los Angeles.

SIMONTON GETS OREGON RIGHT TO "PROHIBITION."

F. M. Simonton has landed the rights to "Prohibition" for Oregon, Washington and Idaho. Bob Kane, recently here in the interests of the picture, disposed of the rights to Mr. Simonton and it will be booked from Portland shortly.

SNOW PICTURES TAKEN.

Photoplayers of the American Lifeograph Company, producing "The Golden Trail," recently returned from Mount Hood where they have been filming the snow scenes for this picture. A large crowd of mountain climbers were on hand for the customary Fourth of July ascent of the mountain and they were pressed into service to represent the gold rushers on the Klondike trail. Director Vincil reported an exceptionally clear atmosphere and correspondingly good photography.

NEGOTIATIONS FAIL.

The negotiations that have been taking place between the Portland Protective Association, the employers of Union music in Portland and the Musicians' Union have not been successful in bringing about an amicable adjustment of the difficulties up to the time of this writing. Notice given by the employers terminating the employment of the musicians on July 4 was withdrawn upon the receipt of a communication from the Union. This communication was, however, misconstrued by the employers and upon a true construction being placed upon it, the employers again found it necessary to give their men two weeks' notice. The matter is now before the Labor Council and a speedy and peaceful adjustment is looked for.

JUNE CENSOR REPORT.

The municipal censor board has submitted its monthly report of its activities to the city council and it shows that although business was not quite as good as during the previous month, more eliminations were ordered. During June 418 subjects were viewed by the board and subordinate viewers. These subjects were contained in 743 reels and of this number two films were condemned and from the balance eliminations were ordered in 52 subjects. The full board was called upon six times to view questionable films, two of these viewings resulting in the condemnation of films.

Mrs. Colwell, secretary of the board, regretted the feeling that seems to exist between some of the Portland picture men and the censor board and upon being advised by the writer that the difficulty lay entirely with the no-appeal ordinance and not with the personnel of the board, stated that it had not been the intention of the board to promulgate a no-appeal ordinance and that the character of the ordinance became apparent only after its passage and upon test in the courts.

OREGON NOTES.

The Grand theater, Ft. Dalles, Oregon, formerly conducted by A. J. Lawrence, has been taken over by A. Bettingen.

Powers, Oregon, a new town in the Coos Bay country, has recently added a picture theater to its enterprises. The owners are Schroeder and Spires.

The Palm, Clinton and Brooklyn theaters, in the Portland suburbs have closed.

R. Kuhn, of the Kuhn theater, Lebanon, Oregon, was a recent visitor at the General Film Company's Portland office.

The Service Film Company is patting itself on the back because it sold to the Portland Pathe Exchange a Pathe projecting machine to be used in the Pathe exhibition room.

The Savoy theater, Eugene, Oregon, has contracted for a part Apex service.

FILMS IN SPOKANE CHURCHES.

By S. Clark Patchen, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE REV. DR. FRANCIS B. SHORT, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, who was the first local minister to see that a full moving picture outfit, with fireproof equipment, was installed in his church more than a year ago, showed patriotic and other scenes at the church as a special feature of the services Sunday night, July 4. The pictures included "A Sane Fourth," "Andy Falls in Love," views in France and "An Arcadian Maid," with Mary Pickford in the title role. The church was filled to capacity and many persons were turned away. Patriotic songs were sung. Heretofore the picture entertainments in the church have been on Tuesday or Friday nights.

When St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal $60,000 church was completed about a year ago a full moving picture equipment was installed at the direction of the Rev. Dr. U. F. Hawk, pastor. Many week night programs have been given and were largely attended. In view of the fact that the Methodist discipline forbids amusements, such as theaters and dancing, the innovation caused some stir in local church circles and the putting on of a Sunday night program caused a few more of the conservatives to take notice. The Rev. Dr. Short explains that by having the pictures shown in the church he can have church censorship suitable to his young people and can show only such pictures as he chooses as best for the young people.

When an attempt was made at the last general conference of the church in Minneapolis three years ago to change the rules of discipline, the conservative element of the church defeated the insurgents at every turn. Despite this action the two local pastors, with the consent of their official boards, made the change.

SPOKANE AMUSEMENT PARK HAS NEW AIRDOME.

For the past couple of years Natatorium Park has not charged any admission and this year to add to the interest at the park a large outdoor screen has been built of aluminum surrounded by logs and an amphitheater with seats for 1,500 has been prepared where free moving pictures are shown nightly. The seats are surrounded by lawns on a natural grade back of and to the sides of the rows of seats, where still more persons can view the pictures. Additional to this the company purchased a Motiograph machine and employed an operator, A. Courtsey, who runs off a program of four and five reels of pictures nightly. The average attendance is placed at 1,000 by R. A. Willson, manager of the park, and on July 4 about 1,800 persons viewed the pictures while that number was increased on the night of July 5.

All films are selected by C. C. McEachran, assistant manager of the park, who exercises great care that nothing with a touch of immorality or suggestiveness appears in any films shown at the park. This is done in accordance with its policy and the pictures prove a great drawing card for the amusement resort. A contract has been signed with the General Film Company to furnish the features.

While many patrons ride the cars to the park hundreds of others, living in the vicinity, walk and the majority of the audiences are made up of women and children. The program generally starts about 8:30 p. m., as it is not dark enough sooner to give the best results. The program is changed every night and is mixed with comedy, dramatic and some of the tamer melodramatic productions.

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

Announcement has just been made by the Clemmer theater of a test made in secret to gather which was the more popular picture star, Marguerite Clark or Mary Pickford. Both actresses were given an equal amount of advertising and each ran four days. While Miss Pickford made the better showing, the management announced that Miss Clark had the largest of any one day and was also handicapped by two large picnics, including the midsummer festival of the Swedish-American League and by Chauncey Olcott appearing at the Auditorium theater for two nights. Miss Pickford appeared in "Fanchon the Cricket," of the Famous Players, June 2, 3, 4 and 5, had a total attendance of 12,-0 0 and an average daily attendance of 3,000. The biggest attendance was 3,500 for one day. Miss Clark appeared June 23, 24, 25 and 26 in "The Pretty Sister of Jose," a Lasky production. There was a total attendance of 11,600, an average of 2,900 daily, and the largest day's attendance was 4,000.

L. S. Forbes of the Class A theater announces that the Charles Chaplin attractions are money makers for his house and that he will appear July 11 in "The Woman," which opened one day ahead of the regular release date owing to the program changing at the Class A Sundays.

IN EASTERN WASHINGTON AND NORTHERN IDAHO.

The faculty of the Washington State Normal School, Cheney, Wash., has purchased a Simplex machine from the General Film Company branch in Spokane and will run educational and travelogue features weekly both at the summer and fall and winter semesters in the institution.

The "Rose" and "Class A" picture theaters of Hillyard, Wash., have been consolidated as the Class A under the management of Mrs. Holmes, former manager of the Rose.

W. A. Pease, formerly a railroad superintendent at Nez Perce, Ida., has just completed a new picture house at Deer Park, Wash., and has a confectionery in connection with the picture house.

At Lewiston, Ida., the Star Amusement Company, composed of William Abbott, president, J. Herbert Miller, manager, and D. W. Henderson, secretary, all of Sandpoint, Ida., and who operate the Gem theater at Sandpoint, recently opened their new theater at Lewiston. The amusement place seats 500 and owing to the heat at Lewiston the management has so constructed the building that a space of four feet can be left open all around the top of the theater just beneath the roof, thus giving excellent ventilation to the place. This can be closed at will either entirely or in part to suit weather conditions.

When the Masonic hall at Wallace, Ida., burned July 3 C. C. Spencer, manager of the Grand theater, Wallace, was a partial loser, as he had some moving picture equipment in the hall, where he showed special features to the public at intervals.

C. R. Potter, manager of the Dream theater, Coeur d'Alene, has purchased the Rex theater and consolidated the two, according to a report at a Spokane film exchange.

Ibsen's "Ghosts," which opened a four-day run at the Liberty theater June 30, was taken off after two days by the management, and "The Lonesome Heart," presenting Margarita Fisher, completed the week ending July 3.

For July 4 and 5 the local picture houses mostly arranged for patriotic features, additional to regular bookings. The offerings were: Casino, "The Carpet From Bagdad"; Liberty, "Fighting Bob"; Clemmer, "Clarissa"; Rex, "In The Shadow," and the Lyric, "The Declaration of Independence."

IN CALIFORNIA.

J. Bower, formerly of Kennett, is now in charge of the Lyric theater at Chico.

The Princess theater, Empire theater and the Red Bluff Opera House at Red Bluff, have been consolidated and L. H. Stoll is booking for these. The Princess has been closed and the shows are divided between the Empire and the Opera House, the former being open five days a week, and the latter two days.

H. G. Hanlein is again operating the Home theater at Anderson, in the upper Sacramento Valley.

A new moving picture house is to be opened shortly at Shastina, a suburb of Weed, by J. Luiris.

J. B. Travelle, of the Elite, Placerville, recently visited San Francisco to make arrangement for service. He has changed the policy of the house and is now showing feature attractions exclusively.

George Bailey, whose theater at Turlock was recently destroyed by fire, has opened a large airdome and will conduct this throughout the summer.

The Colfax theater at Colfax is now being conducted by S. K. Williams, who gives a show once a week.

The Happy Hour, at Grass Valley, has been closed for the summer.

Menace in Free Pictures

San Francisco Exhibitors See Danger In Recent Application by Saloon Keeper for Moving Picture License—League Appoints Committee to File a Protest With Board of Police Commissioners—Shall the Saloon Be Made More Attractive?

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World

THE exhibitors of San Francisco have been stirred to action during the past week by the application of Jacob Margulis, a Greek, for a saloon and moving picture license for a location in the Third and Howard street section. Upon learning that such an application would be acted upon by the Board of Police Commissioners a committee from the Exhibitors' League was appointed to be present at the hearing and to file a protest against the granting of any such permit. The committee, consisting of Mark E. Cory, A. Goldberg, I. Oppenheimer, H. J. Gosliner and Nathan K. Herzog, appeared before the Board at the regular Tuesday meeting and presented many reasons why the application should be denied. The saloon man was also on hand, together with the representative of a large brewing concern, and outlined the plan that was under consideration for the showing of pictures.

According to this plan pictures were to supplant the customary free lunch, a portion of the saloon to be fitted up something after the fashion of a regular theater, with the addition of drinking tables. Anyone buying a drink would be privileged to remain as long as they wished to see the pictures. It was pointed out by the saloon men that combination houses of this character are now in operation here and they argued that it would be discriminatory not to grant the permit. The exhibitors, on the other hand, showed that these houses were of a different nature and located in entirely different environments. These houses are large dance halls in what is known as the Barbary Coast where the sale of liquor is no longer allowed, except under certain restrictions. The exhibitors succeeded in having the application for a permit shelved for a week and in the meantime will attempt to arouse a sentiment in official circles against awarding licenses of this character.

At the regular luncheon of exhibitors and film men held later in the week the matter was gone into thoroughly and it was the general opinion that strenuous efforts should be made to prevent such a proposition from gaining a start here as it would be degrading to the industry. The Film Exchange Board of Trade will take action on the matter and will probably have a representative at the next meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners. The matter will be brought to the attention of Mayor Rolph, a great admirer of moving pictures, and it is believed that he will oppose the granting of a permit of this character.

LESSER MAKES EASTERN TRIP.

Sol L. Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, is making a hurried business trip to New York to confer with the management of the Metro Pictures Corporation and will return to San Francisco with moving picture men coming to the Convention. Mr. Lesser is also the head of a new concern that has just purchased the rights to "The Clansman" in sixteen of the Western States, incorporation papers for which will be filed shortly.

FILMS TO AID WELFARE WORK.

Dr. A. J. Reade, of the Race Betterment Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich, has been giving three lectures a week on this subject in Simplex theater Number One, Palace of Education, on the Exposition grounds, with an average attendance of more than four hundred at each lecture. Most of these people are intensely interested in matters pertaining to education and are greatly impressed with the part that the Simplex projector is playing in solving the problem of graphic illustration. On these days the attendants at the Simplex exhibit upstairs are swamped with inquiries regarding the practicability of motion picture projection for welfare work and for bringing it more forcibly before the very people whom these lessons will most benefit. F. B. Cannock, secretary of the Precision Machine Company, is still here and now plans to remain for several weeks.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO ITEMS.

The Valencia theater has discontinued vaudeville and is now showing moving pictures exclusively.

S. W. MacLewee, formerly of Ye Liberty, Oakland, has been placed in charge of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc.

D. W. Griffith's historical motion-picture spectacle has commenced its twelfth week's run at the Alcazar.

The New theater on Polk street has been taken over by H. S. Levin and is being operated as "The Movie."

C. B. Price has returned from a trip to Los Angeles where he established a branch exchange for the V-L-S-E, Inc., at 645 South Olive street and placed H. D. Naugle in charge.

George Metcalfe spent the July holidays in the Lake Tahoe region, making the trip there by automobile. Before leaving he superintended the arrangements for a moving picture entertainment at the St. Francis Hotel given by a delegation of Chinese business men touring this country, the pictures illustrating scenes in China.

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

Willard Wagner, of the Minor theater, Arçata, was married recently to Miss Hazel Liscom of that place.

The Hayward Opera House at Hayward has been reopened by A. Shelton with moving pictures. The house has been remodeled and renovated.

A new moving picture theater and dance hall has been erected by Theodore Richards at Auga Caliente Springs, in the Sonoma Valley.

The new T. & D. theater has been opened at Watsonville under highly favorable auspices. While the population of this city is but 10,000 there is a thickly populated country district to draw from and a house that would be a credit to a city of five times this population has been erected by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco.

The Atlas Educational Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, with a capital stock of $15,000, by Alvin B. Rehm, Monrovia; Arthur W. Cowdin, Los Angeles, and I. R. Rehm, Chicago. This is a different concern from the Atlas Film Corporation now in business in San Francisco.

The Central theater, recently opened at Oakland, has been closed after a run of but two weeks.

The Park theater on Twelfth street, Oakland, has been opened under the management of C. L. Jacoby. This is a fine new house seating 900 and equipped with two Powers' Cameragraphs.

Ben Rutledge, who conducts the Dorris theater at Roseville, made a trip recently to the Exposition City to arrange for service and to see the sights.

The Majestic and Broadway theaters at Chico have been closed for the summer season and their proprietors, Messrs. Woods and Turner have opened a splendidly arranged airdome with a seating capacity of 1,000.

Cincinnati's Big Storm

High Winds On Night of July 7 Damage Theaters on Kentucky Side of River—Airdomes Especially Show Destructive Effects of Gale— Little Loss on Ohio Side—Shows In Full Swing at Time of Tornado.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most terrific storms which ever visited Cincinnati, and quite the worst when measured in loss of life and property, occurred on the night of July 7, more than thirty lives being lost and property to the value of $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 being destroyed. The storm occurred early in the evening, at about nine o'clock, and as moving picture theaters both in Cincinnati and the Kentucky and surrounding suburbs were filled with their usual audiences, it is a marvel that some of them did not suffer a heavy loss of life. As it was, no serious injuries are recorded to any person in a moving picture theater at the time, and on the Cincinnati side, as far as information can be had, no house was damaged to any extent.

Over the river, however, the Monmouth, the Delmar, the De Milo and some other houses were more or less seriously damaged, the two latter suffering especially heavy damage to their airdomes. On the Kentucky side, moreover, the large number of electric wires down endangered life to such an extent that the electric company shut off the current, plunging the cities into darkness, and rendering it impossible, of course, to proceed with the shows. In spite of these facts, virtually all of the loss of life in the storm occurred on the Cincinnati side of the river, and the Kentucky exhibitors and their audiences admit readily that it might have been a good deal worse, as far as they are concerned.

V-L-S-E LOCATE ON WEST SEVENTH STREET.

The V-L-S-E has secured roomy and convenient quarters for its Cincinnati exchange at 138 West Seventh street, on the second floor, and the management will be able to handle the heavy and growing demand for its features with the utmost expeditiousness. The new exchange, which gives the city just about a 100 per cent. representation of the leading producing companies, is several blocks from what has become known as "Film Row," on Walnut street, but it is quite close enough to the exhibitors, and is, moreover, in the heart of the business section.

FILM MOTOR BOAT RACES.

The motorboat racing carnival which was staged on the bosom of the beautiful Ohio at Cincinnati on July 3, 4 and 5 turned out to be an event, or series of events, well worth recording on the immortal film. More than usual interest from the film standpoint attached to the races, moreover, by reason of the fact that C. F. Holah, Cincinnati Pathe manager, presented to the winner of the principal race, a 20-mile event, a handsome silver loving-cup well worth trying for.

The Pathe organization had its own fast launch for the occasion, conveying its party of spectators as well as the camera man, and the races were covered in a very complete and satisfactory manner. The resulting pictures will be shown in the regular Pathe news series, whose popularity, according to the local management, is being steadily increased, largely by reason of the unremitting efforts of the company to get every event worth filming anywhere. A new office at Columbus, in charge of R. E. Brown, is expected to help largely in taking care of exhibitors in that territory.

COUPONS WITH BREAD OR CAKE.

The big Krug bakery, at Dayton, O., has been cleverly connected up to the moving picture; and the list of Dayton picture shows where, by a special arrangement made by the company, tickets from its bread are accepted in lieu of cash for admission, is very nearly a complete list of Dayton houses. It includes the Colonial, the Lyric, the Majestic, the Globe, the Orpheum, the Midget, the Mecca, the West End Airdome, the Edgemont, the Muse Us, the Grand, the Wayne, the Savoy, the Elite, the Northern, the Museum, the East End Airdome, the New Royal, the East Majestic, the Portolo, the Forest, the Pastime, the South Park, the Old Glory and the World—probably more theaters, in proportion to the size of the city, than have been secured for co-operative work with a business house in any other city in the country.

Fifteen bread labels (five cents) or seven coupons from cakes at ten cents, are good for admission at any of these theaters; and it is not to be wondered at that the Krug business is increasing.

POSTAGE STAMPS ON SALE AT PICTURE THEATERS.

Ben Wheeler, of the Auditorium theater, Dayton, has advanced an idea which seems to have excellent prospects of being placed in practical operation, and which, moreover, bears all the ear-marks of genius. Moreover, it indicates pretty clearly the way things have changed in the past few years, from the time when the corner drug-store, handling postage-stamps rather grudgingly, to the present. Mr. Wheeler is trying to make arrangements for the sale of postage stamps at all moving picture theaters in Dayton, having already made such arrangements for his own theater.

He believes that the convenience of being able to get stamps at almost any hour at picture shows, which are widely distributed over the city, will be powerfully appreciated by the public.

CINCINNATI ITEMS.

The Clifford, of Urbana, O., the home of the great and only "Billy" Clifford, whose name the house bears, started off "The Diamond From the Sky" last week with a bang. The management arranged with a number of merchants a plan under which they donated to children under fifteen free tickets to the initial performance, while it was also bargain-day for adults two being admitted for ten cents, the usual admission fee for one person. Prizes were also given, including tickets for the next performance; and if the management of the Clifford is not badly mistaken, the whole town will be inextricably interested in the absorbing serial.

The Ivanhoe theater, of Sandusky, recently constructed by Charles L. Blatz, has been brought under the control of John A. Himmelein, owner of the Sandusky and other houses, and its name has been changed to the Plaza. The house operated for a short time as a vaudeville theater, but the plan of the new management, it is understood, is to show feature films only. It is being redecorated throughout, and will be one of the handsomest theaters in that part of Ohio.

The Ideal theater of Akron, Ohio, is celebrating its second anniversary this week, July 12, with special features, music and souvenirs. There will be special attractions every night throughout the week. A twelve-page program with colored cover has been prepared and the house is being especially decorated. The Ideal is a residential house surrounded by trees, grass and flower beds and is as bright and cool in summer as an airdome. The service has always been General Film and the admission always has been ten and five cents. Mrs. A. M. Benson is the owner and the house is managed by her daughter, Mrs. R. R. Moore.

MONTANA ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Special to Moving Picture World by Midwest News Service.

PHILLIPS LEVY, manager of the Ansonia Amusement company, has been elected honorary president of the Butte Municipal band.

Austin & Woods of Culbertson are running the serials "The Perils of Pauline," "Who Pays" and "The Diamond From the Sky" in double episodes or four reels at a time. Saturday nights have been set aside for multiple reel features.

The Pathe Company planned to make 3,000 feet of pictures of the big stampede at Missoula.

The Pastime at Dillon was closed for a week because of a local carnival.

"A Fool There Was" played a return date at the Star theater in Billings.

Manager Scott has reopened the remodeled Imperial at Ansonia. A pipe organ is one of the improvements.

The Columia Falls band showed its interest in the opening of the new Theatorium and Manager Wolgamuth at Columbia Falls by giving a concert in front of the house the night of the premier.

SLIP COVERS FOR HOT MONTHS.

The use of slip covers placed over the backs of the chairs in the Strand, in Hendersonville, N. C., is apparently a drawing card during the heated months. These covers which are inexpensive and can be washed when soiled, cover the chairs only to the side arms. They give the house increased attractiveness and an air of coolness. They further attract lady patrons, perhaps because of their housewifely feelings of neatness, as their waists are less apt to stick to the highly varnished chair backs. The management of the house declare that these slip covers are in good part responsible for the continued satisfactory business during the summer.

BEN WILSON AND COMPANY IN CAPITAL.

Ben Wilson, who produces Rex Brand photoplays for release in the Universal program, is in Washington with a company of twenty players making the multiple reel feature "A Gentle Volunteer." The production has to do with Civil War days and many of the historic points in Washington and in Alexandria, Va., are to be utilized. Among the leaders in the cast are Dorothy Phillips, Vivian Prescott, Estelle Dowling, Gene Burnell, Little Katherine Lee, Joseph Girard, William Bailey and Lee Sterrett. Eddie Gellar will preside at the camera.

It is to be remembered that Mr. Wilson is a one-time member of the stock company of the old Academy of Music, now the Strand moving picture theater, and he is well known to the old-time theatergoers of the city, as was evidenced by the cordial reception accorded him and some of his associates when they appeared in person at the Maryland Theater last week.

SWINDLER USED THEATER TO EFFECT FRAUD.

The police are looking for an exceptionally shrewd swindler who used the owners of a downtown theater now closed as a means of defrauding a large number of people. This house has been idle for some time and owners were more than pleased at the prospect of renting it to others, especially when there was little or no haggling over the terms of rental, etc. A lease was promptly executed and armed with this, the man immediately hied himself to a real estate office and rented another building to be used as his home. Here again he obtained a lease and possessed with both papers his next visit was to a fairly well known furniture house where he negotiated the purchase of suitable fittings. Anxious to please so large a customer, for the swindler showed exceptionally good taste in the selection of household goods, a quick delivery was made.

The unknown gentleman then lost little time in getting the furniture properly placed, following which he got in communication with a majority of the second-hand dealers of the city. Singly they were invited to view the goods and to name the price they were willing to pay therefor. Before being allowed to arrange for the removal of the furniture, to be done the next day, they were forced to give a deposit as an evidence of good faith and thus it was that the swindler collected from each of these sums varying from $10 to $125. The latter amount was obtained from the last man who looked over the proposition and it was this one who early the following day backed his wagon up to the door and secured the furniture before the store from which it was "purchased" got a line on the swindle.

It is presumed that the man furnished apparently good references before he was given a lease to the theater. Presumably he will attempt to work the same scheme in other cities and while theater owners are under no legal obligations, there remains the moral obligation to see that he does not impose upon them in carrying out his nefarious schemes.

Summer Business Slack

Washington, D. C., Exchange Men Not Over Optimistic About State of Picture Market In Their Neighborhood—Wet Weather Hurts Open Air Theaters—More Worthless Checks Than Usual Are Turning Up—Local Advertising

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE present conditions prevailing throughout this territory are far from satisfactory. In the first place, the motion picture exchanges report that collections are exceptionally slow and it is found hard to secure prompt payment of rentals from the exhibitors. Added to this trouble comes the report that a number of out of town exhibitors have sent in checks which come back from the banks with the information that there are none or insufficient funds on deposit to cover the amount. Even exchanges which boasted of never having been "stung" are finding themselves victims of the new order of things, but it has been ascertained that there are stringent laws in some of the states covering such bad paper and with this knowledge the managers will take legal action against those who avail themselves of credit and violate it in this manner. Some of the exchange managers have quite a collection of this autographed paper which is not negotiable. In some instances a check will be dishonored merely because the exhibitor has been careless in allowing his balance to decrease to such an extent, and many fail to realize the bad effect it has upon their credit, for if they did, they would take pains to see that they were properly protected by sufficient deposits.

Business throughout the entire territory has been very poor since the beginning of summer. The airdomes have particularly suffered by reason of weather conditions and doubt has been expressed of the ability of airdome exhibitors to come out even at the end of the season. Up to the present time there have been but very few evenings suitable for outdoor exhibitions for either it has been too cold or showers have prevailed throughout the few hours in which the exhibitors can do business. To some extent this has proven favorable to the closed houses, yet all of these are complaining of poor business. Generally the big features bring out the crowds and the offering of novelties also brings good results. Several of the houses have adopted the expedient in connection with the showing of the Charlie Chaplin films of having an imitator of that famous comedian parade the streets in the neighborhood. This, however, is not looked upon with any degree of favor by the more conservative exhibitors who feel that such advertising serves to lower the business and these decline to adopt such ballyhoo measures.

The Florida Theater-Garden, at Fifteenth and H streets, northeast, is issuing a weekly program containing the advertisements of firms in its immediate neighborhood. Four of the advertisements in last week's program contained misspelled words. The management marked three of these errors and sealed them in an envelope which they opened at the end of the week. Those receiving programs were invited to write their name and address on the edge thereof and hand them to the cashier any evening. Each program received a number and at the end of the week a comparison was made with the contents of the sealed envelope. The first ten correct answers carried with them free admission tickets to the theater. A number of the advertisers offer admission tickets free to purchasers of a given amount of merchandise at their stores.

EMERGENCY REVENUE TAX DUE.

Exhibitors both of closed houses and airdomes should not overlook the fact that they must pay the emergency revenue tax provided for places of amusement, during the month of July, for failure to do so will make the exhibitor liable to the fifty per cent. penalty provided under the law. The payment is to be made to cover a period of six months only as the law becomes inoperative after December 31, and if it is to be continued must be re-enacted by Congress.

The attention of exhibitors is again called to the fact that but one certificate, or tax stamp as they are officially designated, is required by the exhibitor having both a closed house and an airdome, providing both are within the same district and they are not operated simultaneously. Payment must be made on the basis of the largest number of seats. Thus it is if the closed house contains but five hundred seats and the airdome one thousand, the latter is taken into consideration when the tax is assessed. The stamp can be moved from one to the other as required. The $10 tax for airdomes no longer exists and these are now treated in the same light as motion picture theaters, no consideration being given to the fact that they are open only for a portion of the year and cannot be used when weather conditions are bad. This matter was brought to the attention of the officials of the Internal Revenue Office of the Treasury Department recently, but apparently without avail.

INVESTIGATE PURITY OF AIR IN THEATERS.

The investigation of the air in amusement places in the District of Columbia, which has been under way for some time, is nearing completion. Samples of air have been secured in jars and have been analyzed to determine the presence of carbon dioxide, which shows vitiation. Tests have also been made to determine the nature of germs, if any, present in the samples. It may be that upon the completion of this investigation, regulations in regard to the proper ventilation of such places of amusement may be altered. As a whole the motion picture houses of Washington are well equipped with respect to ventilating systems and the exhibitors doubt if there will be found anything susceptible of criticism in this respect. Most of the exhibitors pride themselves on the sanitary condition and the upkeep of their establishments and every care is taken to maintain the high standard which they have themselves set up.

CAPITAL CITY GOSSIP.

Win Bradley, formerly manager of the Mutual Exchange in this city, and now presiding over the destinies of the Boston office, is visiting his parents here. Mr. Bradley was one of the most popular exchangemen of the city. He is a native Washingtonian and has a host of friends, and he received a royal welcome when he arrived back home. He will return to Boston by steamer after going to Norfolk, Va.

J. T. Heare has taken over the Scenic theater, in Georgetown, formerly operated by Milton F. Staub.

The Blue Mouse theater, at Twenty-sixth and M streets, Georgetown, has been reopened.

The Niagara theater on Seventh street, northwest, recently operated as a colored house, has been closed.

Farmer Brown and his educated rooster created quite a stir on Ninth street during the exhibition of a film in which the barnyard pet is quite a star. The pair were to be seen at the Maryland theater and at Central Park (airdome) both of which are operated by Mr. Johnson.

Swanson Interests Buy

Intermountain Film Magnate Secures Two Scowcroft Houses in Salt Lake City—These With the Rex Give Swanson Interests Control of the Three Biggest Theaters In This District—Further Expansion Soon—Personal Notes.

By W. H. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WILLIAM H. SWANSON, film magnate of the intermountain region, is the new owner of the American and Liberty theaters in Salt Lake City. The deal for the purchase of the two theaters from the Scowcroft interests of Ogden was completed last Monday for a cash consideration of $210,000. The theater buildings of the two immense properties were purchased outright and the leases for 20 years each on the realty property were included in the purchases. It is understood that sufficient options are held to extend the leases at expiration, though the realty represented is of the highest "gilt edge" variety.

The purchase of the American and Liberty gives Mr. Swanson control of the three largest houses in this region, as he was already owner of the Rex theater in Salt Lake. The Rex Amusement company has been formally merged with the Liberty Theater Company, by which the American and Liberty were built and operated and Mr. Swanson has been elected president of the big combine. Harry A. Sims, director of the American and Liberty, has been made secretary and general manager of the three Salt Lake houses.

Associated with Mr. Swanson in the purchase is Harry T. Nolan of Denver. The Liberty Theater Company was headed by Albert Scowcroft of Ogden who, with H. A. Sims and others, owns and operates the immense new Alhambra theater in that city and other smaller houses in Ogden and elsewhere. None of the Scowcroft properties outside Salt Lake was included in the deal.

It is announced by Mr. Swanson that the purchase of the American and Liberty theaters is one large step in the plans of Mr. Nolan and himself to secure control of a chain of theaters from Canada to the Mexican border in the mountain states of the west. Mr. Swanson is now in control of fourteen theaters in the states of Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Texas. A trip through the states of the northwest will be made soon by Mr. Swanson for the purpose of completing other deals for the purchase of theaters.

Headquarters of the combination will be in Salt Lake City, Mr. Swanson maintaining his offices here and Mr. Nolan dividing his time between Salt Lake and Denver. Though it is known that Mr. Swanson contemplates some changes in policy of the three Salt Lake houses, it is stated that they will be of a minor nature and will be in effect only readjustments. The retention of Harry A. Sims, as general manager of the three theaters, is gratifying to motion picture people of Salt Lake, as his conduct of affairs of the American and Liberty has been extremely successful.

When the Swanson circuit of picture houses and its affiliations in the west are completely organized, it is proposed to book the big productions of the film companies direct instead of through the exchanges. The three largest houses in question are at present engaged in showing productions of practically every manufacturing concern of importance in the world, the programmes being of a varied nature and consistent with the separate exhibition policies of the houses.

Mr. Swanson has been nineteen years in the motion picture business, having first made his mark in the west as owner of a chain of film exchanges in various states. He made his mark when enlisted with the independents in the merry days of contest between that clique of manufacturers and the patents concern, or the so-called "trust." Recently Mr. Swanson sold out his exchange holdings hereabouts to the Universal. The figures given in connection with that deal were somewhere in the neighborhood of a million dollars.

It is rumored that the new system of Swanson theaters has been lined up as one of the principal releasing circuits for the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combine and that the gigantic multiple-reel productions of that trio will form the principal attractions on the Swanson circuit of theaters. On this point, however, Mr. Swanson has declined to go into detail in either confirmation or denial.

"Always in the Way" was a recent offering of Manager Harry Van Demark of the Isis at Houston, Tex., for his special shows for children. The Houston Post, which has been encouraging Saturday morning shows for children at the Queen, has been acting as hosts to the children from the industrial and other homes.

"Salambo" was shown at the Princess and the Elk theaters in Silver City, N. M., under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church.

Bismarck Park at Houston, Tex., opened July 4. Motion pictures are among the attractions.

The New theater at Hartford, Ark., was damaged by fire. Loss, $10,000.

The Lyric theater at Sapulpa, Okla., was destroyed by fire.

Charles C. Clesson and W. M. Gullett have renewed their lease on the Paris theater at Santa Fe, N. M., and have also taken a two-year lease on the Paris theater in that city. Gullett will be active manager of both houses.

FIGHTING TO GET THE FIGHT FILMS IN.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A FINAL hearing on the bill in equity to decide whether the Johnson-Willard world's heavyweight championship battle pictures are to be admitted to the United States is expected at Portland, Me very soon. If the decision at the final hearing should be against the Kalisthenic Co., the matter is likely to be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Robert Treat Whitehouse, attorney for the company, says "We are arranging for a speedy final hearing, which we hope will be set for July 16, or thereabouts. Our request for the preliminary injunction having been denied, we are now arranging for the presentation of our case at the final hearing. If the decision is against us after the final hearing, we will undoubtedly take the matter to the Circuit Court of Appeals."

IN THE PINE TREE STATE.

The Colonial theater at Augusta, Me. has just celebrated its second anniversary with a big feature Universal program.

That there has been an overproduction of vaudeville acts and stock company plays in Portland, Maine, during the past theatrical season is the statement made by E. F. Albee, vice-president of the B. F. Keith circuit of theaters, and general manager of the United Booking offices; and Mr. Albee goes on further to say that there is absolutely no chance for any two vaudeville houses, any two stock houses, any two high class houses, or two other kinds of houses, except the reasonably priced moving picture theaters.

Mr. Albee said to an interviewer that the past theatrical season in Portland has been a disastrous one. "Portland has been considered a good show town, but competition has been so keen in the past few years that there has been no money in the business for any one institution. The overproduction in Portland has chiefly been in two stock companies, as has been the case for the past two or three years. The Keith house has lost thousands of dollars during the season."

"Do you propose to continue if the losses you speak of keep up?" he was asked.

"We certainly do," he replied. "We know that if we cannot do business, it is impossible for others to, and it is a question of who has the largest pocketbook, and who can give the best class of attractions. We think we can. We are in the show business, and know nothing else and if others who think they know it are anxious to lose their money, we will give them a chance to do so."

The Central Maine Power Co., at Waterville, has opened a free moving picture show at the Cascade Park theater, on the Waterville & Oakland branch. Sunday evening shows are presented, the company realizing a profit from the car fares paid by patrons to reach the park.

Manager Allen of the Palace theater, Bangor, Me., pulled off the "giving away a baby" stunt with success during the past week, as did Mrs. Imogene Pettengill, proprietor of the Strand theater, at Ellsworth, Me.

Manager Bibber of Music Hall, Lewiston, Me., introduced into Maine an amateur Charlie Chaplin night a week ago Thursday. Four prizes were given, the audience choosing by applause.

The Park theater, Bangor, Me., uses a "time table" in its advertisements for the use of patrons who wish to see a particular feature without spending time on the other pictures. A sample time table follows:

Alice Joyce, 12.00, 2.10, 4.30, 6.40, 8.50; Hearst-Selig, 12.39, 2.52, 5.09, 7.19, 9.29; Brother Officers, 12,52, 3.06, 5.22, 7.32, 9.42; Charlie Chaplin, 1.57, 4.16, 6.27, 8.37, 10.47.

Repeated requests by patrons has caused the management of the Empire theater, Portland, Me., to play a return engagement of "A Fool There Was," featuring Theda Bara.

A new summer theater has been opened at Ogunquit, Me. by Messrs. Keniston and Roberts. Entertainments are run twice weekly, service being from Tinker-Phoenix Co.

Probably the youngest manager in all New England is Colby W. Robinson of Bingham. He is 14 years old, and since last February has been conducting Kennebec hall, where pictures are shown twice weekly. It is known that he has been financially successful, and that is a fairly good criterion of ability.

The Home theater, South Berwick, is using the service of the Phoenix Film Corporation.

The Pastime theater, Madison, has started using Universal service two nights a week.

E. B. Wilder, proprietor of Odd Fellows hall theater at Lincoln, Me., has announced his intention of opening a new moving picture house at South Brewer, Me., which will be built for him and completed in a few weeks. It will be a wooden structure, and will probably seat 350 persons. Mr. Wilder will use Universal service.

The Pastime theater, Boothbay Harbor, has started in full swing for the summer season, using Universal service and Tinker-Phoenix features. Also in the same town is the Opera House operated by the Paramount Pictures corporation for the summer months only.

A. L. Ehrgott, Bangor manager of the General Film Co., has been on a business visit to Aroostook County during the past week, calling on the trade.

F. D. Swan has opened K. of P. hall at Fryeburg, every Wednesday night, using Universal service.

The Park theater, Dexter, reports business as being good, the service used being general, with the features of the Tinker-Phoenix corporation.

DALLAS THEATER CHANGE IN POLICY A SURPRISE.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A SURPRISE was sprung in Dallas motion picture circles when it was announced that on July 11, the Queen theater would run Mutual pictures exclusively. The Queen has been running Mutual Masterpictures, General specials, "The Goddess," V-L-S-E, etc., and this change to Mutual exclusively was not expected and hit the trade with quite a surprise. The Queen is owned by a corporation headed by E. H. Hulsey, and is under the management of L. G. Bissinger. Mutual pictures and stars are well thought of in Dallas, and usually draw good crowds.

LONE STAR NOTES.

During the absence of Manager Leo F. Levison of the Box Office Attraction Co., distributors of Fox productions, in Dallas, the office force has put forth special efforts to increase the amount of business. They have succeeded to such an extent that Mr. Levison will be glad he has such assistants. F. A. Tomes is in charge during Mr. Levison's visit to New York attending the Fox Film exchange men's convention.

Fifty-cent photoplays in Dallas will remain a thing to be hoped for. The Washington theater, Dallas, under the management of Gus Carter, opened a ten-day engagement of "The Eternal City" June 28 at 25 and 50 cent prices. These prices were in effect for three days when they were changed to 20 and 35 cents. On July 6, they were 15 and 25 cents. This is the top-notch for motion picture houses in Dallas, with any success.

The popularity of one Charlie Chaplin, in Dallas, is shown by five houses running Chaplin pictures in one day. The Queen and Feature were both showing the late Essanay "Work," while other five-cent houses were running new prints of "Doe and Dynamite," "The Property Man" and "By the Sea." All of the theaters enjoyed a good business, with the Queen and Feature stacking 'em.

Exhibitors in the larger cities of Texas are almost unanimous in their opinion that serials do not bring any increase in patronage, and it is a rather hard proposition for a road man to secure bookings on serials in those cities. "The Goddess" is running at the Queen, in Dallas, "The Black Box" at the Newport and the Hippodrome has just finished "The Exploits of Elaine."

The Roseland theater of Dallas has been leased by the Dalton Brothers, formerly managers of the Old Mill, Orpheum and Happy Hour theaters in the same city. They have inaugurated "Ten-Cent-Vaudeville-and-Pictures" and are getting good business in the 300-chair house.

On July 5, the home of Dave Reed, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation of Texas, at Dallas, was visited by the Stork and "Daddy" David now hurries home very early every afternoon to play with the little girl. Her proud father and mother have not yet named her, but it has been persistently rumored that the reason for this delay is that Dave insists she should be called "Metro" while Mrs. Dave says she thinks it would be better to name her "Olga" after Mme. Olga Petrova, of Metro Pictures. Albert Russell, secretary of the Metro, says he is hoping the newness of having a baby in the family, as this is Number One for Mr. and Mrs. Reed, will soon wear off, so Dave will not spend all his time telephoning home "to see how the kid is."

Rumor certainly travels fast! Two weeks before the announcement of the "Aitken-Griffith - Ince - Sennett" combination, and the selection of Fruehler as head of the Mutual, exchange men in Dallas were talking of the probable future of the Mutual with "the remainder of 'em" and the line-up of the N.Y.M.P. and Aitken forces; for it was common gossip that a split was coming. One exchange man is forecasting that before thirty days an announcement will be seen stating that two large independent producers will be aligned with the new Mutual program; and almost every exchange-man has a different view.

H. T. Murray, known as "Uncle Tom" Murray, opened his airdome at Alvord, Texas, two weeks ago; and was in Dallas last week buying a $1,600 Wurlitzer instrument and two new machines.

R. W McEwan, formerly part owner and manager of the Majestic theater, Hillsboro, Texas, has forsaken the exhibiting end to become aligned in the supply business, having sold his interest in the theater to his partner, B. A. Lawrence, and taken up duties in the concern, R. D. Thrash Film Company, in Dallas.

JACKSONVILLE NEWS NOTES.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE New Arcade theater will open next week with high-class motion pictures and singers, Jesse L. Clark, who has been at the Grand, has been transferred to the new house as local manager and is now putting the finishing touches on in order to be ready for the opening. "Dan" Michaelove succeeds Mr. Clark at the Grand.

Mr. Byron Bryan, who is now in charge of the "Rooster" exchange, has just returned from a trip throughout the southern part of the state and reports business only fair. It seems that a good many houses are closing for the summer, but prospects for the season look very good.

Business in the city for the past week has been badly handicapped, on account of the heavy rains which have been prevailing over the South; not a day has passed for the last week without one or two hard rains.

"The Isle of Regeneration," the six-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon masterpiece which scored such a decided hit at the Imperial theater a few weeks ago, played a return engagement at this popular house on last Tuesday to capacity business regardless of rain, as also did "The Goddess" on Monday and "The Sins of the Mother," another Blue Ribbon Vitagraph masterpiece in five reels, on Thursday. This is the story for which Miss Elaine Sterne was awarded the $1,000 prize by the judges in the New York Sun scenario contest, and judging by the attendance on Thursday and Friday this one would also play a return.

It is reported that Mr. L. Holloman of Fort Pierce is now erecting a motion picture theater in this thriving little city, which will cost when completed about $15,000. There will be seating capacity for seven hundred and will run Mutual program.

A small boy created a panic at the Savoy theater one night last week when he bursted a malodor bomb; patrons were forced to leave the theater in double quick time. L. C. Oliver, the manager, who was in the house at the time, was lucky in catching the boy in the act. He was turned over to the police department, who in turn handed him over to his father, who assured Mr. Oliver that he was severely punished.

The free motion picture shows being given by the city in the park continue to be successful, thousands of women and children attending every Thursday night; music is furnished by the Boys' band, also the First Regiment band.

The Republic theater doesn't seem to be doing so well since the change of policy last week; the price of admission makes no difference with the people here providing the attractions are good.

Miss Reed, secretary of the Kalem company, left last week on her vacation. Miss Reed expects to visit many points north, returning here in about four weeks.

"Wild Bill" Hopkins, who up until the present has termed himself the "unluckiest" man in the world, reports that luck has finally changed and he now thinks he is the luckiest man in the world. "Bill's" wife has inherited $25,000 and a ten-acre farm; pretty soft for "Bill." Mr. Hopkins was formerly with the Lubin Co. here and is a brother-in-law to A. D. Hotaling of the Lubin staff.

BUFFALO NEWS GOSSIP.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo, 229 Oxford Ave., Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new Regus moving picture theater at Chenango and Munsell streets, Binghamton, N. Y., seats 1,000 persons. The Regus is described as one of the finest houses between New York and Buffalo. The front and side entrances are decorated with moulded figures which give an artistic tone to the building. The theater is fireproof throughout and the ventilation is of the highest order. The side walls and ceiling are literally filled with ventilators. There is a commodious stage and a fireproof operating room.

The Globe moving picture theater, Buffalo, whose proprietor went into bankruptcy, has been closed for several weeks.

The name of George Griffin appears in a recent casualty list sent out by the Allies from the European war zone. Griffin was at one time connected with the management of the Family moving picture theater of Welland, a Canadian town near Buffalo. He was related to the owner of the Griffin chain of Canadian theaters.

The Bijou moving picture theater of Mt. Morris, N. Y., will be closed during the summer months on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights.

Samuel W. Hippler, editor of the Sunday Illustrated Times of Buffalo, N. Y., a newspaperman of wide experience, is doing the press work for Erie Beach, a summer resort near that city. A moving picture show is among the features at this park.

Edward Tranter, sporting editor of the Buffalo Enquirer, is press agent for Carnival Court, a Buffalo summer park, which has a moving picture show.

A new front will be erected at the Golden Palace moving picture theater of Lockport, N. Y., by Henry F. Thurston, proprietor.

An open air theater, seating 2,000 persons, will be built at Vassar College.

The Hotel Sheldon of North Tonawanda, N. Y., which was damaged by fire, may be remodeled into a moving picture theater.

The first public moving picture show ever held out of doors at Kenwood, N. Y., recently attracted a good atendance.

Charles T. Taylor of Louisville will succeed J. M. Ward as manager of the Gayety theater, Buffalo. This house occasionally adds moving pictures to its regular program of burlesque.

It is reported that a moving picture theater may be built in the business section of Webster street and another near Schenk street and Payne avenue, North Tonawanda, N. Y. Business in this line has been stimulated as a result of a successful fight for Sunday shows waged by Henry Klinger, proprietor of the Oliver moving picture theater of that city. Mr. Klinger sought a license to operate his house on Sundays and the court granted his request. Mayor Rand of North Tonawanda opposed granting the license.

The Mozart theater of Elmira, N. Y., has closed for the summer.

E. Melville is building a moving picture theater at Interlaken, N. Y.

Many attended the first open air moving picture show held this season in Union Club Park, Palmyra, N. Y.

A film in the Empire theater, Cohoes, N. Y., recently caught fire but was extinguished before any damage was done. Patrons did not know of the accident, the operators having thrown the film out of a window.

Free tickets to Saturday afternoon shows to the Lyric and Amuse-U moving picture theaters of Corry, Pa., have been distributed in the rural districts about that city. The purpose is to attract Saturday shoppers to Corry. The tickets have been given out by the Board of Commerce and Industry of that place.

Arguments against Sunday moving picture shows were recently given in a sermon by the Rev. Horace G. Ogden of the First Methodist Church, Rochester, N. Y.

Manager Denzinger of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, recently gave a free show for the benefit of many newsboys who sell the Enquirer of that city.

Decision on Censorship

Supreme Court of Pennsylvania Affirms the Right of that State to Supervise Exhibition of Moving Pictures—Upholds Court of Common Pleas in Its Refusal to Grant Injunction Restraining State Board of Censors.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

THE Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Nos. 45-46-47, has affirmed the right of the state to exercise supervision over moving picture exhibitions through its board of censorship. It has declared the act of June 19, 1911, creating the board of censors, constitutional and has upheld the Court of Common Pleas No. 5, of Philadelphia, in its refusal to grant an injunction restraining J. Louis Breitinger and Mrs. E. C. Silver, constituting the board of censors, from performing their official duties, as requested in proceedings brought by the Buffalo Branch of the Mutual Film Corporation and the Overbrook theater, of Philadelphia. This decision, following decisions handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeals from the censorship laws of other states, practically definitely settles the question of state censorship in this state.

WANAMAKER WEDDING FILMED.

Moving pictures of a wedding, entirely for private use, were made for the first time in this city, when films of the marriage of Miss Marie Louise Wanamaker and Gurnee Munn were made for the personal use of the bride's grandfather, John Wanamaker, the merchant prince of America.

It is not by any means the first wedding that has been filmed by the motion picture camera, but heretofore in Philadelphia the work has been done for exhibiting companies. No such fate shall befall the Wanamaker film. The result is that Mr. Wanamaker will have an exclusive, private record of the advents attendant on the wedding of his grandaughter that will be a lasting pleasure. Pictures were made at "Honeyshuck" of the Clark wedding and were also for family record solely.

About 1,000 feet of film was exposed at the church and at Lindenhurst, where the reception was held, and every phase of the wedding was permanently recorded. A moving picture of the bride and bridegroom leaving the church, with the bridesmaid and ushers, the guests leaving and then the wedding party arriving at Lindenhurst and an improvised wedding procession on the lawn of the estate were all included in the material seen by the eye of the camera.

WIFE OF PICTURE MAN DIES OF SEVERE BURNS.

Wednesday morning, July 7, the citizens of this city were shocked when told the sad news that Mrs. S. M. Farrar had been severely burned when her clothing caught fire while engaged in burning trash at her home on Forest street. In some manner her skirts caught fire and before help could arrive to extinguish the flames she was badly burned about the hips and lower limbs.

Mrs. Farrar's mother and sister who live in Ava and little Miss Erville who was visiting her grandmother, were notified of the unfortunate affair and arrived here Wednesday.

A trained nurse was employed to attend Mrs. Farrar, who was given the best possible care.

After the funeral the family published the following card of thanks:

We wish to return our heartfelt thanks to the many generous friends who stood by us, with such unwearying kindness during the time our darling wife, mother, daughter and sister was called upon to suffer before entering into "the rest prepared for the children of God," and crossed to the "beautiful home over there." Seldom have any, in need of sympathy and the most devoted friendship, received so full a measure of the fruits of the human heart. All that human power could do to alleviate suffering and mitigate our sorrow was done. Nothing that skill could suggest or love supply was wanting, and the altar of friendship was ever laden with its holiest incense. May the bread they so lavishly and generously cast upon the waters return to them after many days and He who "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" protect them from all harm and long shield them from the sorrow, sickness and death incident to humanity; and when they come, as come they must to one and all, may they be sustained and comforted by friends as noble, generous and devoted. More, we could not ask for them; more, friends could not give.

IN THE PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT.

Much interest has been aroused by the resignation of Arthur C. Melvin from the local branch of the World Film Corporation, and the announcement that he has joined forces with the George Kleine attractions. Mr. Melvin is one of the most popular men in the film business, and undoubtedly his friends will be pleased to see him at his new quarters.

William Wirt, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, will leave within the next few days on an extensive trip in the vicinity of the Niagara Falls. Mr. Wirt is one of the most energetic members of the local trade and is known throughout all sections of the city on account of his personality and the faithfulness with which he attends to his daily tasks.

Chris Hand, former proprietor of the Hand theater, Millville, N. J., which property was recently purchased by Mr. Blanchard, formerly of the Peoples Theater, Sunbury, Pa., has opened the new Regent theater at Wildwood, N. J.

Albert Fogg has recently opened a new moving picture establishment at Ocean City, N. J., on the Fogg Pier overlooking the ocean. Mr. Fogg is well known throughout this famous resort by the seaside and is well versed in the subtle art of showing the right kind of shows at the right time.

The Windsor theater, Frankford avenue and Wamsley streets, which has been closed for some time past, was recently opened under new management. Mr. Black has now taken charge of this establishment and will endeavor to convince the people in that vicinity that he is in earnest when he declares that his shows will be of the best in the city.

The Howard theater, Front street and Ontario avenue, has recently been closed for the balance of the summer but will reopen in the fall with the same progressive management and will once more entertain the folks of that neighborhood with the delightful pictures which have endeared the theater to its patrons.

A. S. Hyams, formerly of the New York office, has succeeded J. A. Koerpel as manager of the local branch of the General Film Company. Mr. Koerpel leaves Washington to assume the management of the Albany, N. Y. office.

The three-story loft building, 1304-06 Vine street, lot 32 feet 6 inches by 68 feet, has been sold by Louis Alexander to Jay Kaufman for $40,000. The sale was negotiated by R. A. Heyman and Brothers. This new change in the proprietorship of the property has had no effect upon the affairs of the Interstate Film Corporation to whom the building is rented.

PATRIOTIC THANKSGIVING.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LEE GOLDBERG, manager of the Keith House, of Louisville, used a patriotic stunt on July 4 and 5, which took very well with the people present at the theater. Two slides had been arranged, each of which carried the United States flag as the center of attraction. Under the first flag were the words "The Flag of Peace." The second slide bore the words "Thank God For This." These slides brought home to the patrons of the theater how much they really have to be thankful for and how fortunate this country is in being out of the European turmoil, and were gretted with applause.

"ETERNAL CITY" PLAYS BIG ON RECALL.

Pauline Frederick in the Famous Players production of the "Eternal City" made such a hit at the Majestic during the four days that the film was shown in Louisville that it was decided to recall it for an additional two days' run on Sunday and Monday of the following week. In spite of the fact that the show runs to 8,300 feet of film, takes two hours, and has been shown at advanced prices all over the country, the local theater did not raise prices and showed the big production for one dime. Patrons were turned away from all of the night performances and from a number of the day shows.

MAY LICENSE POPULARITY CONTESTS.

At Paducah, Ky., through the efforts of the Retail Merchants' Association, an ordinance will probably be drafted shortly whereby all moving picture houses, merchants, newspapers, etc., conducting popularity contests will be forced to pay a license for the privilege. The matter is now up before the commissioners. The merchants appear to be peeved over the fact that in these contests something is sold often times as a commercial venture, and they claim that promoters should be forced to pay for the privilege.

"PROHIBITION" IN KENTUCKY.

Frank Rogers, who booked state rights on the photoplay "Caberia" and also handled it through the South, was recently in Louisville, where he made a special showing for exhibitors of the film "Prohibition" at the Knickerbocker theater at Eighteenth and Market streets. Mr. Rogers is booking the film in ten states. A delegation of local prohibtion workers was also invited to attend the private showing. Opinion is greatly divided on the subject in Kentucky, and it is probable that the whisky interests would wish to suppress such a film just now, as politics is in a feverish state, elections coming on, and a meeting of the State legislature will take place, starting January, 1916. On the other hand interest is general in the subject just now and the picture should draw.

"ISLE OF REGENERATION" GOES WELL AT THE MARY ANDERSON.

The Mary Anderson theater recalled the "Isle of Regeneration" for a return engagement. On two occasions such crowds have been present at the second night show that Mr. Goldberg has had the first two reels rerun at the conclusion of the second night show so that those standing at the beginning of the show and unable to see would be able to see the entire show. This pleased the patrons immensely.

KENTUCKY SHORTER ITEMS.

The Dixie of Albany, Ky., which was recently started, had considerable trouble with the first projection machine purchased, which happened to be out of order, and the machine was returned and a new one installed. The theater is the first one in the town and is doing a nice business.

Roman's opera house at Lancaster, Ky., has been leased by Ramsey & Dudley, moving picture exhibitors, who operate a theater in Lexington, Ky. The new management has taken possession and will shortly start with first class pictures.

Lewis Connor, J. W. Watters and V. D. Presnell, of Smithland, Ky., have formed a partnership agreement and have installed a lighting plant which will furnish light and power in the city. A moving picture theater will be installed also and will be run in connection with the lighting plant.

The Star theater of Uniontown, Ky., has been closed, following its sale to D. P. Curry, who, in turn, sold it to J. P. Skipper, who, after showing two nights, turned the property over to Edgar Duncan, owner of the Idle Hour theater. Mr. Duncan has combined the two outfits and hereafter will show only at the Idle Hour.

At Keith's theater in Louisville the management has made a co-operative arrangement with the Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Company whereby "Rivo" ginger ale is now passed around the theater to the patrons instead of water as was formerly the system in warm weather. The ginger ale is arranged in glasses on trays.

Charles Porter, formerly manager of the Hippodrome of Louisville, recently wrote to Charles J. Nichols, manager of the Orpheum. In the letter Mr. Porter announced that he had joined the Canadian troops, and has enlisted for active service. He expects to leave shortly for Europe. Photographs of Mr. Porter in uniform were enclosed in the letter. He asked Mr. Nichols to tell all of his old friends, in Louisville, good-by for him, as it was prabable he would never get back.

J. Johnson Musellman, manager of the Woodland airdome, recently packed the open-air theater to capacity when he advertised that a prize of $5 in gold would be given to the best impersonator of Charlie Chaplin.

Melvin N. Gerber, formerly treasurer of Keith's theater in Louisville, and now treasurer of the Mary Anderson, has announced that he will shortly become a benedict. Mr. Gerber will be married on August 18 to Miss Celia Bass, a popular local girl.

Frederick Levy, of Louisville, who is associated with the Keith interests, was recently in New York, where he attended a meeting of the heads of the Keith circuit. Mr. Levy and his wife, who started the movement whereby children's pictures were inaugurated in Louisville and other cities, will leave next month for California, where they will take in the exposition.

IN NEW ENGLAND.

D. A. Smith of the Central theater at Westerly, R. I. is the new owner of the Bradley theater at Putnam, Conn. This house was formerly owned by Selig Goldman.

The picturization of Robert Hillard's great success, "A Fool There Was" recently played to 1,732 persons in one day at the Empire at St. Albans, Vermont. This picture is now having its twentieth run in Boston, where it is shown at the Puritan theater. Since it has been released it has played in Boston for 82 days.

Warren D. Church of the Shrine and Playhouse at Rutland, Vermont, is rejoicing over the birth of a baby daughter. Both Mrs. Church and the newcomer are doing nicely.

Manager Al Somerby of the Bowdoin Square theater, Boston, is spending his vacation at Sugar Hill, N. H., where he is enjoying himself motoring through the country.

Numerous excursion parties coming into Boston during July and August are arranging with the booking department of the Tremont theater for reservation of seats for "The Birth of a Nation." It is expected that several of next month's performances will be sold out to out of town visitors.

Free Shows Make Hit

Boston's Experiment With Free Picture Shows in Playgrounds and Parks Is Well Received—Rational Entertainment and Aids to Good Citizenship the Aim—Advise Other Cities in Massachusetts to Take Up Plan.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE free motion picture shows in Boston parks and playgrounds, which were inaugurated last week, are meeting with unexpected success. From the outlook at the present time, it is highly probable that these shows will be continued throughout the country. The undertaking was first an experiment entered into by several organizations and the park officials combining educational features with rational entertainment and definite aids of good citizenship. The shows have been well received by the citizens. The program for these entertainments has been made up of high grade pictures, which have been carefully censored, depicting both educational and health themes, with current news pictorials, high grade comedies and cartoons. A special feature has been pictures and slides that show the resources of Boston for recreation, civic progress and good living. Suitable music is played at every performance.

This undertaking has been named the "Boston Parks Shows" and the correct name for the committee carrying out the plans for the organization is "Committee on Park Shows." Seymour Stone of the Boston Society for the Relief and Control o Tuberculosis is chairman of the main committee. A sub committee is charged with arrangements for conducting the entertainments, consisting of D. M. Claghorn, director of social work for the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, Dr. G. W. Tupper of the Immigration Department of the State Y. M. C. A.; and E. B. Mero, secretary of the Public Recreation League and social and civic secretary of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association. The other societies which are cooperating in this work were named in last week's issue of the World.

During the past week shows were given as follows: Monday North End Park; Tuesday, Mystic Playground, Charlestown; Wednesday, Sullivan Square Playground, Charlestown; Thursday and Friday, First Street Playground, South Boston. The committee in charge of the entertainments is now assisting organizations and citizen's committees in other Massachusetts cities and towns, who have become interested in the plan. It is likely that the plan may be adopted in several places throughout the state before the summer is over.

NEW HOUSE IN CONCORD.

E. J. Caron, owner of the Star theater at Manchester, N. H. is planning for the erection of a modern picture playhouse at Concord, N. H. This theater will be located at the corner of Pleasant and Main streets and when completed will cost $50,000. It will be designed after the Strand theater, N. Y. and will have a seating capacity of 1,200 persons with one balcony. The construction throughout will be of brick and granite. No expense will be spared to make it one of the most modern and up to date houses in the Granite State. The structure will be completed and will open about September 15.

FILMS SUMMER WHITE HOUSE.

"Dick" Sears, New England cameraman for the Hearst-Selig Pictorial News, was recently compelled to use considerable diplomacy to persuade President Wilson to allow him to make pictures of the summer White House at Cornish, N. H. When Sears first appeared on the scene, he was given a flat refusal. However, he took a "still" of the grounds, the house and a brook. On his return to Boston, he made enlarged prints, which when mounted, he sent to the President. A few days later, he received a letter which gave him permission to grind the camera. He desired to make pictures showing how the president and grounds were guarded against maniacs. Dr. Grayson, the president's personal aid, informed him that this would not be allowed, as the identity of the guards must be unknown. Finally Dr. Grayson consented to grind the machine while the energetic cameraman impersonated a guard in communication with the executive at the house.

TO BUILD BIG THEATER.

The Strand Theater Company has been incorporated under Massachusetts laws for $375,000. This concern plans to erect a new photoplay theater at the corner of Front street and Leland Court, Worcester, Mass. Plans of the buiding are now in the hands of an architect and ground will be broken for the new structure in the near future. The theater will open in the early winter. The incorporators are Moe Mark of Lynn, Joseph Levenson and Max Levenson of Boston. Mr. Mark is also building a new house at Lynn, Mass.

NEW ENGLAND NEWS NOTES.

It is the belief of the State police officials that the fire which destroyed the Columbia theater at Taunton, Mass. last week was the work of a firebug. As the result of an investigation, it was found that three separate fires had been started in different parts of the auditorium. An empty gasoline can was also found where the fire was raging fiercest. Nord Riskuis, manager of the theater, which is leased by Thomas Shatkins of Providence, R. I., stated that there was no gasoline on the premises as far as he knows. The fire caused a damage estimated at $3,500.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the Pathe Exchange, Inc. of Boston was in New York for a few days last week, attending the annual convention of the Pathe branch managers. Mr. Bernfield is one of the most active managers of the Pathe circuit and has produced great results since he resumed charge of the New England territory in January.

Considerable enthusiasm is being manifested by manager Harry F. Campbell of the New England office of the Fox Film Corporation since his return from the recent managers' convention at New York City. There is hardly a house in the whole New England territory that has not used a Fox feature since Mr. Campbell assumed charge of the office.

Manager Henry Burke of the Princess theater, Marlboro, announces that the box office receipts at his playhouse are showing an unbelievable increase since he started using second run Chaplin-Essanay features.

Mitchell Granby, roadman for the Fox Film Corporation, has returned from a three weeks' tour of New Hampshire and Vermont. He states that business conditions are about the same as last year in that territory. He also states that the theaters are running more features this summer than they were using last fall. During the trip, Mr. Granby contracted with several houses for the use of Fox productions. Among them are New Empire, St. Albans, World in Motion, Burlington; Star, Littleton; Star, Milford; Gem, Peterborough; and the Idle Hour at Hardwick.

H. D. Montperry, proprietor of the Dreamland and Grand theaters at Bellows Falls, Vermont, has purchased the Opera House in that place. He plans to use Fox productions beginning in September. The house will be closed temporarily, while alterations are being made.

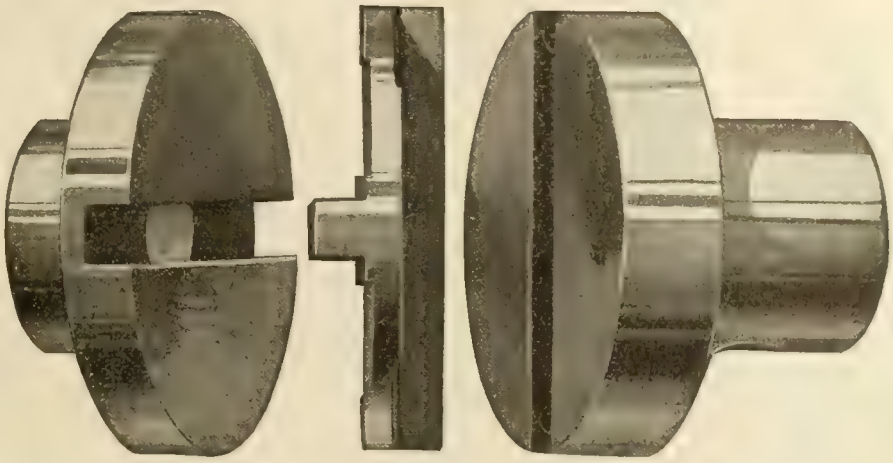
THE 1916 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

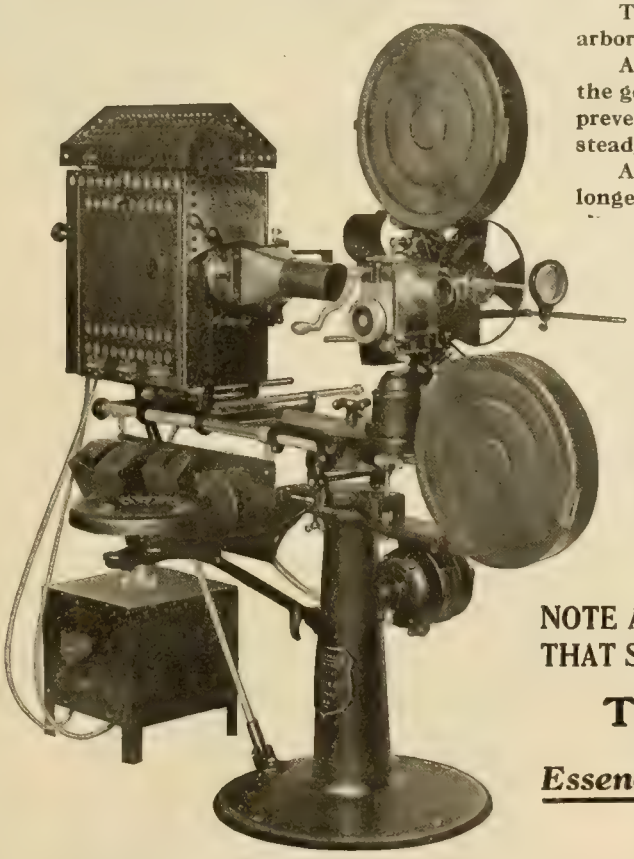
Is Now Ready for Delivery



NEW FEATURES

A sliding disc connection, consisting of a grooved face plate on each shaft, the two being connected by a sliding or floating disc, having a tongue on each side to connect the framer with the framer drive shaft.

All three parts are made of hardened and ground tool steel, are as solid as a rock, as simple as A B C, and have wonderful durability, as shown by many months of service.



This connection takes the place of the ball arbor used on former models.

An extra balance wheel on the cam shaft keeps the geneva cam in perfect alignment with the star, prevents back lash, eliminates wear, and insures steady projection.

A cam shaft extra large in diameter, one inch longer than regular models, is another improvement.

Star and Cam made of hardened and ground tool steel to insure accuracy and long wear.

A new mounting for the outside shutter, so arranged that either outside or inside shutter may be used. In ordering state which shutter is wanted.

New quick change condenser mount. Can be removed with condensers in fifteen seconds, enabling a quick change in case of broken condensers.

Large light cone on lamp house.

All screw adjustments for arc lamp.

NOTE ALL OF THESE IMPROVEMENTS AND THAT STILL THE PRICE REMAINS THE SAME

"The Blindness of Virtue" Strikes a Human Chord that Sets the World Vibrating

Once in an epoch there comes a photoplay that carries a special appeal; that reaches the depths of the inner consciousness and awakens an entire nation to a new view of life.

Through every heart runs a vein of human emotion, which touched, responds in all alike.

"The Blindness of Virtue" carries this special appeal. It strikes this universal chord that sets the heart of the world vibrating.

This six-act Essanay photoplay, written by Cosmo Hamilton, is more than entertaining; it is fascinating. Its artistry of production is perfect; its scenic beauty is unsurpassed and the acting is supreme.

But above all there is a heart appeal to mothers, to fathers, to daughters, to sons. It calls for the saving to the nation of the flower of its womanhood by teaching the truths of life and love. It is this special appeal that lifts this photoplay above the level of the merely excellent play to the plane of a masterpiece.

Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn, in the leading roles, bring out all the strong points of the play with a mastery that makes every heart respond.

A fool and his money
Is soon parted,
But business judgment
Always succeeds.
The wise man thinks–
And then acts.
The fool acts–
And then thinks.
Think of your audiences
What they want–
Then act
By giving them the best,
The best for many

LUBIN.

THE EARL'S ADVENTURE (July 26).—The young earl of Carnavon travels to America in search of his ideal, and on the observation platform of the limited his quest abruptly ends. The girl is beautiful but rather distant. The Earl bluntly declares that he would do anything to win her regard—to know her better. The girl laughs enigmatically and names the Vantine necklace, mentioned in the newspaper, as the price of her friendship. Then she disappears inside her compartment.

That night at the club the Earl is introduced to John Vantine, whose name he recognizes. The Englishman resolves to dare all and become a thief for the unknown girl of his dreams. He jimmies his way into the Vantine mansion, makes his way to the library, and is promptly apprehended by the master of the household. Vantine recognizes the Earl and is shocked to discover his crookedness. The Earl makes a clean breast of it, however, and tells him how it all came about. Vantine is indulgent and rather admires the young fellow's daring, since he is convinced of the Earl's intention to restore the jewel once the mysterious girl's name is learned.

Returning from the opera, the Vantine limousine stops at the door and a young woman alights. It is Miss Sylvia Vantine—the bewitching heroine of the Earl's railway adventure. She is wearing the necklace, but in a moment it is unfastened and she drops it to the floor. The Earl recovers it and presents the string of jewels with a low bow. After that it's easy.

AN AFRICAN HUNT (A Cartoon Comedy—July 27).—The Yankee explorer clambers into the car of his balloon, gives the signal, soars into the air and starts for Africa. It goes without saying that when he gets there his adventures are varied and extraordinary. The animals of the desert, the pyramids and the sphinx itself combine to make his hunt a series of amusing adventures.

SUSIE'S SUITORS (July 27).—Sue is very happy in Jed's love until she falls heir to a lot of money. Both she and her mother decide that Jed is no match, and he is fired out of the way. They set up an establishment and soon gather about them a choice assortment of fortune hunters. Mother thinks they are real society people and Sue is much of the same belief. Jed comes to make a last appeal and succeeds in getting as far as the hall, but mother appears and tells the butler to throw him out. Jed dies "hard," but there are two to one. He lays for his rivals and catches them coming out. He fires a few volleys of stones and chases them up the street, but they turn and a battle royal starts. It might have been bad for Jed had not Sue's uncle, a prison warden, happened along. He chases the others and takes Jed down to the house where he is coming to visit, but he is not made particularly welcome himself. He suggests that the suitors are jail birds. Mother disagrees, but uncle gets into his uniform, blows a whistle and a whole lot of suitors fall into line and do the lock step from force of habit. There is no answering that argument. They are kicked out of doors, and Jed gets the girl.

THE DEAD SOUL (Special—Three Parts—July 28).—The crew of the barque commanded by the brutal Captain Red Carson are getting ready for a voyage to Algeria. Two of the sailors see the rats leaving the ship, and, taking this as a bad omen, desert. Carson decides to shanghai two men. He corrals one drunken sailor and looking for another man finds the Rev. Paul Stoddard administering to a dying seaman. He decides to shanghai the minister, too, and tells Stoddard that a sailor on board his ship needs a minister. Stoddard follows the captain. When he asks for the sick man he is thrust down the hatchway and the order is given to sail. A few hours later Stoddard is admitted above and told to go to work. Later he sees Carson maltreating a cabin boy and intervenes. The captain turns his fury on the minister, knocks him down and orders the mate to throw the "swine" in the forecastle. There Stoddard refers to his Bible and finds a passage reminding him that it is his duty to save souls.

Next day he shows Carson the Bible passage "that whatsoever a man soweth that also shall he reap." Carson again strikes the minister and in doing so falls over a rope and injures his leg, and it seems like a judgment. During the whole voyage Stoddard is treated with extreme brutality but works earnestly for the reformation of the cruel captain. In Algeria a beautiful maid, Zulieka, has been abducted and sold to a slave dealer. She is put up for sale in the slave market, and Carson buys her and drags her off to the ship. Stoddard determines to save her. His opportunity comes when Carson is called from his cabin to quell a general fight among the crew. Stoddard unlocks the cabin door and leads Zulieka to the rail and the girl's rescue is soon effected by Hassan, her lover. The disturbance quelled, Carson discovers Zulieka's escape and is furious. He knows Stoddard has a hand in the affair and strikes him a terrible blow. The minister reels against the medicine chest, it falls with him and all of the bottles are broken.

Bubonic plague breaks out upon the ship and the serum is all lost, and Carson realizes that there is a divine justice. The frightened sailors leave, and Carson is beaten when he attempts to prevent them. Stoddard is invited to come along but he declares that his duty is to remain with the dying men on board. Carson and Stoddard are both stricken and the minister discovers a single dose of the anti-plague serum. He rushes on deck to give it to Carson. The captain's dead soul is resurrected; he hands the syringe to Stoddard, saying, "Take it, you are the better man," then he collapses. Stoddard injects the serum in the unconscious man's arm and smiles peacefully as he opens his Bible. He can die happy knowing that his mission has been accomplished. Carson comes to and finds Stoddard dead beside him. He opens the Bible and is confronted by the words, "Greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friend." He murmurs his first prayer, and rises to hail a passing vessel.

THE GOLD IN THE CROCK (Special—Two Parts—July 29).—Chester Grey and his wife, Jessie, living on a Northwest lumber tract, of which he is part owner, set out to economize in every possible way, with the intention of becoming sole owners of the timber interests. In eight years they have succeeded, but by this time the saving instinct has become inbred, and they are misers. Jessie has lost her beauty in her ceaseless efforts to save by doing rough work herself, and Chester has become a driver of men, employing a lawless and cheap class of labor, with the exception of one, Harry Vane, his assistant. Love has been lost to them, though neither quite realize it. Jessie's younger sister, Grace, comes to live with them, and Harry Vane promptly falls in love with her, and she with him. But Grace also arouses the admiration of Chester, who finds himself thinking less of the wife and more of the sister-in-law. Grace accepts his caresses as those of a brother, until once, when Chester loses all control of himself, and takes her in his arms. Both Jessie and Harry see the incident, but both turn away, and thus fail to see the outraged Grace, when she pushed Chester from her.

Both the wife and the young man misjudge the girl and the husband. Grace determines to get away without telling Jessie, and starts for the station on foot. Jessie decides to leave Chester to Grace, and takes the savings from the old crock on the shelf. She starts to the station on horseback. Two thugs in Chester's employ see Jessie with the money and follow. To escape them, she throws the money into the bushes, where it is found by Grace. Jessie escapes, but Grace, with the money, falls into the hands of the thugs. Jessie returns to camp, and summons aid. The thugs take Grace to a cabin, and confine her in the cellar, which is used as a storehouse for powder. In a fight over the division of the money, a lamp is overturned and burning oil is poured into the cellar, igniting some rubbish. Chester and Harry arrive in time to rescue Grace, just as the cabin explodes. The husband and wife realize that their miserly instincts have been the cause of their lost happiness, and the recovered money becomes a wedding present to Harry and Grace.

THE CALL OF MOTHERHOOD (July 30).—The young widow of the mountaineer lavishes an abundance of love on her little child. In the city Henry Farrell, a prosperous young physician, recently becomes a widower; he loves his little child as much as a man can who has lost an ideal wife. Lorena Nash (a mercenary society woman, plans to become his second wife. Henry establishes himself with his child, her nurse and other servants in his lodge in the mountains.

In wild grief, Nan, the girl widow, comes to him. Her child is dying. Despite Henry's efforts, the child dies and the mother's mind is unhinged by her great grief. Nan, wandering, sees Henry's child asleep in its cradle under the trees, and the call of motherhood becomes too strong to resist. She carries the child to her own cabin and there bestows upon it all the love in her soul. Henry will not disturb her at first, and when later he and the nurse gently remonstrate, Nan defies them to deprive her of the child. Henry patiently waits for the days to restore Nan's reason, and, with his child's nurse, sees that Nan and the child are well provided for.

Nan's mind does regain its strength, but her passionate love for Henry's child does not abate. She can not bear to part with it finally, and the nurse tells Henry she has not the heart to deprive Nan of the baby. Gradually and naturally Henry and Nan awake to mutual love, and when Lorena of the city finds her way to the mountain retreat, what she sees convinces her that she has lost the wealthy young physician forever.

BILLIE'S HEIRESS (Billie Reeves Comedy—July 31).—Bill is up against hard luck and a hard-hearted landlady. The latter takes his suitcase for back board and turns him adrift. Bill goes down to the boardwalk because he might as well be there as anywhere. Hard Luck goes along, but Bill does not see him. He does see what seems to be a chance, however, for he has Miss Millions pointed out to him. She does not look like a rich young woman, but a letter proves her claims, and Bill is rejoiced to find that she is not averse to his advances. They go for a stroll and Bill, to get quick action, forces himself as the hero in several affairs. A perfectly inoffensive old man is kicked off the boardwalk by Bill, who pretends that he kicked the heiress, and to clinch things quickly, Bill throws her into the ocean. He is preparing to dive to her rescue when he learns that it is Miss Millions' maid he has thrown overboard, and so he puts his coat on again and leaves the rescue to someone else.

Down the walk again he finds a pocketbook and in funds once more; he also finds a charming young woman, whom he invites for a ride on the sight-seeing yacht. Bill is the life of the party, but there is a little too much life for him when he gives his companion the purse he found and Miss Millions claims it as her own. She gets so excited about it that Bill refuses to stay in the boat with her. He dives over and heads for shore. They follow, but Bill finds refuge in an airship and does not come down until they have all gone away at least he thinks they have, but the maid is lying in wait, and pounces on him. It's the penitentiary or the parson. Bill takes a life sentence from the latter.

KALEM.

DON CAESAR DE BAZAN (Broadway Favorites Special Four Parts July 26).—Don Jose encourages the King in his infatuation for Maritana, a dancing girl, believing that when the Queen discovers the clandestine love affair, she, in revenge, will listen to his suit. It would aid his plans if Maritana is made a noble. Don Caesar de Bazan, a swashbuckling adventurer, is under sentence of death for having violated the edict against duelling. Don Jose induces the doomed man to consent to marry Maritana. He then informs the girl that the adventurer is anxious to make her his wife, and that he will restore Don Caesar to position immediately after the ceremony.

Unaware of the Prime Minister's duplicity, Maritana agrees to the marriage. Don Jose cunningly contrives to keep the doomed man in ignorance of his bride's identity by compelling Maritana to wear a veil during the ceremony. While this is taking place Lazarillo, whom Don Caesar had befriended, extracts the bullets from the guns belonging to the soldiers who are to be the groom's executioners. The marriage over, Maritana is whisked away to the home of the Marquis de Rotondo, one of the Prime Minister's tools, while Don Caesar is led out to be shot. By feigning death, the adventurer deceives the soldiers and eventually makes his escape. Arriving at the Marquis' palace, he confronts the amazed Don Jose and demands his bride. The Prime Minister endeavors to palm off the Marchioness de Rotondo, of unusual ugliness, as Maritana, but Don Caesar discovers the ruse.

Fighting his way from the palace, the adventurer pursues the carriage which is taking Maritana to the Royal Hunting Lodge. The girl believes she is about to meet her husband. She discovers how she has been tricked when the King appears before her. Don Caesar enters in time to save his wife from her royal suitor's embraces. In the meantime, Don Jose has informed the Queen of the King's love affair. She immediately dispatches a note to the latter informing him that she knows all. The King departs from the lodge upon receiving the missive, but is compelled by unforseen circumstances to return. In the meantime, Don Caesar and Maritana learn of Don Jose's treachery from each other's stories. The adventurer thereupon departs to enlist the aid of the Queen.

Don Jose is staggered to find that the Queen, instead of turning to him for sympathy, indignantly repulses his advances. Losing his head, the Prime Minister seizes her in his arms and endeavors to embrace her. Don Caesar arrives at this moment and hastens to his Queen's defense. A terrific duel ensues, which ends when the Prime Minister is impaled upon the adventurer's sword. The fight over, Don Caesar returns to the hunting lodge where he again comes in time to save Maritana from the King's embraces. Confronting his ruler, the adventurer informs him of how his sword had fought in defense of the Queen's honor. The story fills the King with the realization of his own baseness and in reparation, he appoints Don Caesar Governor of Granada.

THE TOILERS ("Ham and Bud" Comedy—July 27).—Cupid claims poor Ham for his own the moment the boss janitor lays eyes on Marion Morton, who has come to look at some statues done by Cangelo. Bud also falls victim to the fair dame's beauty, but relinquishes his ambition upon coming in contact with Ham's foot. A piece of statuary showing a couple of gladiators attracts Mrs. Morton's attention. She purchases the marble and requests that it be delivered at her home in time to be shown to the people who are to attend her reception that evening. The adventurers first glance at the statue, take a peek at Mrs. Morton and are then buried in deep thought.

When the expressman call for the marble, Ham and Bud have taken the place of the gladiators. They are carted to the Morton mansion and placed in the reception room behind a pair of curtains. A butler places some cake and sandwiches on a table. The statues come to life and proceed to demolish the eats. When the guests presently appear, the frequency with which the figures change their poses rather puzzle them. The deception is discovered when the sculptor arrives. Enraged, he chases the impostors. Ham and Bud elude their pursuers and lean up against a statue of a policeman. While they are chuckling over their cleverness, the statue of the policeman comes to life and yanks Ham and Bud off to the station.

MYSTERIES OF THE GRAND HOTEL (Second Installment—"The Disappearing Necklace"—July 28).—In his native haunts, Duncan throws off the mask and appears as the drug addict and criminal that he is. To the attaches of the Grand Hotel, he seems a man of wealth and refinement. Fulton and his wife arrive from the West and register at the Grand Hotel, Duncan, ingratiating himself into Fulton's favor, learns that the latter's wife possesses some very valuable jewels. Attacking a window-cleaner, Duncan knocks the man unconscious, robs him of his uniform and locks his victim in a tool shed. Climbing up the fire escapes, the crook locates the room occupied by the Fultons. Mrs. Fulton is alone at the time. Holding her up, Duncan steals her gems, among which is a diamond necklace. The husband's return, however, leads to Duncan's capture. All the gems save the necklace are recovered. That has mysteriously disappeared.

Knowing that it would be hopeless to expect the man to confess the hiding place of the necklace, Frances Ballou and Hilton, the house detectives, allow him to go free. Hilton trails the man to a den in the slums of the city. A moment's carelessness, however, and the sleuth finds himself a prisoner in the hands of the crook's accomplices. Duncan then mockingly informs his prisoner that he had slipped the necklace into the vacuum cleaner tube of the Fulton room and that he now intends to return and recover the gems from the dirt tank in the cellar of the hotel. Shortly after the man de-

A BUSINESS BUCCANEER (Alice Joyce Re-Issue—July 30).—Tom Hopewell, returning from South America, brings with him a new formula for the manufacture of rubber. The young man loves Agnes, in the employ of his company. Newspaper men who learn of the secret formula, endeavor to get a story from Tom. Failing in this, they concoct one of their own. This comes to the attention of Hastings, employed by a rival company. Hastings, in his effort to obtain the formula, tries to bribe Agnes, but the girl contemptuously declines his offer.

That night while Agnes and Tom go for a drive, they notice a light shining in the office of the Hopewell plant. Their suspicions aroused, the two investigate and find Hastings and several accomplices trying to force the safe. The thieves make Tom and his sweetheart prisoners, thrusting them into an adjoining room. Agnes' dog, which had accompanied the lovers, is also locked in the room. Tom and Agnes succeed in removing their bonds and attempt to write a note beseeching help. They can find neither pen nor pencil and fearing the noise of the typewriter will alarm the burglars, decide to make use of the phonograph used for dictation purposes. Tom dictates a cry for help on a record which he later fastens to the neck of Agnes' dog. The animal is then lowered from the window.

The dog runs home. The Hopewell butler discovers the record and places it on the phonograph. As the result, the police are notified and a number of officers hasten to the factory. They come just in time to capture the criminals and free the lovers.

THE FATE OF NO. 1 (Episode No. 38, "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—July 31).—Their demand for money having gone unheeded, Garibaldi and his gang wreck Number One. Howard, who attempts to interfere, is battered into insensibility. The criminals then place a note in the man's pocket warning the railroad officials to heed their demands in the future. A second demand for money causes the officials to plant a decoy package in the spot indicated. Garibaldi, however, spies the detectives lying in hiding and avoids the trap. In revenge the man sets about to wreck another train. This consists of opening the switch leading to a siding on which a number of box cars are standing. A trackwalker discovers the open switch, however, and closes it.

This done, the man rushes to the station for the purpose of having Helen wire a warning of the gang's activities to headquarters. Garibaldi and his band, however, appear upon the scene and compel Helen to wire "All O. K." instead. The criminals, after binding the trackwalker, leave their chief to guard Helen while they go to open the switch a second time. Helen cleverly catches the scoundrel off his guard and engages him in a struggle. Garibaldi's revolver is accidentally discharged and stuns the man. After freeing the trackwalker, Helen hastens to flag the flyer. The engineer, failing to observe her signals, Helen daringly leaps aboard the train and warns him just in time. Garibaldi's crew discover their leader's predicament. They overpower the guard. Detectives in the vicinity learn of what is taking place and rush to give the criminals battle. The Black-handers are overpowered after a sensational fight and placed under arrest.

POOR BABY (July 28).—Pete is just a tramp, but honest withal. At any rate, he is honest enough to do a real, sure enough hour's work when Mrs. Smith tells him that she will give him a hand-out and a near-respectable suit of clothes in place of the scarecrow outfit he is wearing if he will saw and split a pile of wood just outside the kitchen door. While Pete is wielding the axe and is on the last lap of his bread-winning stunt, Mrs. Jones, a neighbor, calls with her baby. Mrs. Smith has laid the bundle of clothes, with the lunch wrapped up inside, on a bench beside the door, calling out to the knight of the road to tell him where he will find it when his job is finished. As Mrs. Jones comes to the door she lays the baby down on a bench, and explains to her neighbor that her's is a "fresh-air" youngster, who will be just as well off sleeping outside. A white flannel shirt is on the outside of the bundle of clothes intended for the hobo, and baby and bundle look much alike as they lie outside the door. So that when the son of rest approaches and accidentally picks up Mrs. Jones' offspring, having completed his job, we are not surprised that he should make such a mistake.

When the hobo gets in a box-car, thinking it a good place to change his clothes, he discovers his mistake. Eventually leaving the train, the tramp tries to get rid of the baby by leaving it on the doorstep of a very circumspect maiden lady whom the villagers know to be "keepin' company" for the first time in her life, with a middle-aged local beau. Scandal in the air immediately. The old maid's affinity at last deposits poor baby on the doorstep of the Newlyweds. More trouble immediately follows—and baby is "passed on" elsewhere. In the end, Mrs. Jones and her hubby have their darling restored to them, while the member of the Society of the Great Unwashed gets his reward in a most unexpected manner.

THE GIRL OF THE GYPSY CAMP (Special—Three Parts—July 30.)—On her sixth birthday, Joy Randolph is carried off by a band of gypsies, after having been given by her grandfather, Colonel Randolph, a locket containing her mother's portrait. The child's hat is found in the river, where the gypsies have thrown it, and this leads to the belief that she has been drowned. The shock to the Colonel is so great that he is taken very ill, and the doctor tells the Rev. Amos Bayley that he fears the Colonel will go insane unless someone is found to replace Joy in her grandfather's heart. The minister procures a young boy from the neighboring orphan's home, and Colonel Randolph finally takes the child to his heart and tells him that he will be a father to him.

Twelve years elapse, and the gypsies, confident that Joy will no longer be recognized, return to the village from whence they stole her. Joy is known among the Romany people as Romono, and is now eighteen. Franko, second in command of the band, is in love with her, but Rigo, the chief of the gypsies, prevents him from forcing his attentions upon her. William, the Colonel's adopted son, has just returned from the University of Virginia, and he and Joy meet. It is a case of love at first sight, and William begs his foster-father's permission to marry the girl. The Colonel is furious over the idea, little dreaming who the seeming gypsy really is. He has seized the gypsies' horses for trampling his crops, but in the meantime Romono has left the band and gone to live with the minister, where she finds the old colored mammy, who was once her nurse, though, of course, she does not recognize her. The Colonel bargains with Rigo, the chief of the band, to restore the horses to them if they will get away immediately and take Romono with them. Meantime, William and Romono slip away to the office of the Justice of the Peace and are married. William is captured by the gypsies, and Franko goes to the minister's house with a note for Romono from Rigo, telling her that unless she gives Franko the money which the minister has collected towards the building of a new church, he will fire his rifle as a signal for her husband's death. Thus threatened, Romono hands over the church funds.

Franko returns to the camp dragging Romono with him, but in the meantime the gypsies have taken William to a near-by saw-mill and bound him to a huge log, Rigo setting the saw in motion. Telling Romono that she will find her lover in pieces at the mill, Rigo and Franko start to follow the gypsy band away, but Franko, incensed at Rigo's having allowed Romono to go, attacks him with a knife. In the struggle, both are mortally wounded, and drop side by side. Here they are found by the minister, who hears Rigo's dying confession regarding the kidnapping of Romono, or Joy, years before, and the stealing of the church funds. Meantime, Romono has reached the mill, and just in the nick of time, throws the lever and stops the saw, saving her husband's life. Back at the minister's house, Colonel Randolph, after the minister's explanation, realizes that his adopted son has, unknowingly, married his long-lost granddaughter, and belated happiness is brought to all as a result of William's falling in love with "The Girl of the Gypsy Camp."

THE BEDOUIN'S SACRIFICE (July 31).—Mary Nelson's father is firmly of the opinion that she is entirely too young to think of marriage, and therefore refuses to listen to young Dick Thurston's plea for the girl's hand, notwithstanding that he really likes Dick. He tells the young folks that they must wait a couple of years, at least, "when they will know their own minds better." He tells Dick that he better not visit Mary for some time, and finally hits upon a trip to the Mediterranean as a means of both providing an enjoyable holiday for his family and getting Mary away from Dick for a few months. While they are preparing to sail Dick and Mary exchange messages and even meet secretly. Learning of the trip, Dick gets his father to give him a couple of months' vacation, and tells Mary in a note that he has booked a passage on the same ship. They are thrown together on the ship, of course, but on landing in Africa, they are again forced to meet clandestinely. Going inland to a town situated just on the edge of the desert, they decide to remain a week.

Mary has an appointment to meet Dick in front of the American consulate one afternoon at three o'clock. Mary prepares to keep the engagement, but passes through the bazaar district on her way there. In front of one of the bazaars she is noticed by Omar Hassam, a Bedouin chieftain, who, inflamed by her beauty, instructs his men to seize her and carry her off at a given signal. A cloth is thrown over her head, she is rushed through the narrow streets to the edge of the city, and a few minutes later her captors are dashing away in the direction of the desert. A prisoner in the chief's tent, Mary is forced to send a note to her father, telling him that she is held, pending the payment of 50,000 francs ransom. After the note is sent, she pleads with her captor, and, in spite of his suddenly inspired love for her, Omar Hassam declares that he will try to effect her release, but explains that, since his men are counting on the ransom, it would be madness for him to try to get her away again by himself. She suggests that he go to the consulate in town and meet Dick, saying that if he can bring him back with him, they may be able to effect her release together. This is done, but that night, when they attempt to get away, they are surprised by one of the men on guard, and in the struggle which follows, Omar Hassan is mortally wounded. They get safely away and return to the consulate, but Omar's wound is fast overcoming him, and, after giving Mary a scarab ring as a memento, he dies, having laid down his life to save theirs.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES NO. 15, "Mr. Jarr's Big Vacation" (July 26).—One Saturday half-holiday, Jarr gets his vacation money and starts for home. Jack Silver, after a strenuous night has resolved to swear off and lead the simple life for a while at Uncle Henry's country place, where the Jarrs are going. He accordingly throws the last bottle of whiskey in the place out the window. It is Jarr's ill-luck to be passing underneath at the time. He is knocked down, receives a whiskey bath, and loses his wallet with his vacation money. In his dazed condition and smelling strongly of spirits, Mrs. Jarr thinks, when her husband gets home, he has been drinking again. Fortunately for all, Willie Jarr happens to find the pocket-book and brings it home. Mrs. Jarr confiscates it and goes on to Uncle Henry's with the children, leaving Jarr home alone and penniless. After trying to accumulate the price of a railroad ticket, poor Jarr is reduced to begging. He finally collects the necessary amount only to find he has missed the last train. Then on his arrival at the country town via freight, in taking a short-cut across a guarded melon patch, he gets shot full of salt by a farmer. This scares him so he wades right through half a dozen glass hot-bed frames with the farmer and his dog close behind. His family barely save him from annihilation. Jack Silver fully corroborates Jarr's story of the whiskey bottle incident, then all is forgiven.

THE MISSING CLUE (July 28).—Through the passing away of his Aunt Dwyer, Gyvus A. Rest, a plumber, suddenly becomes a millionaire. Under the new order of things he no longer considers Bud, the official dog-catcher, a suitable match for Pauline, his daughter, and orders him to make himself scarce. Mrs. Rest is inordinately fond of her little pet dog, "Joy," and when the animal is stolen by a couple of crooks, she contracts a bad case of "hysteria." Doctors announce the only cure would be to find the lost pup, and Gyvus offers a five-thousand-dollar reward for its return. Next morning there are about a thousand people, each with a dog, outside the house, but "Joy" is not among them. Gyvus then turns detective, and sets out to look for the elusive canine himself. His methods are unique and he runs into some very funny adventures, but the only clue he finds is a strand of coarse red hair. Meanwhile, "Joy" has escaped from the two crooks, and they are wild with rage on seeing the five-thousand-dollar offer they let slip out of their hands. Gyvus promises Bud if he can recover "Joy" he can marry Pauline. A cop on duty, seeing the missing dog dashing past, sends in a call for the reserves, who get a "flying" start and lead a big crowd in pursuit. The thieves join the chase, and when the bunch gets opposite Bud standing by his dog-catcher wagon, all grab the nets he uses in his profession, leaving him standing stockstill with amazement. But he has the laugh on everyone when suddenly the missing dog runs right into Bud's arms. The two crooks claim it, but the cop recognizes them, and the identification is confirmed by Pa Gyvus, who finds his clue matches the hair on one of the crooks. They get jailed and Bud gets Pauline.

CUTEY, FORTUNE HUNTING (July 29).—In desperate financial circumstances, Cutey plans to marry the wealthy widow Audly, of whose wealth he has heard a great deal, but whom he has never seen. He corresponds with her, and she rather takes a liking to his photograph. He spends a week in the country with his friends, the De Veers, and during his absence the widow calls on the De Veers whom she knows well. Learning of Cutey's presence, she makes the De Veers promise not to reveal her identity, and when Cutey returns, she falls in love with him immediately. Cutey in turn is charmed with her, but having in mind the widow and her money, is a little coy; not knowing of course, that he is talking to the widow herself. But the De Veers and the widow makes so much over him, his vanity gets the better of his good sense and he begins to boast of the wealthy widow he is going to marry. Mrs. Audly is highly indignant and determines to teach Cutey a lesson. On her return home, she finds a letter from Cutey saying he can no longer live without her (which is pretty near the truth, for his credit is about exhausted) and she at once replies that she will marry him the following day. Before his arrival, the widow disguises herself as an ugly old woman. The groom does not see the bride's face until just before the ceremony and he nearly has a fit. He refuses to marry her, but she threatens him with arrest and he is forced to go through it. When the Mayor, who is officiating, tells Cutey to kiss his bride, he draws the line, and leaps for the door. He is caught and brought back, however, to find that the widow has been transformed into a beautiful woman. He doesn't have to be urged to kiss the bride then, while everybody laughs and the flower girls shower them with roses.

SOME DUEL (July 30).—Mike Dugan, a sturdy bricklayer, and a good union man, loves Flora, but owing to the existence of a rival in Hughie, the barber, she tries to divide her attentions equally. Kate is also in love with Hughie, which causes much jealousy and bickering. Finally Mike challenges Hughie to a duel out in Winter's Woods. Flora and Kate, learning of this secretly determine to be on hand to protect Hughie from harm. Hughie arrives on the battle ground armed with a razor in each hand, while Mike prepares to defend his honor with "Irish confetti"—otherwise bricks. Kate and Flora conceal themselves behind a nearby rock, catching the two men circling like a couple of roosters. Mike hurls a brick, Hughie dodges and it hits Flora. She promptly accuses Kate of having struck her and the two women are soon putting up a scrap worth watching. They get mixed up with Hughie and Mike, and a mis-directed blow from Kate's rolling pin strikes Hughie on the head just as Flora's hatpin reaches another vital spot in his anatomy. With a howl of anguish Hughie runs for dear life. Kate follows and does the Good Samaritan act. Hughie's arm steals around her waist and with a happy sigh she nestles on his ample bosom, while Flora faints—first making sure Mike is nearby to catch her. So the Duel ends up in a Dual wedding.

THE MYSTERY OF MARY (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—July 31).—Meeting in a most peculiar manner, and under the strangest circumstances, a beautiful young girl, Tryon Dunham offers his assistance on learning she has no money or friends in the city. She will not tell her name, but seeing she is evidently a girl of refinement, he respects her wishes and asks no questions. He borrows his sister's hat and a coat from his mother and brings them to the girl, then buys her a ticket to Chicago. He rides on one station with her, and her last words are: "Call me Mary." Tyron gets into serious difficulties over the purloined clothing, from which he has difficulty in extricating himself. Judge Blackwell, Tryon's senior partner, sends Tryon to Chicago on business, and the young man is highly pleased, as he hopes to find the girl there. On his arrival in the Windy City, he employs a detective, but without result. Then, by chance, he locates the girl in the home of a friend, where she is employed as parlor maid. He proposes marriage and is accepted, then she tells him her story. It seems that her cousin Richard, coveting the fortune left her had everything prepared for railroading her to an insane asylum, then he—posing as her husband—was to "manage" her fortune. On the train she had overheard the plot, escaped and met Tryon. She had feared to tell anyone her story lest they think her really insane. Tryon and Mary are married, but the cousin butts in again and abducts her. A daring leap enables Tryon and the detectives to catch the Washington express, and after a sensational arrest of the girl's captors, Tryon and Mary speed on to happiness.

THE RED STEPHANO (Special—Two Parts—July 27).—Known as the "Terror of the Argentine Plains," "Red Stephano" determines to intimidate Jack Schneider, the new owner of the Rancho Verde, as he had his predecessor. He carries out his threat and steals some of the choicest horses, killing one of the herders in the operation. Schneider is furious and, gathering some of the neighboring ranchers, they start out on the outlaw's trail. After an exciting hunt through the grass, which, in that country, grows higher than a man's head, they capture the rascal. Schneider says that shooting is too good for such a beast and Stephano is tied hand and foot to a horse, then turned loose in the wilderness. Katrina, Schneider's wife, with her two children, start to join her husband at the ranch and are attacked by renegade Indians. Katrina is absolutely fearless and doesn't hesitate to shoot when necessary. She temporarily drives them off and comes across the "Red Stephano." Carrying the suffering man back to camp, she revives him and in his rude

During the running fight he receives a mortal wound, Schneider, who has become uneasy, arrives with a party of men. just in time to save the little party from annihilation. Finding Red Stephano dead, Schneider reverently tells the men that the man they had sent to a supposed death was the means of saving his wife and children.

ESSANAY.

THE BACHELOR'S BABY (July 16).—A world-weary mother, penniless and widowed, leaves her starving infant in the tonneau of Broncho Billy's limousine. Broncho Billy, a rich man, discovers the infant in his car and, although delighted with the "novelty," feels in an awkward position. The child is cared for, however, and in spite of the ridicule heaped upon him by his club friends, Broncho Billy is big hearted and rears the child to maturity. The girl is about nineteen years old when she falls in love with a nice sort of a fellow who wants to marry her. Broncho Billy himself has just about decided to ask her to marry him when they come to him for his blessing. Realizing that she would be happier with a younger man, he gives his consent.

THE CALL OF YESTERDAY (July 26).—Sherforth, a college man of about 30 years, down and out, is idling at the side of a country road when Dolly Hoodshaw, 20 years old and pretty, drives by in a little cart. She mistakes him for a Mr. Forrester and considers his strange trampish garb a whim of his. He sees that she misunderstands him and, being desperate for some change of luck, assumes the part she thinks he is taking. He returns to the Hoodshaw home with her and is offered great hospitality, including evening clothes belonging to a son away at school. From a college picture he recalls Dolly's brother as an old classmate. Dr. Cordry, Dean of Bleakly College, is a visitor at the house and meets Sherforth, recognizes him. Sherforth tries to masquerade but finally goes to the Dean in desperation for his advice, when he learns he cares much for Dolly and she loves him. While they are talking on the lawn fire breaks out in the house and Sherforth makes a thrilling rescue of the girl, imprisoned in her room, with barred windows to prevent sleep walking. With superhuman strength, Sherforth tears aside the bars and drops the girl safely into the net below, then saves himself.

SNAKEVILLE'S TWINS (July 29).—Slippery Slim, Mustang Pete and The Henpecked Husband all buy a bottle of hair restorer from Sophie Clutts, who is demonstrating its marvels in the village store. The Henpecked Husband fills Pete's and Slim's bottles with turpentine. It grows hair on Mustang Pete's head and makes Slippery Slim bald. The Husband returns home and his twins drink his hair restorer. He rushes them frantically back to the store to get an antidote but is chased by the enraged Slim and Pete. They chase him up a telephone pole and are ready to grab him when the twins throw eggs at them and scare them off.

A MAN AFRAID (Special—Two Parts—July 31).—Ted Barham, 11 years old, is injured while playing in a barn. A blow on the head when he falls from a trapeze stuns him and deranges certain nerve centers which make him a coward. As a man he is engaged to Austen Martin. Bayard Schnell, his rival, discovers this weakness of Ted's and induces the girl to break her engagement from "a coward." He is struck by a baseball and his mental faculties return. He feels true courage coursing through his nervous system. He saves an old man from being struck by an auto. Austen wants him to renew the engagement on learning of this, but he declares he will not until he has premeditatedly performed some test of nerve. He enters an auto race. Schnell gives Ted's mechanician $500 to become ill during the race and thus incapacitate Ted. The plans work out and Ted vainly tries to locate a mechanician. Austen agrees to take the job and they are off. He is struck by a stone on the head and again experiences the crippling fear but fights it and wins the race. Schnell's treachery is discovered and Austen again takes Ted's ring.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE POSSE (July 23).—Broncho Billy discovers a man stealing cattle and organizes a posse to capture him. The man sneaks back to his house and tucks his two little children into bed. Anderson steals into the room and the father escapes, the posse after him. They catch him and take him to jail while Broncho Billy returns to look after the two children. A mob breaks into the jail and takes the cattle thief out to hang him. Broncho Billy realizes the helplessness of the children with the father gone and so chases after the mob with the children. They arrive in time to prevent the father from being hanged. Anderson explains the predicament of the children if the father is hanged and the man is set free.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS (Special—Three Parts—July 27). Because he persists in attempting to write for a living when he cannot sell any of his work, Gerard Franklin disowns his nephew, Benjamin. Determined more than ever to make good as a literary man, Benjamin goes to the lady of his heart—Violet Thompson—and assures her that he will make good in spite of his uncle's adverse tactics. And soon Benjamin hasn't sold any stories or plays and the rent and other things are becoming past due. Artie Fishal, to collect back rent, calls on Benjamin and is turned down. He then appeals to the uncle, who agrees to pay Fishal $1,000 if he can rid his nephew of the writing bug. Wishal agrees to try it. Malcom Graham announces to Benjamin that he is in love with Violet. Benjamin assures him it is mutual. Considerable excitement is stirred up when Graham borrows a dress suit and hat from Benjamin, that person having purloined them from Fishal. Benjamin and Graham are both invited to the birthday affair given by Violet. It is here that Benjamin tells his uncle he has sold a play (unknown to him) through Violet by Graham. Everything ends well—uncle is happy and Violet accepts Benjamin.

DREAMY DUD, HE VISITS HIS UNCLE'S FARM (July 28).—Dreamy Dud and Wag, the dog, are given the freedom of their uncle's great farm and so set out to investigate the barnyard. First they run into the stable where the horses are munching. Wag is interested in the chickens and succeeds in getting into a fight with a rooster when he teased a hen who was pulling a worm out of the ground. While Wag is fighting joyously with the rooster, Dud is being picked up by the seat of the trousers by the horse and thrown high into the air. He comes down near the cow and is hooked high in the air. When he comes down he alights on the calf and promptly endeavors to ride the little animal about the pasture. When the bull sees him he tosses him to the cow. The bull and cow toss Dud back and forth and finally Dud is thrown high into the air and into the befry of a church steeple, where his body rings the bell. This wakes him up and he jumps out of the bed to stop the alarm clock.

BIOGRAPH.

A LETTER TO DADDY (July 26).—Old Townsend, the broker, had just finished checking up his cash account, and sealed the money in a long envelope bearing his postoffice return address in the corner, when his little daughter, who had watched the procedure with interest, abstracted the envelope and bore it gleefully to her own room. For a long time she had planned to send a letter to daddy, and here was a letter that was just the thing. In her laborious hand she superscribed it "To my daddy," stole out and dropped it into the mail. When the money was missed, Townsend had his son arrested. The boy, just home from college, had fallen in love with the maid and had asked his father to finance the union. When he refused his aid, the lovers had stolen away and got married on the strength of the girl's savings. The dreadful accusation confounded them. Then the postman came in with the morning mail, and right on top of the sheaf of letters was the missing envelope—the letter to daddy, which a souless government employee had stamped "Return to sender." The money was safe. Daddy asked his son's foregiveness, and they all scolded the little letter writer—smilingly.

REAPERS OF THE WHIRLWIND (Special—Two Parts—July 27). John Howard had lived blamelessly for more than twenty years, during which his wife had born him a son and the boy had reached manhood with promise of a great career as an artist. Then Howard met Cora Legrande, the famous dancer, and forsook the paths of honor. His son, Charles, was coming home from Paris, but that did not give him pause. In a note to his wife he confessed that her suspicions were true, and that he was going away with Cora. In Paris, for a while, he was happy, then Cora began to tire of his stinginess. At the same time Voisin, her former manager, discovered her whereabouts. Later, in the club, Voisin's sneering remark provoked a quarrel that ended in a duel. Howard was mortally wounded. When the scandal became known, Charles renounced his father's memory and, under his mother's name, went on with his art. Cora Legrande heard of his wonderful work and insisted on sitting to him. He fell in love with her. When the portrait was finished he showed it to his mother. Mrs. Howard knew that face—the woman who had wrecked her happiness. In agony, she went to Cora and wrung from her a promise never to see Charles again. But Charles had found in his mother's desk his father's note and a miniature of Cora. Inflamed by her perfidy, he rushed to her rooms

My Dear Mr. Nielsen:

Well, the greatest picture ever produced, from the greatest story of its kind ever written, with the greatest cast of stars ever gathered together under one director, has been shown at our theatre, and we wish to congratulate you on "The Spoilers."

In all our experience in the motion picture game, we have never seen a picture which can compare with it both in artistic merit and as a business-getter. Our patrons are wild about it, and our telephone has been busy with calls as to where the picture can be seen again and when.

If possible, we will be glad to arrange an early return booking on the picture, as we will no doubt need something to get us the business as "THE SPOILERS" has done for us.

With best wishes for your success, we are

Yours very truly,

and confronted her. Voisin, entering, drew his pistol. In his rage he aimed poorly; the bullet entered Cora's breast. The ruin of lives was complete.

THE WANDERER'S PLEDGE (July 29).—The trapper and his daughter find a crippled man in the woods and, taking him to their cabin, restore him to health. Later they persuade him to stay and work with the trapper. A worthless halfbreed encounters the girl in the forest and frightens her by his advances. Her father and the wanderer drive him away. On the following day the trapper sets out for the trading post with a bundle of furs. Anxious about his daughter's safety during his absence, which may be of several day's duration, he is reassured by the wanderer, who pledges himself to guard the girl as though she were his own sister. The man forgets that he cannot guard her from himself—for he has fallen in love with her. She is again frightened by the halfbreed, who attacks her and is beaten off by the wanderer. The latter loses control of himself and, kissing the girl, declares his love. Conscience-stricken by the realization that he has been false to his trust, he goes alone into the woods, bent on killing the halfbreed. He meets the trapper, who, having fallen in with one of the men from the trading post, has sold his furs without making the long trip to the post. When the trapper asks after his daughter, the wanderer declares: "I have been false to my promise, but I'll make good," and, snatching the trapper's gun, plunges into the woods after the halfbreed. A fight to the death ensues, the halfbreed being hurled over a cliff. Returning to where he left the trapper, the wanderer hands him his gun and is instantly covered by the weapon in the hands of the father, who, misunderstanding the wanderer's words, believes he has harmed the girl. But before the trapper can pull the trigger, his daughter comes on the scene and declares her debt of gratitude to the wanderer. Explanations ensue, and the wanderer, having redeemed his pledge, finds himself in a position to withdraw it, so that he may claim a nearer and dearer relationship with the girl he loves, renouncing the open road for his own fireside.

THE BATTLE AT ELDERBUSH GULCH (Special—Two Parts—July 30) (Biograph Reissue No. 8).—Two young girls from the East are journeying to make their home with an uncle in the still unsettled West. On the stage coach they fall in with a young married couple bound for the same destination. The entire population of Elderbush Gulch turns out to welcome the stage coach. The young couple and their baby are especial objects of attention. Arrived at their uncle's cabin, the girls reveal that they are not alone. Opening a basket, they produce two ragged little dogs which they have brought from home. The boss hates dogs and issues an ultimatum—"No dogs in my house." So the basket is placed outside the cabin door that night. The dogs escape and run into the arms of two Indians, who, having returned late to their camp, have missed a great dog feast. The older girl, bent on smuggling the dogs into her bed, comes out, finds them gone, and, searching for them, encounters the Indians. She attempts to rescue her pets, the Indians demur, and she screams. Her uncle comes on the scene and, thinking her attacked, fires at the Indians. The chief's son falls. This unfortunate termination of an innocent adventure fans into flame the smoldering spark of Indian hatred. The inhabitants of Elderbush Gulch are surprised by a sudden attack and barricade their cabins. A halfbreed rides to summon the troops. The young husband and wife become separated; the former has entrusted the baby to a neighbor's care before the fighting begins, and, wounded by an Indian bullet, lies dazed in the forest. His wife is rescued by a settler and taken to the cabin of the girls' uncle. As the Indians slaughter the brave defenders and narrow their circle about the cabin, she becomes almost insane with anxiety over her husband and baby. In an attempt to reach the cabin, the settler who has charge of the child is killed, and the baby lies crying in the midst of dead bodies. The older girl sees it and risks her life to rescue it by creeping through a hole in the wall which a kindly carpenter has made to admit the puppies. Finally the troops arrive and disperse the Indians.

MORE THAN FRIENDS (July 31).—The secret service chief and his two trusted aides are after a counterfeiting gang. An agent, disguised as a mendicant, locates the gang's quarters' and the chief sends his aides to spy out the place. The two men are rivals for the affection of the chief's daughter. On the evening before they undertake their dangerous task, one learns that the other is the favored suitor. In the counterfeiters' den they are trapped by desperate men, who are breaking in when the disappointed lover prevails upon his comrade to go for help. When the other arrives with the police, he is dying. Having given his life for his friend, he confesses his love for the girl and sends her the ring with which he had hoped to plight their troth.

ON THE JOB (July 22).—Jerry is in dire dread of policemen and exits hastily at the approach of any one of the law's minions. The story opens showing Jerry caught by two mounted police, who drag him along the roadway. He escapes their vigilance and wanders to a nearby wood where he overhears the plot of two highwaymen to hold up a passing automobile by pointing guns without cartridges. There being no need to fear empty revolvers Jerry follows the plotters as they are in the act of robbing Mr. Rich and his pretty daughter he intervenes and by the use of a discarded policeman's club sends the highwaymen into dreamland.

Out of gratitude Mr. Rich, who is afflicted with the gout, appoints his savior as his nurse, in which capacity Jerry is a dubious success. At the Rich home awkwardness in handling Mr. Rich causes ructions between the family members and the servants, and as he wheels Mr. Rich through the streets he collides with people, poles and walls, finally letting the wheel chair stand unprotected in a busy thoroughfare. A flying automobile crashes into it and sends its occupant to the sidewalk beyond buried wreckage. The actions of Jerry and Mr. Rich have created such a disturbance that the officers decide to lock up the disturbers, to which suggestion Jerry and Mr. Rich acquiesce under pressure.

THE SHADOW AND THE SHADE (Two Parts—July 19).—John Hillman, a banker, is convalescent after a serious illness and is cared for by his wife, Anne. Hillman is told that he may visit his office for a few hours, but must avoid all excitement, for a sudden shock might prove fatal. Robert Foster desires to effect a compromise with the Hillman interests who control the Consolidated Stores Company. He sees Hillman at his office, who refuses to compromise, and he tells Foster that his syndicate must settle in full by Wednesday noon. Foster, in desperation, remembers that he knew Hillman's wife years ago and resolves to plead with her, for he realizes that it is his only chance.

Foster tells his business confreres that with Hillman removed, a settlement cannot fail to be effected. He causes a note to be written Mrs. Hillman, signed by her husband's physician, asking her to consult with him privately regarding Mr. Hillman's condition. Foster has had a profile of Anne Hillman fastened to a window shade opposite the window of Hillman's apartment. A light placed behind the silhouette makes it appear as if Anne were in Foster's room. Spying this profile, the excitement and jealous rage is too much for Hillman, who falls to the floor unconscious. His man servant, conspiring with Foster across the way, phones to Foster that Hillman is dead and Foster believes that his plot has succeeded.

Dr. Harden and Anne Hillman enter the Hillman home where the physician restores Hillman to semi-consciousness. Mrs. Hillman calls in Darceau of the Secret Service. He discovers Foster's plot and summons the police.

THE FOREMAN OF THE BAR Z RANCH (July 20).—Tom Wallace lives with his uncle, John Higgins, and Tom is the sole heir to his uncle's wealth. Joe Watkins, the sheriff, and Higgins are life-long enemies, and when Higgins discovers that Tom is in love with Fern Watkins, he threatens to disinherit Tom.

Marie and Miguel Garcia have purchased a farm from Higgins on the installment plan and Marie works hard to meet the payments, while Miguel spends his time in the town dance hall. Miguel wanting money for his revelries decides to rob Higgins. Higgins surprises Miguel in the act of robbing him, and Miguel shoots and kills Higgins and escapes.

Cowboys find Higgins' dead body, and Tom is accused of the murder. The party come upon the dead body of Miguel, who had fallen off a cliff. The sheriff finds the money and tells Tom he is sorry he accused him. Fern pleads her love for Tom and her father relents.

AT THE FLOOD TIDE (July 21).—Mary Allen and half-witted Paul Grant are menders of nets. Mary loves Tom Grant, a young fisherman. Leeds is in love with Mary, but the love is not returned.

Three months later Mary has been married to Leeds, and has learned to know what neglect and cruelty mean. She visits her old friend Paul. He is enraged because of the cruelty to Mary. He creeps to Leeds' home and enters the bedroom with a knife in hand. Later Mary finds Leeds lying dead across the bed and discovers that he has been murdered.

Mary believes Tom killed her husband, but as the villagers also suspect him, she steps forward and says, "I killed him because he ill-treated me." Later, a note is found written by Paul which says. "I did it. He beat her and I killed him."

MOTHER HOOD (Special—Three Parts—July 22).—Hazel Booth, a society favorite, marries Franklyn Foster, a millionaire banker. Foster is a great lover of children while Hazel does not care for the little ones. Three years later Foster subscribes $5,000 for a fresh air fund for poor children and gives his lawn for a children's outing. Hazel takes exception to the proposed function. Hazel's sister, Estelle, comes to visit her. She is interested in the work among the poor children, and she and Foster at once become mutually enthusiastic over the work. At the lawn party a little boy mistakes Hazel for his mother. He puts his little arms around her neck and she finally awakens with a true appreciation of what mother-love means.

Hazel is stricken with illness. She undergoes an operation which proves a success, but forever shuts out the joy of motherhood. The surgeons tell Hazel that her husband shall never know the truth. Hazel is later ordered to go abroad for her health. While abroad, Hazel meets Jacques Lanoi, an unscrupulous physician. He tells her that her trouble is mental and not physical and that she must give him her full confidence. Hazel then tells the physician of her love for children. Lanoi tells her, "Why not adopt a child. I will arrange all formalities and your husband need never know it." Hazel acts upon this suggestion and writes to her husband that she is keeping a wonderful secret, and Foster, at home, wonders what the secret can be. Later, Lanoi cables Foster that a baby girl has arrived and that Mrs. Foster will be able to sail for home in three weeks.

Two years pass. Lanoi is in need of financial assistance and also has social ambitions. He goes to Hazel and tells her that the price of silence regarding the baby conspiracy is financial aid and an entry to Hazel's social set. Hazel now realizes that she is in Lanoi's power. Lanoi associates with Foster and their friends. He wishes to make Estelle, Hazel's sister, his wife, Hazel is horrified when Lanoi tells her of his determination. She then determines to confess all to her husband, and tells him that for two years she has cruelly deceived him, and that Dr. Lanoi suggested the deception. Foster forgives her. Dr. Lanoi meets with an accident. He loses his balance and falls over a balustrade, ending his life.

THE DOUBLE STANDARD (July 28).—Martin Ware, a young married man, is very decided in his standards of what his wife's behavior should be. Indulging himself in any and all the impulses of his will, he yet insists that his wife should be above suspicion, and when a very modern and progressive lady friend (a chum of his wife's) tells Helen that she should have the same privileges as her husband, he resents it as an outrageous blasphemy. This chum, Gertrude Steele, pronounces her doctrines at a little informal family dinner, at which she induces the young wife to smoke a cigarette when her husband smokes and to drink a cocktail when he drinks.

The suggestion, harmless and playful in itself, leads to an argument between Ware and the ladies and he flounces out of his home in anger. He goes to his club in a bad humor, and, in order to cheer him up, a friend there suggests that they go to a theater. They do, and while in the box they spy two attractive girls in an opposite box, start a flirtation, and after the show, carry the girls to a cafe, secure a private booth and proceed to enjoy a little Bohemian supper. In the meantime Gertrude, suspecting something of what Ware's program would be for the evening, induces the wife to call up the club to check up on her spouse. She learns that he has gone to the theater. Together, they follow him there, oversee the flirtation between the boxes, follow the party to the cafe and take an adjoining booth, after Gertrude has recognized two young men friends in the cafe and invited them to sup with them.

In adjoining booths, separated only by velvet curtains, the two parties revel. The wife for the first time learns the taste of wine and the license of Bohemia. She peeps through the curtains and sees her husband fondling his companion. She returns to the table to a forced enjoyment of her meal. But when her companion attempts to fondle her as she has seen her husband fondling another woman, her decency rebels, she struggles, screams and the husband in the next booth hears her and leaps into the room. Denunciations, accusations and explanations follow all around. The lesson of Equal Rights is brought home to the husband in a forceful manner, and, in an affecting tableau, the married pair embrace.

POWERS.

THE CAMERON SISTERS IN "THE MINIATURE CIRCUS" (July 1).—In "The Cameron Sisters," Dorothy and Madeline Cameron, "dainty European dancers," appear in their picturesque ballet classique, after which they dance the "Sari" waltz and the "Barcarole" to special music. "The Miniature Circus" features very young trained ponies and shows them going over the hurdles and doing "The Wizzy Whirl." Toward the last of the act "Maud," the unmanageable mule, is introduced. "Maud" does some laughable stunts and throws those who try to mount her with great force.

MARVELS OF THE INSECT WORLD (Prof. Ditmar's Educational—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—Silk moth are shown laying their eggs; the eggs are shown in the process of hatching; silk worms are seen feeding with their scissors-like jaws; the gleaming yellow cocoon of the worm is shown with the worm inside, a mummy-like object; then is depicted the emergence of the moth, her passage up the branch of a shrub to unfurl her wings; and the chrysalis she leaves behind. Male and female Hercules beetles are next shown, followed by a view of the rhinoceros beetle of Africa, the gigantic roach of Trinidad and the scorpion in the act of killing its prey.

CAPTAIN KENT'S SEALS (July 15).—A split reel showing a series of tricks performed by six intelligent seals. They juggle hats, play a band of music, cymbals, drum, etc., balance a ball on the tips of their noses and carry burning brands in their mouths. An amusing feature of the act is the way the seals applaud when one does an effective trick.

FRIENDS OF ANIMAL WIZARD (On Same Reel As Foregoing—July 15). A series of interesting animal life moving pictures taken by Dr. Ditmars in the studio at the Bronx Zoo. First, Dr. Ditmars and Mrs. Ditmars are seen focusing one of their intricate magnifying cameras and a magnified moving picture is taken. A scene showing the tenrac at home is followed by a closeup showing him eating his daily meal. Next is a picture of the bat family at home and the mother cleaning her wings. The strangest animal on earth, called the Australian echidna, is next shown.

L-KO.

EDUCATED ROOSTERS (July 4).—First is shown the "Barnyard Foxtrot," under Professor Kurtis' direction. Then "Bobby" is shown climbing the golden stairs. "Banty" then walks the slack wire with much grace. "Billikens" next shows his skill on the revolving hoop, while the wonderful mathematical roosters next come forward and answer all sorts of intricate mental arithmetic problems. Then is depicted the Ferris Wheel with the rooster engineer, followed by the grand finale, in which the entire rooster company takes part.

LIFE AND MOVING PICTURES (Two Parts—July 28).—The husband was suspicious when his new wife introduced an attractive looking stranger as her cousin. He went out to think it over and entered a moving picture theater. Wife and "cousin" also craved the movies, and entered a theater, but unfortunately it happened to be the same one where husband was. The drama unfolded on the screen was an exact reproduction of the trio's lives, and troubled the conscience of wife and "cousin" exceedingly.

It was also the spark which ignited the spark of suppressed doubt and suspicion in the husband's mind. He started working with his Krupps. "Cousin" started playing hide and seek, and wife started bawling. As usual, her tears softened him, and after husband had worked off his ill temper he forgave her. "Cousin" disappeared, and the only one who was inconvenienced was a nondescript gentleman who was thrown through the screen.

A DAUGHTER OF THE JUNGLES (Two Parts July 31).—At a ball given in honor of the engagement of Jack Packard and Betty Ross the former discovers that his fiancee is in love with Jim Crafton. The Colonel, realizing that there may be trouble, takes Packard aside and tells him of the trouble that Crafton's father had caused him during his hunting expedition in South Africa, finally causing the death of his wife. This takes us to South Africa, where many thrilling and dangerous adventures with wild animals are shown.

Packard finally decides to let Crafton have the girl he loves, and in a short time accompanies Colonel Price on a hunting expedition to South Africa, where Colonel Price's daughter, who had been kidnapped some fifteen years before by a negro servant, is running wild in the jungle. In this expedition Colonel Price is severely wounded by a lion jumping on him; another of the hunting party is nearly killed by a leopard leaping on his shoulders, and many other dangerous episodes are depicted. Colonel Price and his party return to America and Packard becomes Dan Cupid's victim and marries the Colonel's daughter.

THE VILLAGE SMITHY (July 1). The widow worries herself sick over the handsome village blacksmith. He loves her, too, but is awfully bashful. Tillie is the widow's maid-of-all-work. The latter is loved by Bud, the smithy's helper. Tillie is an awful tease and leads Bud a merry chase. The blacksmith, mighty sore at Tillie, admonishes her, and Tillie, sorry, schemes to utilize Clarence, a tramp, whom they catch stealing eats in their kitchen, to make the handsome smithy jealous and force a proposal from him.

Clarence is captured by the two women and forced to don the stylish clothes of the widow's departed husband. Clarence is then made to parade the widow up and down in front of the blacksmith shop. The smithy sees. He is filled with jealous rage. Tillie tells him that Clarence is a member of the British nobility paying attentions to the widow. The aroused smithy pleads for recognition. He gets the cold shoulder. The widow is tickeled at the success of her scheme and delights in prolonging the smithy's agony. At last the latter gets an opportunity to unscrew, unseen, the nut from the axle of the buggy. The merry widow and the scared Clarence come to grief.

When Clarence is sent to the blacksmith shop to have the buggy repaired the smithy sure takes advantage of the opportunity to give vent to his outraged feelings. Poor Clarence escapes, but only after an awful experience. Then the smithy awakens. He determines to take no more chances in securing the widow for his wife. His proposal is strenuous and nothing interferes. Bud and Tillie celebrate their own engagement soon afterwards.

WHEN HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (July 13).—Edith and Frank are little sweethearts. They meet on the way to school and Edith presents Frank with a flower for his buttonhole, while Frank gives Edith a nice, rosy-cheeked apple. On their way to school an auto with a lady, gentleman and a small boy stop and ask Frank where the schoolhouse is. Edith is attracted to the boy and forgets all about her sweetheart, Frank. In school she makes the acquaintance of Clarence and they become good friends, while poor Frank is left out in the cold.

One of the big boys in school carelessly drops a lighted cigarette in the cloakroom of the schoolhouse and a fire is started. When the teacher discovers it he tells the children to jump out of the windows. Clarence forgets all but himself, and throws Edith and the other children aside, intent on saving his own hide. In the meantime, Frank, who has been playing hookey, sees the fire in the distance and rushes to the schoolhouse, where, learning that Edith is still in the burning building he runs in despite the flame and smoke and rescues his old-time sweetheart. Needless to say, after that the original sweethearts make up, and Clarence is given the cold shoulder.

UNDER THE CRESCENT (Sixth and Final Episode, "The Crown of Death"—Two Parts—July 6).—Zohra has assumed a disguise and is employed in Prince Tousson's household. Zohra takes a secret poison from a vial she constantly carries and puts some of the liquid in a bowl. Later, when she has an opportunity, Zohra puts the slow poison in the prince's wine, from which he drinks deeply. Meanwhile the princess is arrested for murder of the khedive. The cabinet, which has just passed on her case, is informed immediately afterward that the heir to the Egyptian throne has been taken prisoner. Realizing that the enemy would lose no time in seizing an empty throne, the cabinet at once proclaims Prince Tousson king. The prince is discovered surrounded by his girls and officers. The poisoned wine has just began to take effect and he faints. He falls exhausted on his lounge as a messenger hands him the document announcing his accesion to the throne. The prince is overjoyed despite his weakness. Meanwhile, Clyde, who escaped from the Khedive's soldiers by a ruse, has reached the British camp and notified the officers of the threatened massacre of the Christians by the Turks. The British soldiers assemble their artillery and thunder away to help the Christians.

The Princess next is seen peering from her prison cell at the grave which several slaves are digging in the courtyard of the prison, in anticipation of her execution. She is led out soon afterward and a priest offers up a prayer for her. The guards then lead her out to the place where she is to be executed. Zohra watches the king as he passes in a stupor through the streets. Zohra's poison finally kills the newly-created monarch. Consternation reigns among the cabinet officers and it is decided to suppress the news of the death of his highness in order that they may control the country under Mohammedan rule. Meanwhile the Princess is led to the edge of the grave which has been dug for her. The soldiers raise their guns to fire when, at the last moment, the Princess takes off her veil and shows them who she is. The Cadi recognizes Prince Tousson's wife, now the country's queen. The Cadi tells the Princess that Prince Tousson is dead and that she is the queen.

The queen thereupon steps forward and addresses the people: "Soldiers and citizens: The king is dead. As your queen I command the release of the Christians!" The Cadi, hearing her confession, is overwhelmed. He quickly recovers and denounces the queen as a traitor and a Christian spy. Natives and soldiers rush up toward the queen, intending to kill her. Meanwhile, however, the English soldiers have reached the outskirts of the city and ride swiftly toward the palace with their artillery, Clyde dashing ahead on horseback. The soldiers open their machine guns, which mow the natives down mercilessly. Clyde fights his way through the native soliders at the head of his band, reaches the queen and helps her down the palace steps to safety over the bodies of the natives. The picture fades with the Princess resting in Clyde's arms.

THE FLIGHT OF A NIGHT BIRD (Two Parts—July 27).—Porter Chase thinks he loves Natalie Wall. Following the lead of others in their set, they reverse the order of day and night. Porter's only aim in life is to have a good time. Katherine Weaver is the sole support of her widowed mother and invalid sister. The Weavers were once "well off," but unfortunate investments reduced their position in the social scale. The Weavers get some legal papers from their old lawyer, Cyrus Holt, which compel Katherine to go to the city. Chase is still leading his "happy-go-lucky" life and one day gets a call from his lawyer, Cyrus Holt, to come down to look over some papers. The old lawyer is a family friend and takes Porter to task for his idleness, and in a fatherly way tells him he should do something else besides trying to spend the ample fortune that he has. While they are talking, Katherine's card is brought in, and the old man tells Porter that this girl is a living example of how fleeting riches are. Porter, angered, tells the lawyer that he will take the first job offered him and leaves. Porter receives a wire from Natalie telling him to meet her at a certain train. The train is a little late, and while he is waiting he sees the girl, Katherine, who was in the lawyer's office, running to catch her train. She accidentally drops her purse, and, unaware of her loss, catches her train just in time. Porter sees the purse, and, running after her, hops the train and restores the purse to her. He is unable, however, to get off, as the train is going too fast, so he accompanies the girl to her home. She shows him where she works, and he, remembering his promise to the old lawyer, applies and gets a job at the same place.

Natalie meanwhile arrives, and, not finding Porter, goes off in a huff. Porter's Jap valet and chauffeur wait in vain and finally leave. The papers are full of the mysterious disappearance of a rich young millionaire. Porter is made the butt of the rough jokes of his fellow-workers, but one day one of them goes too far and Porter thrashes him. Later the two become friends and the man tells Porter of a place where he can get board in a nice home. He is taken to the Weaver homestead, where he meets the mother and invalid sister, and makes arrangements to stay there. Happy days follow, and finally Porter's Jap valet becomes anxious for his master and goes to find him. He is seen snooping about the mill, is arrested as a Japanese spy and thrown in jail. He confesses that he is looking for his master, who he knows is working at the mill. Porter has gained the confidence of the invalid sister and she daily encourages him in his suit for her lovely sister. It is hard for him to understand the girl, for she thinks more of the giver of small attentions than she does of the attentions, and he has been accustomed to women who think only of what they are getting out of him. Aided and encouraged by the invalid sister, he finally gains the love of the girl, and in the midst of their happiness the old family lawyer arrives and discovers the deception Porter has been practising. There is a happy ending and the little invalid is in a good way to be able to some day be cured, as she has been the means of "checking the flight of a night bird" and showing him the way to a happy nest.

LAEMMLE.

HERITAGE (Four Parts—July 29).—Kate is born in the slums. Her mother, a woman of real intelligence, dies the same day and the infant is taken over by a neighbor, Mrs. McMahon, who lives just across the hall. Kate at the age of ten is puny, illiterate, and wise only in the manner of her kind. Her inebriate father loses his position, and Kate is sent out to work, not only for herself, but for her father. Eight years elapse, and Kate is still a worker in the seething hive of industry. Mrs. McMahon continues her friend, and "Big Bill" McMahon, Mrs. McMahon's stalwart son, is friend, sweetheart and protector.

The Melton family consists of Mrs. Melton, Guy, her son, and Marion, her daughter. The Meltons are rich, and stand high in society. The daughter comes upon a book the theme of which concerns the question of heredity. Marion, however, has original ideas on the subject, though her mother and brother do not agree with her. An accident brings Guy in contact with Bill McMahon. Accompanying Guy to the McMahon home, Marion comes in contact with Kate. Instantly Marion decides to test her theory. She cultivates Kate's friendship and later succeeds in coaxing Kate to make her home in the Melton mansion. Months roll by. Stimulated by Marion, Kate has acquired both knowledge and culture. Moreover, Guy is in love with her. Guy proposes and Kate accepts him, and their marriage speedily follows.

For a time all goes well with Kate. Then she begins to resent the neglect of Guy. Guy tells her that soon she will become accustomed to the ways of society, but Kate declares that she neither cares for the ways of society, nor has any intention of acquiring them. The interview leads to a scene, in which Kate's temper gets the better of her, and she reverts to the ways of Hell's Kitchen, where she was born, assaults Guy, and flies to the protection of the McMahons. "Big Bill," enraged, immediately calls upon Guy Melton. In the interview which follows, Bill tells Guy a few facts, and winds up by advising that worthy to seek Kate, and "play the game on the level." Guy follows Bill's advice, and, after an argument with Kate, succeeds in winning her back to the home she had renounced.

PARENTAL LOVE (Aug. 1).—Richard Grave has been sentenced for forgery and given a five-year term. This will leave his wife and little baby to face the world alone. He writes his wife telling of his disgrace and begs her not to let the child ever know of her father's shame. His wife decides that the disgrace is more than she can bear and tells him that she will get a divorce. Eight years pass and Gretchen has married a wealthy man who gladly provides for her and the child and is fondly attached to his baby. She and her husband take a happy leave from the child to attend the theater, leaving the child and nurse alone.

Richard Grave has been released from prison and is kicked about from "pillar to post." Hungry, dirty and discouraged, he is wandering about and passes the house where Gretchen lives just in time to see her and her husband enter the auto. He sees they are wealthy and decides to enter the house and make a haul. Grave gets into the house and is prowling around when his attention is arrested by a noise on the stairs. He looks up to find the child, who has missed its toy dog and come in search of it, gazing down at him. He starts back and the child tells him not to be afraid and comes down to meet him. Grave does not recognize the child as his own and they are enjoying each other's society when Grave notices a picture of his wife. "That's my mamma," declares the child.

Grave hugs the child close just as Gretchen and her husband arrive. Grave is captured and about to be handed over to the law when the child's entreaties save him. Gretchen, in terror, recognizes her first husband, but he points to the child and makes her promise to be silent. He silently slips out of the window, leaving the child in the care of its foster father.

BIG U.

MEIN FRIENDT SCHNEIDER (July 31).—To all the world, David Hoffman, pawnbroker and loan shark, is a heartless, grasping Shylock. Secretly, he is "Schneider," a wealthy, big-hearted man who is devoting his life and his money to the relief of the friendless and needy. To all who appeals to Hoffman he turns a deaf ear and demands the uttermost cent. However, the deserving ones are referred to "Mein Friendt Schneider," and "Schneider" always aids them. Ruth, his daughter, spends the day with him at the pawnshop and aids him in his work. Jim Rodgers is a lawyer who knows Hoffman and his methods and has sworn to "get" him, but so far Hoffman has been too clever for him. Frank, Jim's son, loves Ruth and his love is returned, but when the father learns who she is he declares that Frank shall never marry the daughter of such an evil person. Undecided what to do, he tells Ruth. She plans to fix things, and Frank aids her. He induces his father to hide behind some curtains in the back room of the pawn shop in hopes of getting some evidence against Hoffman. He witnesses everything that follows. A little waif comes in with flowers to sell. Hoffman will not buy, but tells her to ask his "Friendt Schneider." He opens the door of the back room and calls, "Schneider, do you wand to buy some flowers?" pretends to get his answer and says, "All righdt." He goes back and gives the child a dollar. He does the same thing with an old woman who wants to pawn a cheap trinket.

As Jim realizes how he has been fooled he stands in stupefaction. Recovering, he appears before the surprised Hoffman and explains everything. They come to an understanding, sit down, and, as they light a couple of David's cigars, David explains his motives. He tells Jim of the time the light of his life went out as he knelt by the bedside of his wife, who had given her life to bring a baby girl into the world. How later he sat trying to think of a worthy memorial to her and dismissed the idea of a costly monument and decided that the joy of needy hearts made happy by his money and his love would be the sweetest incense to her spirit. At the end of the story Jim again grips his hand and tells him that he will be honored if Ruth will consent to marry his son.

Later, as usual, Ruth and her father slip out the back way and hurry to their beautiful home in the country. As they open the gate, a bunch of kiddies whom he is caring for, playing under the trees, see him. There's a wild rush and he is nearly overwhelmed with their loving greetings. Later, Frank calls on Ruth for the first time at her home. While they are engrossed in their happiness, the nurse tucks the kiddies into bed and blows out the light. She is no sooner gone, however, than they slip quietly out. As David sits in lonely reverie by the fire, they rush in and surround him, begging for their bedtime story. As they go back to bed he sits musing happily.

NESTOR.

THE TALE OF HIS PANTS (July 29).—Jerry Bunk, having been converted at a religious meeting in the city, decides that in taking up the trail of a new life he will leave the bright lights and all they signify behind. He accordingly discards his jewels and flashy clothes and buys a ticket to the smallest town he can locate, where he is welcomed with open arms by the townspeople, who have gathered to meet the train. He is at once invited to join the church, and, being struck by the beauty of Mary, the choir organist, he gladly accepts. Later he becomes a member of the choir. He tries to flirt with Mary, but is prevented by Jack, Mary's country sweetheart, and 'Liza Jane, an insistent old maid, who is determined to win the newcomer. Jerry attends a taffy pull in the church basement and, disappointed in his efforts to win Mary's favor, he goes off into a corner and sulks. Inadvertently he sits upon a lot of taffy left by Mary upon a chair, and in attempting to remove it before anybody shall know of his predicament he rips his trousers badly. He sneaks into the pastor's study in an effort to find a needle and thread to mend them.

A tramp calls at the parsonage and asks for some old clothes. 'Liza Jane takes pity on him and goes on a quiet search for something to give him. Jerry, in the pastor's study, has just removed his outer clothes when he hears 'Liza coming and hastily hides behind a handy screen. Entering the study, 'Liza finds Jerry's clothes and, thinking them worn out, gives them to the tramp and leaves. Jerry is in a terrible fix, for he cannot let her know of his predicament. Jerry puts on one of the minister's suits and goes to the choir loft, where the choir have adjorned for practice. The minister has left the money received for the candy in the pocket of his trousers he left in his study. He finds them missing and tells all they have been stolen. 'Liza confesses that she gave a suit she found there to the tramp.

All set out in pursuit of the tramp except Jerry, who by this time has found the roll of money in the trousers pocket and is at a loss as to how to get rid of it. The tramp is captured, but they find that the trousers he has on are not the ministers after all. Jerry meanwhile has returned the minister's clothes to their proper place and donned a long cloak belonging to one of the ladies. Hearing the crowd returning, he again hides behind the screen. The minister finds his clothes in their proper place and is mystified. All leave except 'Liza Jane. Jerry attracts her attention and lets her know that the trousers recovered from the tramp are his. Delighted at the opening thus presented, 'Liza Jane gets the needle and thread and mends Jerry's trousers.

THE RISE AND FALL OF OFFICER 13 (July 30).—Billie and Jack are lovers, but so far their journey on love's highway has found only the rough spots. Jack is a reporter and in his leisure follows his detective bent in assisting the capture of criminals. Lee has been on the force on probation for some time, but at last he gets an assignment. He immediately decides to call on the cook and exhibit his new "feathers." The cook tells him that he cannot come into the kitchen in his uniform coat and makes him leave it outside. Jack, coming along, sees the coat and resolves to use it for a while. He puts it on and later sees a thief trying to rob a girl. He rushes to her and succeeds in capturing the thief, but Billie, the girl, does not recognize him in his disguise and only sees the badge number 13. She reports to her father how Officer 13 has saved her from being robbed.

Jack returns the coat where he found it and Lee, coming out, never knew it was gone. He puts it on, and on returning to the office is overwhelmed with praise and presented with a medal. The next day he returns to the cook's, and leaving his coat outside, composes himself for a pleasant visit. Two crooks happen along, and, seeing the coat, one of them dons it and, breaking into a house, proceeds to plunder it. The house is Billie's home. She discovers the thief. She calls for help and struggles with the burglar. In the melee she snatches off the badge and the burglar escapes. He returns the officer's coat and puts his own on. Jack happens to be near the house and sees the burglar escape with his plunder and join his confederate. He follows them and, just as they are separating their loot, captures them and takes them to the station. Billie tells her father she has been robbed by Officer 13 and that she has the badge to show for it. Lee has left his friend, the cook, and, not noticing the loss of his badge, returns to the station. He is accused of the burglary and his missing badge is pointed out. Billie comes in with the badge and Lee is about to be given the extreme penalty when Jack brings in his prisoners, telling them of his capture. Billie's father is unable to object to such a bright young man and gives his blessing to the children.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN (July 20).—Marion has two suitors—one is a sport and the other a policeman. In the opening scene the policeman meets Marion in the park. They sit down on a bench and he urges her to marry him. After Marion has reached home the sport calls and, realizing that he has a dangerous rival in the policeman, hastens to propose to Marion, telling her that if she will marry him she will be able to lead a life of luxury and ease. The policeman is evidently a favorite with Marion's mother, but the girl now has had her head turned with the prospect of enjoying wealth by marrying the sport, and shows indifference toward the policeman. Her mother tries to smooth things over with the policeman and insists that he sit down and take a meal with her. Marion falls asleep and dreams of her wedding with the sport. The visualization of her dreams is thrown on the screen and we see her being pelted with flowers by a joyous assemblage of wedding guests as the happy couple are leaving the church to start on their honeymoon. Next we see them established in a fully furnished apartment. Marion seems to be provided with everything that her heart could wish for. A change, however, comes over her dream, for after that we see the sport following his real profession at a gambling house, where he is caught cheating at cards and is ignominiously ejected.

He goes home and enters in an angry mood. When Marion starts to cry, he brutally throws her aside, takes a key from her and goes to the dresser, where he appropriates her jewelry. Then he lights a cigar and presumably goes back to the gambling house, after having obtained more funds from the sale of the jewels. At all events we next find him down and out, as he and Marion are living in poverty. Soon afterwards the sport knocks a passer-by senseless and robs him. A boy gives the alarm, but the sport eludes the police, who are in close pursuit, and, entering his own house, he tells Marion to conceal the money he has stolen, and then rushes up to the attic to conceal himself. The policeman, Marion's former suitor, enters, and recognizes her. At this point the mother awakens Marion, who is greatly relieved that she has merely had a horrible dream, and realizes "what might have been" her fate had she married the sport. The mother, deeming this to be the psychological moment to further the interests of the policeman, brings him into the parlor, and Marion falls into his arms.

THE NEW JITNEY IN TOWN (July 27).—King Baggot, impersonating Drake, a salesman in a department store, gives up his position to start a jitney-bus, and the manager instructs the floorwalker to keep him away from the building. He paints one side of his jitney, and takes the floorwalker and Jane, one of the saleswomen, to a street corner near the store, telling Jane that he will call for her that evening. King picks up his first customer, a young woman whose car has broken down, and Jane, who sees this, becomes jealous. The young woman enters the store, and the floorwalker, acting on orders from the manager, urges King to move on with his jitney-bus. In driving to the street corner King changes the position of the car so that when the young woman comes back and sees the unpainted side she tells him that it isn't the same car he brought her in, but he proves to her that it is merely an optical illusion, as she got in on the other side. Unfortunately the car breaks down later on and his first customer gets out and leaves him in the lurch.

As King doesn't turn up at closing time Jane starts for home escorted by the floorwalker. Meanwhile King is lying on the ground trying to fix his car, which starts up unexpectedly and goes racing up the road. King picks up his tools and rushes after it. Presently he meets Jane and the floorwalker, and takes Jane into the jitney. King takes advantage of the opportunity and proposes marriage, and he and Jane hunt up a parson. After they have been married they are unable to pay the customary fee and suggest to the parson that they will leave him the dilapidated jitney as security. As the minister declines the offer they ride off, and before long the car breaks down, and, completely disgusted, they leave it smoking in an open field and make their escape. The auto apparently objects to this, and starts up of its own accord to scoot up the road, while Jane and King hide behind a tree for fear they will have to reclaim it. Then they embrace fondly in their delight at being rid of their white elephant -the ill-fated jitney.

THE HUNCHBACK'S ROMANCE (Two Parts —July 30). All day long the hunchback toils in the murky atmosphere of Blum's overcrowded sweatshop. His protege and fellow worker, Rose, also labors for ten hours each day beside him. There comes a day when Louis, the boss' son, a handsome young lad in charge of the shop, sees Rose. Young Louis sends a note fixing an appointment for that evening. Rose, avoiding the hunchback's sharp eyes, thrusts the letter into her shabby reticule and busies herself in her work. If the hunchback is afflicted in his physical appearance he has compensating advantages, and purloins the note during a moment of preoccupation on Rose's part. He reads the note and stealthily replaces it. Now the hunchback argues that it is not always with good intention that an employer will make an appointment with one of his slaves, and he forms a plan to watch the girl, who is dearer to him than life itself. The lovers meet and Louis presses Rose to announce their engagement the following Sunday. The hunchback has followed them with a guilty, beating heart. Louis's words of persuasion and endearment chill the hunchback and make him tremble. He races home to await the girl's return, determined to question and encourage her in the worthy love which Louis wishes to bestow. Rose returns to find the hunchback trembling with agitation. He answers her questions with difficulty. He makes an effort, and pours out an impassioned declaration of his own pent-up love for her.

Rose is at first stunned by the words she hears. She believes her old friend has suddenly become demented. She pleads with him, tries to calm him, but in vain, and her own composure breaks down. Compassionately, the hunchback watches the sobbing girl, and once more he feels himself her protector, and he begs of her to be seated so that he may tell her a little story. The story is soon told, and we are taken back to the days of Alexander III, Czar of all the Russias, during the time when a mere accusation was sufficient to have a man shot as a nihilist, without trial. Rose's father then was head of an organization favoring democracy and free speech. The hunchback, a young man, was his trusted lieutenant. A traitor in their own organization is induced by the secret service to betray his fellows, and Rose's father is shot, and the organization scattered in all directions. Her mother dies of a broken heart within a month after confiding her babe, little Rose, to the care of the hunchback, her only remaining friend. During her last moments she exacts an oath from the cripple that he will love and care for her babe. For eighteen years the hunchback has fought an uphill fight against the world, and Rose now learns for the first time the reason for his devotion to her.

The next day a fire breaks out in the tenement building where the pair are employed. The hunchback, beside himself, seizes Rose as if she were no heavier than a cork and, more like a gorilla than a man, bears her to safety. When Rose opens her eyes she asks one question: "Where is Louis?" All look in amazement, while her eyes search those of the hunchback. As in a dream he hears the girl's pleading, "Save him! I love him!" and rushes off into the now tottering building. Louis is saved —at what cost only the hunchback can tell. Flames do not preserve evidence. Rose asks the hunchback's permission to marry Louis, to which he finally acquiesces.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 5—Released week of July 19 Two Parts). -Blake holds the knife over Kitty's head. Roleau turns on the man, sending the knife flying. Sachio and his men rush into the room. Sachio grabs Roleau and his friends tackle Blake. Blake seizes the coin and makes his getaway. Kitty seeing Blake rush from the room, tries to free Roleau from the hold of Sachio and his men, so they can follow Blake, but Sachio refuses to release Roleau, and Kitty whispers to Roleau to follow her to the den of the desert outlaws. Sneaking out the window Kitty tries to trace Blake, and failing, hurries to the outlaw's den, hoping for assistance from the leader. Blake succeeds in reaching his home. His pals arise to greet him. Throwing the coin he has stolen on the table to them he sinks into a chair.

Kitty, remembering the way the outlaw had taken her when they held her for ransom sometime before, hurries along the same path. The den in sight, Kitty begins to feel afraid. She is about to turn back and comes face to face with an evil-looking man, one she has never seen before, and who, taking her in his arms, carries her to the den. Arriving they are greeted by all the outlaws, excepting the leader, who treats her none too kindly. Kitty becomes frightened when the leader, who, at their first meeting, had assured her that if she ever needed a friend to call upon him, does not appear. In the meantime, Roleau is held by Sachio and his men, who, missing the coin, search Roleau and, not finding it in his possession, decide Kitty has it. They hope that Kitty will return to him. Sachio becomes worried over the delay of the man he sent to Frederick's for the other half of the coin. Frederick starts to follow Sachio's man by auto to the lodge.

Kitty is about to give up when she sees her former captor and later friend, the Chief of the Outlaws. The chief is surprised to see Kitty and beats two of the men who try to handle her roughly. Kitty tells him why she is there and the help she wants of him, namely, a safe conduct across the desert to Gretzhoffen. This he promises, and, ordering his men to mount their horses and bring his own and one for Kitty, they start out. About this time, Sachio's man reached the lodge, with Frederick close upon his heels. Sachio reproves him for being late and not getting the coin. On the outside of the lodge, Frederick discovers the window used by Kitty, and, looking in, is surprised to see his old accomplice, Roleau. In a fight that ensues between Roleau and Sachio's man, Roleau breaks his bonds and escapes through the front door. Frederick, knowing Sachio has not the coin, follows Roleau in Sachio's car, across the desert of Gretzhoffen. Kitty, with the help of the leader of the outlaws, reaches Gretzhoffen and gets upon the track of Blake. Gaining an entrance to his lair, Kitty and the outlaw leader are surprised at the number of apaches in this place. One of the members of the gang hurries in and tells of a good haul that can be made if they hurry. All leave with the exception of Blake and one man. Kitty and the leader look about for a means of entering the room. Kitty falls against the stone wall, and a portion of it moves Kitty pushes her weight against it and it gives enough for them to enter. Her helper gets Blake under his control and Kitty hits the other fellow on the head with an emtpy bottle, knocking him unconscious.

Meantime, Roleau, with Frederick on the back of his car, succeeds in locating the dive. Frederick, unseen by Roleau, enters the place through a back way, the same one Kitty used, and, looking into the secret passage, sees her get the coin from the table and come toward him. Frederick ducks back out of her sight and closes the secret door, just as Roleau makes an entrance through the door by which the apaches left. Seeing Blake in the hands of the outlaw leader, he asks for Kitty and the leader, not knowing who he is, refuses to tell him. If he had, Roleau would have been in time to save Kitty, but as she comes through the secret passage and locks the door behind her, she turns, coming upon Frederick. As she starts to open the panel and call the outlaw leader to her rescue, Frederick picks her up and runs through the passage. In the other room of the dive, some of Blake's men return and a good fight ensues, wherein Roleau is almost knocked out. In the passageway, Frederick tries to take the coin from Kitty, but cannot, and, hearing the fight in the other room, he hurries her out of the place, hoping to get the coin when they are both in safer surroundings. Coming to the end of the passage, Frederick is about to put Kitty up through the sewer entrance when he comes face to face with the remaining apaches, coming home with a haul. He starts to go the other way and is met by the apaches who had attacked Roleau in the interior. Surrounded on all sides, he looks at Kitty and smiles as the episode ends.

THE NEWER WAY (Two Parts July 26).—John Bates, a farmer of the old school, has antique ideas and strenuously objects to the introduction of modern methods. His farm is mortgaged and George Ross, to whom Bates is indebted, is about to foreclose. Bates comes to Ross, who is an inventor, and begs an extension of the mortgage. Ross, however, considers Bates shiftlessness and refuses to grant him time. Bates denies the charge of shiftlessness and declares to Ross that were he (Ross) in Bates' position he would appear to be shiftless, too.

"I would, would I," says Ross.

Then and there an agreement is made that Ross will take over the management of the Bates farm for one year. The moment Ross takes charge he sets enthusiastically about the work of installing every conceivable kind of electrical device. At the end of the allotted year a wonder has been worked. The labor-saving devices of Ross' invention have proved to be money saving devices as well. The farm has been transformed and its value increased. During the experimental year Ross has done much wandering through the fields and mountains. He chanced to meet a little mountain girl, Betty by name, and between the two has sprung up a strong and binding friendship.

The year ended, Ross goes as usual to the place where he and Betty were accustomed to meet. She is nowhere to be found. Ross at once starts in the direction from which Betty often had come, in search of her. Up in the mountains, Ross finds Betty living alone with her mother. About the mother there is something strangely familiar. Ross looks, then looks again. The mother of this little mountain girl is none other than his long lost wife, as estrangement has occurred years before and from that day to this Ross never had been able to find his wife. There is great rejoicing in this mountain cabin. Husband and wife reunited in the happiness that rightfully is theirs, agree to live as before the quarrel.

THE DECEPTION (July 28).—Violet Day is betrothed to a man named Black. Just before the day set for the wedding, Violet learns that the man she loves is married. She is prostrated by the shock. Dr. King, her physician, advises her to spend several months in the mountains that her recovery may be assured. As health returns to Violet in the mountains, love gradually enters her heart again. This time the object of her affections is Tom Sexton, a sturdy young mountaineer, who thinks Violet a mountain girl. She thinks him a mountain man. In reality both are children of the city, and, unknown to each other, both are living in the mountains at the suggestion of Dr. King. After a hard year in the city, Dr. King comes to the mountains for a vacation. He and Tom stumble upon each other. Tom implores the physician not to reveal to Violet the fact that Tom is not mountain born. Later Dr. King meets Violet. She implores him not to reveal to Tom the fact that she is from the city. Dr. King laughs. The secrets of the lovers are safe with him, for he realizes that "where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise."

AFTER THE STORM (July 30).—Rev. Jerold Roper and his baby escapes from a wreck at sea on a trail raft. Crazed by want of food and water, the minister is about to throw himself into the sea. His baby he has placed in a strong bound box. A great wave washes over the raft; the box and the baby are swept away. Weakened as he is, Roper can take no step to save his child. He falls unconscious on the raft. The box floats safely to shore. It is washed on the beach near a point where Jacques and Meg Fortell are gathering wreckage which the waves have strewn on the sands. The baby appeals to Meg's motherly instinct. Much to Jacques' disgust, she insists on keeping the infant girl. Rev. Roper at length is rescued by a passing vessel.

Twenty years elapse. The minister and the Fortells are living in the same city. Roper is pastor of a church in the slums where he administers to the poor in an effort to forget his long lost daughter. Meg and Jacques are at the head of a den of thieves. Meg, however despite her own evil ways, has managed to protect her adopted daughter, Jane, from living a life of crime. Jane goes often to Roper's church where she finds a strange tie between herself and the minister. Returning one night from church Jane passes Lloyd Perry, an evil youth, who follows her. His pursuit of Jane leads him to the thieves' den. He is attacked by Jacques. With a revolver he cowers Jacques and Meg. Then a sinister plan enters his brain. He demands as his price of silence that Jacques and Meg sacrifice Jane. They agree. They help Lloyd carry the girl to his room. Jane's cries for help are heard by Rev. Roper, who chances to live in the same apartment. The minister flies to the rescue, fights a stubborn battle hand to hand with Jacques, Meg and Perry. He rescues Jane and takes her to his church. The crime-stained trio follows him and they are awed at what they see. There at the altar stand Jane and Roper their arms interlocked in embrace. By a strange birthmark on her arm, Jane's identity is discovered.

BEAUTY.

BETTY'S FIRST SPONGE CAKE (July 27).—Bob, a farmer boy, has a voracious appetite. He marries Betty, a girl from the city. Betty's spirit is willing but her understanding is weak when it comes to housework and cooking. As a consequence, the stomachs of Bob and his hired man suffer greatly. Bob and the hired man finally are driven to eating raw turnips, which Betty discovers. Promptly she decides that she must take cooking lessons. Aunt Samanthy laughs, but lets the loung bride have her way. Bob and the hired man do their own cooking for a while. They begin to take on some of the weight they have lost, but Bob grows lonesome. He decides that Betty must come home.

At cooking school, Betty has learned that nut cake is one with nuts in it, so when the minister comes for lunch and professes a liking for sponge cake, it is a logical deduction a sponge cake is a cake with sponges in it. Betty hurries to the store and buys enough sponges for a good big cake. The cake is baked and the parson eats a piece. Then another, and another, as Betty and Bob hospitably urge him on. He drinks a glass of water. Woe is his! The sponges in his inner man rapidly begin to swell until the poor parson has taken on the appearance of a toy balloon. A doctor rushes to the scene. The application of a stomach pump brings the parson back to normal size, but not until some pious souls of his congregation have seen Betty and Bob administering whiskey to their pastor. The righteous ones are shocked. Then explanations follow and Betty, chagrined but wiser, seeks the shelter of her husband's arms.

KAY-BEE.

THE PLAY OF THE SEASON (Two Parts—July 23).—John Gordon, a New England village storekeeper, holds a mortgage against Caleb Owens, a miserly farmer., Gordon's shiftless son Jack, is in love with Mary Owens, Caleb's daughter. She detests him, and Jack gets his father to use the mortgage as a club to force Mary to marry him. Gordon tells Caleb that he will not extend the mortgage unless the two become engaged, and Mary is forced by her people to consent to the engagement. Later a one-night stand troupe comes to the village to play "East Lynne" at the town hall. While delivering eggs to the village hotel, Mary meets David Aubrey, the handsome leading man of the troupe. Aubrey, interested in Mary, cultivates her acquaintance and escorts her back to the farm, inviting her to see the show that night. On the road back to the farm they meet Mary's jealous fiance, Jack, with a rig, but Mary declines his invitation to ride to the farm, preferring to walk with Aubrey. Jack stops at the farm and warns Caleb that his daughter is flirting with "an actor," and Caleb severely reprimands Mary.

Mary asks permission to return to town that evening to attend the show, but permission is refused. Pretending to retire early, she slips out of her bedroom and goes anyway. Her chum, Ruth, persuades Mary to spend the night with her and return to the farm in the morning. When Mary returns in the morning she finds her parents angrily awaiting her. They are unjustly suspicious of her and disbelieve her statement that she spent the night with Ruth. In the heat of anger Caleb disowns Mary and she returns to town, intending to make her way to the city and secure work. Packing up for the next jump, Aubrey accidentally overhears Mary sobbing as she tells the story to her chum, and, taking pity upon her and realizing that he, himself, is indirectly responsible for her plight, goes to the manager and asks him to give Mary employment and take her with the troupe. The manager refuses until Aubrey makes a secret arrangement with him to take Mary's salary and expenses out of his (Aubrey's) salary.

Aubrey marries Mary and takes her to the city. They start work on a play, the action of which centers around Mary's eventful life. Gordon tells Caleb he is going to foreclose the mortgage. Caleb, not having enough money to meet it, decides to take a gambling flier in stocks. He is fleeced out of his money by bucket-shop harpers and he and his wife leave for the city to investigate, and there Caleb finds the sharpers gone and his money lost for good. In the meantime, Aubrey's play has been accepted and is now produced with himself in the leading role. Caleb and his wife attend the same theater and are astounded to find their own sitting-room portrayed on the stage and see themselves caricatured and held up to ridicule by the lines of the play. Still further embittered against Aubrey and Mary, Caleb returns to the farm. Mary writes her mother and learns that the farm is to be sold at auction at an early date. She persuades Aubrey to send down an agent and buy the farm. Several days elapse and as Caleb and his wife are packing up to leave the farm they receive the free and clear deed from Aubrey. Ashamed of the past, and wishing to make amends, Caleb writes to Aubrey and invites him and Mary to visit the farm.

THE PHANTOM EXTRA (Two Parts—July 28). John Zeldon, the newly elected State senator and pledged to fight for the Miners' Bill, requiring the installation of new safety devices in the coal mines, in his speech to the miners the night before his departure, assures them that they can count on him to the last ditch. On his arrival in the capitol he is taken up by Mr. Whalen, the brains of the lobby and secretly its chief, who flatters John and invites him out with a brilliant set of men and women who make a lion of him in order to gain his vote against the proposed bill.

John's head is turned by their flattery and when Hazel Flemming, his fiancee and star reporter on his home paper, comes to the capitol for an interview with John, she is amazed to find him wavering and realizes the fight is lost unless she can make him realize the mistake he is making. To do this she has a phantom extra printed telling in thrilling headlines of a horrible accident in the coal mines, wherein 200 miners have lost their lives. She hires a newsboy to throw this under the Senator's door and when John reads of the horrible accident he is awakened to the realization that he has been about to betray those who trusted him and when the vote is cast he surprised Whalen and his coterie by voting "Aye." When he returns to his office, Hazel goes to him and confesses she had the phantom extra printed in order to gain his vote for the bill. John is at first greatly angered at the thought that he has been outwitted by a girl, but as his anger passes away his better nature wins.

MAJESTIC.

THE MYSTIC JEWEL (Two Parts—July 18). —The brothers, John and Charles Burton, have a quarrel over a stenographer, to whom Charles makes advances, not knowing that his brother and the stenographer are engaged. Charles terminates the quarrel by leaving the office. Later we find John visiting Charles at his bachelor apartments to explain to him that he and the stenographer are to be married. Charles is very much surprised and makes known to John that he had no intention of insulting the girl and did not know that John was interested in her. They fix up their differences and drink a toast to John's future wife. The last we see of the brothers they are drinking together.

The next morning they are discovered by the butler. Charles has been murdered and John is unconscious. The room is in a disordered condition. The butler calls the police and the family physician. The police suspect John of the murder and, finding a picture of the stenographer with a knife through it, come to the conclusion that the brothers quarreled over her. They send for her and question John and her and arrest them both, against the advice of the family physician. The police leave with their prisoners, leaving the physician to make his report to the coroner.

The physician searches the room and discovers in a secret drawer an Oriental jewel, which brings back the memory of his younger days in India, where he remembers having once seen a native render another unconscious by the use of a poisoned blow-pipe. He recognizes the odor which he has discovered in the room. He decides that the crime was committed by an outside party in search of the jewel, which he has discovered. He consults with his friend, the editor of the newspaper, who publishes in scare headlines the fact that the doctor has in his possession this wonderful jewel. The doctor, in the meantime, prepares his trap for the suspected criminal, whom he thinks will endeavor to regain possession of the jewel.

Later we find a young Oriental woman coming to the doctor's office and trying to overcome him with the poisonous fumes of the blow-pipe. The doctor, prepared in advance, overpowers her and obtains from her the story of the loss of the jewel, which Charles had stolen from her years before, and she, in trying to obtain it the night before, entered his apartments, and after searching through the drawers of the desks in the room, murdered him in the heat of passion. After hearing her story the doctor conducts her to the police station, where John and the stenographer have been undergoing the third degree. Here the Oriental woman, after her confession to the police judge, poisons herself with a needle and the prisoners are released.

THE RUNAWAYS (July 20).—The bad boy breaks a window with his baseball, and fearing a whipping, runs away from home. After a weary tramp he seeks shelter in a hayloft of a barn. This barn belongs to a minister, whose little son, Georgie, cherishes affection for the dimpled ward, Carmen. It being Sunday morning, Georgie and Carmen return from church to the minister's house, accompanied by other children. Childlike, they begin romping in a game, but the minister admonishes them against thus breaking the Sabbath.

His boy, Georgie, suggests playing church. When the childish services are begun, this awakens the bad boy in the loft, who tumbles down out of the hay in the midst of the surprised congregation. Georgie makes an effort to bring the bad boy to salvation, but the youngster persists in his wickedness. The bad boy persuades the smitten Carmen to run away with him. Georgie overhears the plan and follows. The runaways encounter an unexpected and hair-raising experience when they start for a ride down grade on a handcar, and find themselvs tearing wildly toward an oprushing express train. Little Georgie proves the hero by summoning the aid of the train dispatcher, who goes in mad pursuit of the runaways on a motor speeder along a parallel track. He switches the handcar out of the path of destruction a fraction of a minute before the express thunders by. Repentant, the bay boy goes home to willingly submit to a much-deserved licking.

THE LITTLE CATAMOUNT (July 24).—Hattie, a moonshiner's daughter, plays with her weird dog, Fanny, and rules her father with a rod of iron. To their mountain cabin comes Neighbor Dawson, another moonshiner, and arranges with Hattie's father to marry her. This does not agree with Hattie's ideas at all. She pummels them both vigorously and flees to her favorite mountain walk. There she meets Pete, another suitor, who in spite of her lively resistance, seizes and kisses her. Her cries are heard by Wallace, a stranger from the city, who has come to the mountains to fish. He throws Pete in the stream. That worthy clambers out and hurries to father. When Hattie reaches home, Pete is telling about her talking to the city stranger.

The acquaintance begun with the stranger ripens into love, as the two meet often on pretext of teaching writing to Hattie. Pete, inflamed with jealousy tells Dawson that Wallace is a revenue officer, and one evening, while Wallace is on his way to meet Hattie at the picturesque rendezvous half a mile away, they shoot him. He is picked up by a pasing mountaineer, and cared for in the latter's cabin for a week before he is able to return to Hattie. Meantime, Hattie, thinking Wallace has forgotten her, is in the depths of despair and resolves on suicide. She bids good-bye to Fanny and starts for the top of a great cliff to throw herself off. Meantime, her farewell note to her father is found by Wallace, and an exciting pursuit follows. All ends happily, with Pete receiving his deserts, and "the little catamount" happy in the arms of her lover.

RELIANCE.

THE LIE (July 19).—David, a fisherman, is happily married to Joan. His partner, Galeb, is envious of David and covets Joan. David and Galeb leave for a fishing cruise and Joan prepares for the great event which is her one great secret. That night a storm arises suddenly and after a long night of watching and praying, Joan sees several fishermen bringing a body toward her house. She rushes to meet them and discovers that it is Galeb. When Galeb becomes conscious, he tells her that everybody has been lost at sea and that he was the only one saved. After the little stranger arrives, Galeb pleads with Joan to become his wife. She refuses, but finally consents to marry him, for the sake of her child's future, provided David does not return within a year.

Three years later, Galeb and Joan are married. Galeb is seated near the window reading, when he hears a knock. Looking out, he sees a stranger who resembles David, who beckons to him. He goes out to meet the stranger and discovers that he is David. Fearful that Joan will see David, Galeb leads him to the beach where David explains that he was rescued by a whaling vessel and could not return home earlier. Galeb tells David that Joan thinks him dead and that they are married. He demands that David go away. They argue and start a fight. Galeb attempts to stab David. David disarms him and is about to kill him when the child, who has been looking for her "Daddy," rushes in, calling to David not to "hurt her Daddy." David is stunned and Galeb taking advantage of the child's remark, asks David to go away for the sake of his child and Joan's. David consents to go.

Joan, who has been looking for the child, overhears the lie and rushes toward Galeb, demanding to know whom he has been talking to. She forces Galeb to admit that it was David and taking the child from him, she runs after David, calling to him that Galeb has lied. David hears her and stops. She tells David that the child is his and asks him to return. Galeb sees that he has lost Joan and leaves, as David takes her and the child in his arms.

OLD MOTHER GRAY (July 21).—Mother Gray, the "mother" of the neighborhood, keeps the little toy and notion shop. Madge is the newsgirl on the corner and Dan the handsome, big policeman who patrols the beat and makes the children "move on" to school when the enticing display in Mother Gray's window allures them to hesitate too long.

It is Madge who discovers that Mother Gray is an heiress. While she and Dan are encouraging the old lady to go to the lawyers, Peter, Mother Gray's no-good nephew, and his wife, Maude, appear. They assume immediate control of Mother Gray and later of her fortune, establishing her and themselves in a pretentious mansion. Then they conceive the diabolical plan of having sweet Mother Gray adjudged insane. But Mother Gray, with all her simple-heartedness, thwarts this scheme. Madge comes to the rescue, bringing Dan with her, and Mother Gray is given an opportunity to spend her money in her own way -making little children happy.

HER FAIRY PRINCE (July 26).—Violet, a lonely little rich girl, discovers Jim, a convict, in her attic playroom. He tells her that he is a fairy prince, whom wicked dwarfs have transformed into a striped zebra. She "changes him back" by giving him clothes from her father's wardrobe. Also, she brings him food, and he entertains her with wonder stories of his own invention. That night, Violet is roused from sleep by voices in the library. Her father, a noted judge, is discussing a case with Attorney Vane, who is trying to bully the Judge into agreeing with his verdict. Violet enters. Instantly Vane, springing forward, places a revolver at the child's head. "Agree—or I fire!" he cries. A long arm from behind snatches Violet to safety, and somebody grips the attorney by the collar. Vane is hastily ejected from the house. Then Violet, the Judge and Jim, the convict, once unjustly accused by Vane, are left to talk matters over together.

AT THE POSTERN GATE (July 9).—At the postern gate, Antoinette and Argyle meet in secret. There, also, twenty-five years before, Louise and Jacques, the mother of the girl and the father of the boy, kept their rendezvous. Then, on the eve of their marriage Jacques deserted Louise for a wealthy bride preferred by his family. Louise also married another. But always her heart has been filled with bitterness against her girlhood sweetheart. Louise now determines that Antoinette shall marry the rich young Philippe. Philippe warns the girl's mother that Antoinette is meeting Argyle in secret. Phileppe, proving a coward, Louise garbed as a man, challenges Argyle to a duel. But the son of her old lover sees through her disguise and does not thrust back. Antoinette intervenes just in time to save her sweetheart's life. Louise, her vengeance spent, becomes reconciled with Jacques, and the young people are married.

THE ARROW MAIDEN (July 12)—The Arrow Maiden is to become the wife of the Indian, who by his prowess at the games, proves himself the better man. Eagle Eye, thought to be the most expert, is the one rival of Brave Heart, the one whom the girl loves, but Eagle Eye does not win and the Chief awards the girl to Brave Heart, much to their happiness. The tribe's medicine woman, Dove Eye, has aroused the anger of the Chief, so that when Eagle Eye comes to her and asks her to cast a charm over Brave Heart as he sleeps before the tent of his affianced bride the old woman does as he requests, and the next day the weeping girl follows th body of her lover to the grave.

Then the Medicine Woman learns of the perfidy of Eagle Eye, for he has had himself made Medicine Man in her stead, and now intends winning the girl. Arrow Maiden seeks the deposed Medicine Woman, who now realizes that she is responsible for the great sorrow that has come to the girl, determines to help Arrow Maiden, and at the same time revenge herself upon Eagle Eye. Meeting the maiden at the burying place of Brave Heart, she by her magic, awakens him from the spell she cast over him. Eagle Eye having followed the Maiden, arrives in time to see the two lovers embrace and is terror-stricken at sight of Brave Heart. This youth gives the evil one but short notice to defend himself before hurling him over the cliffs to the sea beneath. To the amazement of the Chief and tribe, who come to chant the death watch beside the body of Brave Heart, they see him, "risen from the dead" and Arrow Maiden, pledging their love to each other.

DOMINO.

THE MAN WHO WENT OUT (Two Parts—July 22.—Capt. Edwin Graham, a genial, likable man, but a heavy drinker, awaits the arrival of his son, James, at the fort, where his uncle, the Colonel, has obtained him an appointment. Meanwhile, the Captain disobeys orders to the effect that no one shall leave the fort because of a threatened Indian attack. Out of whiskey, he sneaks away to the settlement saloon. There, next morning, his brother, the Colonel, finds him, and gives him his choice between being tried before a Court Martial or leaving the region forever. Captain Edwin disappears. His son, when he arrives, is told that his father died in a battle with the Indians. Two years later, the Captain, hungry for a glimpse of his son, returns. It is the night of Lieutenant James' wedding. The Colonel hides his brother in a closet, from which he can watch the ceremony. The Indians attack the fort and besiege it for days. They promise to depart if the white men will surrender to them one of their officers. Lots are drawn, and young James gets the fatal card. His father begs to be allowed to go in his place. At last, the Colonel consents. He slips his brother out to the Indians, who leave at dawn. At the fort it is supposed, simply, that the enemy has given up the siege.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE FOX WOMAN (Majestic—Four Parts—July 15).—A Japanese artist, a hunchback, with a gentle soul, weds the daughter of his friend. He and Jewel are happy till the niece of an American missionary, a vampire-like sculptress, who looks on the Japs as soulless heathens, persuades the Jap artist to pose for her because he is so grotesque and crooked. He does so, assuming exaggerated attitudes, and in the end his infatuation leads him to give the woman his wife, Jewel, as a servant. She becomes the maid of all work in the missionary's home. Her own and her father's entreaties fail to persuade the artist to take her back. Her father declares to the artist that he has lost his soul to the Fox Woman (the Jap name for a vampire) and suggests that he commit suicide according to the custom of the Japanese. The artist, infuriated, attacks the old man, but restrains himself in time to prevent serious harm.

Jewel, throwing aside the American clothes that have been forced on her, dresses herself in her wedding robes and goes to the shrine of her ancestors where she kneels in prayer, preparatory to killing herself. Meanwhile her father shines up a pole and enters the bedroom of the Fox Woman. Surprised and frightened, the Fox Woman backs out another window and falls to the ground, mortally injured. When her soul leaves her, that soul she had absorbed, the artist's, returns to him, and, horrified at the memory of all he has done, he rushes out in search of his wife. He is in time to save little Jewel's life and they live happily ever after.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 54 (Released Wk. of July 7).—The entrance of the Allies' fleet into the Dardanelles.

In grim, majestic line the great ships steam through the straights past the forts, most of whose guns already have been silenced.

The ships proceed so close to one another that most of the signalling can be done by sailors who wave their arms at the rail.

Occasionally, however, signals must be transmitted to vessels far away from the flagship. Then the signal flags are unfurled.

Here and there among the massive dreadnaughts swift little torpedo boats dart about——and the submarines move along, alternately diving and rising to the surface, under the protection of the larger vessels.

Now and then a great boom is heard as the lookout on one of the warships sights moving figures at one of the forts and directs a gunner to try a shot at the enemy.

Above the ships a scouting aeroplane soars, the pilot closely observing the situation of the shore, and often dropping to flash the information he has gathered to the commanders of the ships.

Philadelphia, Pa.—With a patriotic celebration in Independence Square to mark its departure, the Liberty Bell starts on its journey to San Francisco, which it will be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Sub-titles—The relic, which weighs more than a ton, is swung by a crane aboard the especially constructed car on which it will make the journey. On the trip the bell will be on exhibition at all times. Electric lights have been placed above it on the car to make it visible at night.

Glen Cove, N. Y.—Frank Holt, the former college instructor who shot J. P. Morgan, the banker, at the latter's home here, is arraigned before Justice Luyster in the Glen Cove court house. Sub-titles—Holt is led into the Nassau county jail at Mineola. Holt at the Mineola jail in charge of Constable McCahill and Deputy Sheriff Campbell. He is said to be Erich Muenter, wife murderer, and former instructor in German at Harvard. Wreckage in the Senate Chamber at the National Capitol in Washington, caused by the explosion of a dynamite bomb which, it is said, Holt confessed placing there.

Pathe's American Fashions—Advance models in hats. (Courtesy of A. R. Jordan, Inc., New York).

The Manhattan—The net brim and its trimming of paradise sprays give a striking appearance to this hat.

The Twin Sailor—Two brims and lobster plumage are features of this model.

The Boy Scout—The simplicity of this creation obtained its instant success in Paris.

The Long Beach—This is a large picture hat of miracle velvet which derives its effect from the drooping plume.

The D'Annunzio—The very latest Paris craze, an adaptation of the Italian soldier's picturesque plumed hat.

Gary, Ind.—The Liberty Bell, continuing its triumphal journey across the continent to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, is greeted by a tremendous crowd on its arrival here. Subtitles: School children are lifted to the car by the Philadelphia policemen who are guarding the Bell and permitted to touch and kiss it. The crowd waves a farewell as the car carrying the Bell proceeds to Chicago. The arrival at Chicago is made late in the day, so the festoons of electric lights that hang about the Bell are lighted to permit the people to obtain a glimpse of the relic.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 31—"The War Cloud"—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of July 26).—Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, who is endeavoring to mine America's principal bridges and harbors, receives war munitions in a deserted hotel on the Atlantic Coast. Elaine Dodge, whose sweetheart, Craig Kennedy, has mysteriously disappeared, receives an invitation for herself and friends to join in a fox hunt at the Wilkeshire Country Club. Elaine, Del Mar, Aunt Josephine and Jameson assemble with others of the Wilkeshire Country Club, but just before the start, Del Mar receives an urgent message from his valet, and leaves the rest hurriedly for his storehouse. Elaine gets lost and strays off near the site of the old hotel, or storehouse, in which Del Mar, now disguised in a diver's helmet, stores his contraband. She peeks in at a window on the ground floor, and is immediately spied by Del Mar, who orders her arrest. He learns that his men have another prisoner upstairs, and orders that he be brought down. This prisoner is a mysterious tramp, very much resembling the Mysterious Mr. X. of the previous episodes. He overpowers Del Mar's servant, and taking his clothes, gives them to Elaine, who quickly dons them, and in the disguise starts from the house. She has almost made good her escape, when her hat is blown off, through a clump of bushes. She then scrambles down a deep ravine, the sentry coming after her. Just as she reaches the bottom in a sensational slide, the sentry comes up with her and is about to recapture her, when Jameson, following the hounds in the fox hunt, rides up and with his riding whip knocks the man senseless. The "Tramp" makes his escape and, mounting Del Mar's horse, gallops off to Fort Dale, where he whispers a few words to Lieut. Woodward. Followed by a troop of cavalry, they rush off to Del Mar's storehouse. With the aid of a pair of field glasses, he sees them coming, and arms himself and his companions with chlorine gas bombs. The troops of cavalry arrive, and are met by Del Mar and his men, armed with the deadly chlorine gas bombs.

THE POLICE DOG GETS PIFFLES IN BAD (Rel. Wk. of July 19).—The Police Dog, snooping around, comes on a familiar scent and follows the whiff of an old acquaintance to—a butcher shop! The Senegambian presiding shies a ham-bone at him. There's no "bone-work" about the Pup's catching ability, however, and he scampers off to gnaw at leisure. He meets up with a mastiff, who takes charge of the bone, much to the Pup's sorrow and righteous anger. Meantime, the butcher, hearing a noise outside, and thinking it to be the recurrent Pup, flings out a weighty bone that knocks a cop senseless. The Pinkerton Pup chases the mastiff into a large water-main, buf comes out considerably mussed. It was a "pipe" for the mastiff, who runs from there into a watchman's shanty. The Pup blows three shrill blasts that wake Officer Piffle on his beat. Piffle rushes in, and is tipped off by the Pup that a thief lurks within. Piffle rushes in—and when he rushes out again, it is with great speed, and in full dress—for a Turkish bath. But in the scuffle, the Pinkerton Pup manages to connect with the bone, and is last seen cavorting brightly on for parts unknown.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (Third Installment On Same Reel as Foregoing).—Here are seen crows, seeking their nests after a day's foraging. The tomtit, known as the "farmers' friend," searches the fruit trees for the grubs with which it feeds its young. Its ravenous brood presents no great difficulty to the resourceful mother-bird. As soon as she arrives with a tempting morsel, the whole nest is aquiver. As soon as they are fledged, they assemble for their first flight. Here is shown the poor little tomtit, unable to follow the others, calling in vain for the mother-bird, who must, however, keep company with the strong. Grateful to the tomtit for the service it renders, many fruit growers provide them with retreats. This film is intimate in every sense of the word, for the birds are unconscious that their domestic affairs are being recorded.

SAFETY FIRST (Rel. Wk. of July 19).—Heine and Louie brood over their wrongs on a cliff overhanging the sea. The slosh and sozzle and foam of the waves brews an awful thirst in Louie, and he starts off with Heinie for a corner oasis. In the back room of the saloon the sensitive pair get in an altercation with the bartender, and suddenly find themselves making a hurried exit through an open window. Louie collides with a beautiful lady who appeals to Heine for protection. Heine, smitten with the fair one's charms, and seeing a chance to strengthen his position by squelching Louie, calls a cop.

Heine escorts the "vision" home. He is annoyed at being interrupted by her husband, but not nearly so annoyed as her husband. He takes a firm grip on Heine's coat collar and the largest part of his trousers and rushes him head on against the front wall of the house, which caves in from the force of the contact. Heine rises and runs, followed by hubby and a howling mob. Meantime, Louie, chased by a cop, has also acquired a "following." Heine and Louie, coming from opposite directions, have a totally unexpected meeting, but manage to pick themselves up and sneak off just as their respective followings smash up on the corner. Louie, seeing the road clear, suggests something tall and cool, but Heine seeks shelter under a convenient rug, voting for SAFETY FIRST.

IN HUMBLE GUISE (Balboa—Two Parts—Released week July 12.)—Grace Hunt quarrels and breaks her engagement with Hubert West. To try and forget, she goes to a summer hotel for a short stay. Helen Travis, who is working her way through college, has planned to spend her vacation waiting on table at this same hotel. By mistake, Grace's trunk is put in Helen's room, and vice versa. On Grace's suggestion, they change places for a week. Helen becomes very popular amongst the hotel guests, with her pretty ways and lovely clothes. Ned Cummings in particular finds her very attractive. Ned proposes, but Helen dares not accept. There is a big ball that night. Grace tells Helen, when she meets her on her way to the ballroom, that she is going straight to bed. Ned proposes again to Helen, but just then a page comes rushing in and cries FIRE! It is the servants' annex. Helen finds Grace in a heap on the floor of her room and rescues her, but is badly burned herself. Grace takes Helen home with her. Ned calls, and Helen tells him the story of the way she has been deceiving him, and that her fine clothes were borrowed plumage. Ned is glad that she is just Helen Travis, and Helen is glad of that. Hubert West visiting Grace's home, sees Ned and Helen embracing, and deceived by the bandages, is made furious at the thought of Ned kissing Grace. Ned and Helen then spy him, and he is almost hysterical with joy to find it is not Grace loving another man. Grace is sitting in an easy chair by the window in the next room. Hubert tiptoes up to her, kisses her, and their little disagreement is patched up forever.

LAUGHING GAS (Starlight—Released week of July 12.)—Laughing gas escapes and gets right down into the audience. Heinie and Louie see to that. The usually impecunious Louie tries to look unconcerned with money sticking out of his every pocket. Heinie tries to get in "touch" with Louie, but the modern Monte Cristo learned his English in a different school. All Louie will lend is his ear, which Henine proceeds to fill with questions, the burden of which is, "where did you get it?—what are you going to do with it?" To which Louie answers, "I made idt. It looks real, nichtwahr? I vas going tzoon to haf gwide a bull vith efer tzo much beoples. Chust tdo your pest tdo look your voorst und ve can poth pe bainless, nein?"

Heinie agrees to try, and Louie exchanges his counterfeit cash for a dental parlor. Business starts with a toothsome flapper who's had a dog's life of it with her canines. Louie thinks some gas will make his job lighter, and proceeds to turn it on. He's no piker, this Louie, and soon has the flapper effectually asleep. But the gas, tired of its cramped life and desirous of escaping, blows the top out of its container, and playfully does some denting on its own account. The former proprietor discovers Louie's money is home made and comes back to get it changed. On the way, he falls in with a squad of police, and together they make for the parlor, where, with the young flapper's sweetheart they start to "treat" the gasmen in the good old painful way. The cops suggest a lead filling, but Heinie and Louie, remembering the gas, make good their escape.

LOURDES (Picturesque France)—(Globe—Released week of July 12.)—The town of the famous grotto has always held great interest for all, no matter what their religion. Here are shown scenes of the Eucharistic Congress held at the little French town last year, and the various exercises held in conjunction with the event. Cardinal Farley is shown with the American Tourists who made the trip.

BENARES, THE RELIGIOUS (Picturesque India. On same reel as foregoing.)—The famous Holy City of India is pictured in all its barbaric splendor through means of Photocolor. The quaint Hindoo modes of travel, the Ganges, the temples, and other scenes of this spot of the Far East are also pictured.

RURAL ANDALUSIA (Picturesque Spain. On same reel as foregoing.)—Many of the peculiar customs of the interesting people of this quaint part of Spain are shown in all their picturesqueness. In addition samples of the natural beauties for which this place is world-famous are pictured.

IN THE MESH OF THE NET (Balboa—Three Parts—Released week of July 12.)—Joel Barton, division chief of the U. S. Secret Service, receives a letter from Washington advising him that Captain Royal will receive a shipment of contraband on Aug. 12th, and advising him to get busy. Barton puts Halsey Merrick and Robert Taylor, of the U. S. Secret Service, on the case. Captain Royal's wife, Leona, does not know the source of her rich husband's income, and when she learns it refuses to accompany him on his "yachting" expeditions. She is made a prisoner by her domineering husband, however, and so becomes an unwilling accessory. In the smuggler's cave, Leona rebels and is promptly threatened with force by her brute husband. In attempting to shield the wife, one of the smugglers is beaten unconscious and dropped into the sea by Royal and his followers. He is rescued by Merrick and Taylor, cruising around the mouth of the cave, and in a spirit of vengeance tells all he knows of Royal and his crooked game. Merrick and Taylor get themselves shanghaied by Royal, who is short of men. Merrick sees the position Leona is in, and his pity awakening a stronger feeling, he decided to give her a chance to prove her honesty. She casts her lot with the Secret Service agents. August 12th, the day for the smuggling comes around, and Leona, in a rowboat, rows from her husband's ship with a call for assistance from Merrick to the captain of the U. S. Monterey. After a trying trip, she arrives almost exhausted aboard the Monterey, and secures assistance. The smugglers are apprehended and in the sweep of the government's net, Leona is the only treasure not hauled. However, Merrick makes a cast on land, and with what success can best be seen and appreciated on the screen.

ONCE EVERY TEN MINUTES (Phun Philms—Released week of July 12.)—Mrs. Nagg is an ardent devotee of the great indoor sport of "frisk the jeans." On this occasion the usual bank-note is replaced by a "bill" et doux, and Mrs. Nagg's uninteresting husband suddenly assumes importance as a villainous trifler. Nagg gets specific orders to 'phone his wife once every ten minutes from his office, to assure her his time is being well spent. Hubby goes out with every intention of obeying instructions, and for fully five minutes after leaving his home doesn't look at a woman. This is because there are no women to look at, but Nagg feels noble while he may.

He is only a poor creature of impulse, however, and when a lovely goddess approaches, forgets his injunctions with regard to his promised "once every ten minutes" communication, and goes kiting off with the new love. Her "regular" comes upon them, and a most ludicrous battle ensues, the ardent Nagg managing to get hit harder and oftener than his adversary. Our hero makes off with the girl, and arrives at his office, suddenly remembers he has not called his wife in an hour and a half! He has more important things to do, though, and delegates the job to his office boy. It's a job the office boy has never trained for, however, and Mrs. Nagg soon understands. She wastes no time getting to her dear husband's office, where she discovers his frightful lapse, and after rather a stormy scene with her rival, shows the idol of her worship a woman's understanding of connubial felicity.

IMA SIMP ON THE JOB (Released Wk. of July 26—Balboa).—Miss Marie Spareribs, 'fraid-of-all-work, rises from her hay mattress, with a soul yearning for romance. Old Obediah Martin, acting on the principle that the early farmer catches the summer boarder, rises from his hay mattress with a soul yearning for vacationists. He connects with a hugh trunk that proves a bit too much for him, and goes scouting for his man, Ima Simp. He finds Ima Simp suspended from a hook in a spare closet and detaches him. Ima then shows a flash of remarkable talent for the express business in the unstudied carelessness of his trunk smashing. Obediah Simp then goes through his morning's mail. He is dumfounded to find a communication addressed to his maid, Marie Spareribs, advising her that she has fallen heir to $50,000, which is being sent on. Reggy Martin, Obediah's son, breezing in from Hawvawd, is acquainted by his father of Marie's good fortune, with the express paternal wish that Reggie make it his. Reggie shines up to Marie, who sees his little game, and decides to double cross him. Instead of eloping with him, as per her promise, she dresses Ima in her scenery, and substitutes him. Here the fun gets fast and furious, and results in Ima's making off with the heiress and the "root of all evil."

THE HOUSE DIVIDED (Pathecolor—Two Parts Released Wk of July 26).—Timothy Bryan, a successful physician, is guilty of infidelity after his marriage. His wife takes him to task for his indiscretions, and they quarrel. It seems to them absurd to keep up their pretense of happiness, and they decide to separate. The doctor, after settling almost his entire fortune on his wife, takes their little girl with him, leaving his wife with their young son. Fortune frowns on the doctor after this, and he is forced to give up even his medical apparatus because of his inability to meet his bills. He is forced to do physical labor to support himself and his daughter.

In the meanwhile, Mrs. Bryan's little boy grows lonesome for his father and sister and calls incessantly for them. Absorbed one day in his chase after a balloon, he crawls off the edge of the roof, and in the fall breaks his leg. He is taken by his mother to recuperate in the country. While resting in an invalid's chair on his lawn he is accosted by a charming little girl, with whom he strikes up quite a friendship. When the lad is able to walk on crutches, the two have a frolick that results in the lad again hurting his leg. At home, in bed, he asks for his playmate, and will be humored by nothing else. His mother, frantic, goes to the girl's house. On the sidewalk outside Bryan's shack, she meets her husband, and finds that the charming little girl is her daughter! Their long estrangement has made the parents forget their former grievances, and they know in that first look how deep is their love. The little fellow gets back his "playmate," under whose tender care he soon recovers.

EGGS, AND SOME TESTS (July 26).—Do you know how to tell a bad egg from a fresh one? Can you tell whether an egg is cooked? Probably not, but in this picture are shown ways of learning these interesting things, and at the same time how to make many attractive experiments.

THE SPIDER-MONKEY (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—A spider-monkey for a pet! This sounds rather strange to our northern ideas, but in South America this little simian is a great favorite. On this film we see the animal in its native haunts.

SPIT-BALL SADIE (July 31).—Two girls' baseball teams are about to play for the championship when the captainess of the favorites learns that Lizzie Pinktee, her pitcher, had hurdled to the Feds. She is disconsolate that her one best bet should have allied herself with the outlaws, but a brave handsome man promises to get Spit-Ball Sadie to do the box work for her that afternoon. Sadie of the moist delivery was none other than himself, so, attired as becomes a female, he enters the rifle pit prepared to hurl the game of his life.

The score is a tie up to the ninth, when Spit-Ball Sadie becomes as wild as a left-hander. The manager of the other team runs a pinch hitter into the breach with two down and three on. Sadie aviates just along enough to pass the batter, forcing in the winning run. The twirler is then chased out of the ball park, through the streets and finally lands in a large barrel, where he succeeds in hiding himself from the infuriated females who have learned of his deception. The Peerless Leader of his team saves him, however, by directing the pursuers the wrong way, and tells him coyly that she knew him all the time.

ILL STARRED BABBIE (Balboa—Five Parts).—The wife of Peter Conway died in giving birth to a baby girl. Babbie, the motherless child, grew up to be beautiful and vivacious, her liveliness and innocent pranks were the joy and despair of her rough-handed but tender-hearted father, while Hannah, her elder sister, mothered and idolized the impulsive girl. But Babbie became the wife of a drunken wretch. Her husband died and back she fled to her father's arms. Hannah learned to love Ned Higgins, a newcomer, who at first did not like Babbie, but later found himself captivated by her artless charms, but the gathering clouds of an impending strike brought Asa Robins, a reporter, to the coal fields. After saving Asa from a beating at the hands of the strikers, Babbie refused his offer of marriage and the newspaperman was compelled to flee the town. Ned's jealousy was aroused by this incident and he unwillingly realized that he loved Babbie. With faltering voice he told Hannah the truth. She was crushed by the blow, but calmly replied, "Then you shall marry Babbie."

Babbie appreciating the sterling worth of Ned, loved him deeply, but for her sister's sake rebuffed his advances and admonished him to remain true to Hannah. At last the strike was declared and the company imported trainloads of heavily armed guards to protect the mine property. Egged on by Dominick Kenelly, a drunken miner, the strikers prepared to attack the newcomers, but Babbie foreseeing its fatal consequences, summoned the priest, who averted the clash and rebuked the intoxicated leader. Enraged because Babbie foiled his plan, Kenelly attacked her in a lonely glen, and if it had not been for the timely interference of Ned, the girl would have been severely beaten. Ned again uttered his pleas, but Babbie remained unmoved. While crossing a railroad trestle, they were overtaken by an onrushing train. Seizing Babbie, he leaped and was rendered unconscious while Babbie was unhurt. She looked into his face and murmured, "Oh, my love! say that you are not dead."

Ned opened his eyes. "Babbie, I love you I can't live without you. Give me your promise—" She impulsively threw her arms about his neck in an ecstasy of joy, when suddenly her sister's face flashed across her mind.

"God of Mercy," she cried in anguish, "Everything I touch withers and is snatched from me. I am ill-starred take away the curse " Convulsed with tears she fled, and prepared to leave home to forget her unfortunate love, when she heard that her father had been captured by the authorities and was to be court-martialed and executed. Stealing through the lines she rescued her father, and mounted on a horse they fled under a hail of bullets from the guards. Babbie was hit and fell from weakness from the horse, and for the first time her father learned of her wound. Ned and Hannah soon discovered the two at the roadside. Babbie fast nearing death, smiled at them and taking the weeping Hannah's hand, placed it in Ned's. "I am going," she said almost inaudibly, "my star is sinking, and soon all will be over, but for my sake, Ned, love and cherish Hannah, as I have loved and cherished you." Babbie's lips ceased to move, and the little group bowed their heads and wept.

AFTER DARK (Brady—5 Parts—July 12).—"Old Tom" Dalton, whose wife was faithless to him while he was fighting in the Spanish-American war, is making a living by doing odd jobs. Bellamy, the man who betrayed Dalton's wife, is the companion of Norris, a gambler. These two have a young man, George Medhurst, in their power for debt. To save himself the young man forges his father's name, and falls in love with "Old Tom's" daughter. Old Medhurst dies. George inherits his father's fortune and marries Dalton's daughter, Fanny. But he leaves her because his money was inherited on condition that he married another girl, Rose. Bellamy tries to drown Fanny, but "Old Tom" rescues her. Rose restores George to Fanny. Bellamy and Morris, who held the forged check over George to blackmail him, are tracked down by the police, and Rose hands over to George the money he had forfeited by not marrying her. Old Tom quits his nomadic ways and lives in happiness with his daughter and her husband.

A TEXAS STEER (Selig -Five Parts—July 26).—Bossy Brander, the only child of Maverick Brander, the Texas Cattle King, is sad, for Captain Fairleigh Bright, to whom she is engaged, has received an official order transferring him to Washington, D. C. Major Yell is the political Boss of the Texas county, and he tells his henchmen, Bragg and Blow, "We've got to find somebody to run for Congress." Captain Bright overhears the conversation and believes he sees an opportunity to induce the Branders to reside in Washington. Bright suggests to Yell that Maverick Brander is the man for Congressional honors. Yell, Bragg and Blow visit the Branders' ranch house and inform Maverick Brander "that the voice of the people is calling him to Washington." The proposition is ridiculed by Brander, who says that he will go to his mines in Mexico until after the election. Bossy, who wants to go to Washington, tells Major Yell: "We'll elect him while he's away. I've the right to sign checks for him, and I'll give you thirty thousand dollars for campaign expenses. That's $5 apiece for six thousand votes in this district." Yell takes the money and, encountering Mr. Fish, a gentleman of color, tells him that if he will cast the colored vote for Brander he'll be appointed Minister to Dahomey.

On the evening of election day, Maverick Brander arrives home and is congratulated by the assembled multitude. Brander is furious, but after an affray with Yell, agrees to serve. Captain Bright leaves the next day for Washington after taking tender farewell of Bossy, who tells Bright that she fears when he meets all the Washington society girls, he will forget all about her. Captain Bright disdains even the thought of such a possibility. The next few weeks are busy ones for the lady members of Maverick Brander's family, for they plan all sorts of gowns with which to overcome the social elite of Washington. Finally they leave for Washington. When Washington is reached, troubles multiply for the Branders. At home amidst herds of grazing cattle, but decisively not at home in the artificial life of a large city, Maverick Brander is victimized right and left. In the meantime, Mrs. Brander and Bossy somehow realize that the gowns they had prepared in Texas with so much care are somewhat different in appearance and texture to those gowns worn by Washington ladies. Captain Bright calls and escorts Mrs. Brander and Bossy to dinner. He sees their wonderful dresses and stammering out a hasty excuse, he beats a retreat. Bossy refuses to recognize Captain Bright thereafter, much to his disconsolation. Mr. Fish, now that Maverick Brander has been elected Congressman, walks the railroad ties to Washington and calls upon Congressman Brander, asking for his appointment, but Brander tells him he does not know anything about it; so Mr. Fish leaves. Mrs. Brander and Bossy read up on etiquette, and an immediate alteration in gowns is noticed. Maverick Brander also falls under the influence of the new environment, and discards his cowhide boots and his huge revolver and appears resplendent in fashionable garments. Another election draws near down in Texas. Maverick Brander's constituents are told that he has been favoring several "graft" bills, and they appoint Major Yell, Colonel Bragg and Colonel Blow as an investigating committee to go to Washington. Bossy Brander has blossomed into a leader in Washington society, and Count Frechette is a suitor for her hand, having visions of Maverick Brander's wealth. The Count is greatly admired by Mrs. Brander, but is greatly disliked by Maverick Brander.

Mr. Fish, losing all hope of becoming Minister to Dahomey, again applies to Maverick Brander for sustenance. Brander gives Fish some money for clothing and promises to find him a job. Mrs. Campbell, Bossy's friend from the Texas fort, arrives for a visit. At an official reception that night, Bossy is escorted by Count Frechette. Bright enlists the aid of Mrs. Campbell, and just when a reconciliation seems imminent, the Count appears and carries off Bossy. And finally Mr. Fish is happy. Attired in a battered plug hat and a gaudily decorated waistcoat, he calls upon Maverick Brander. "Thanks to you sah," he says, "I have received mah appointment. I have the general supervision of the jumping of the waste basket, sah!" The Branders are giving a reception when the "investigating committee" arrives from Texas. Asked for their cards by the hotel clerk, they send up a deck of playing cards, much to the consternation of the hotel attaches.

They are received by Maverick Brander, much to the consternation of Mrs. Brander and the delight of Bossy, who is pleased to see again old acquaintances from Texas. Major Yell, as the lieutenant, tells Brander they have come to investigate his official doings. "And while investigating me consider yourselves my guests," replies their old neighbor. Mrs. Brander orders her husband's secretary to "take those horrid men out and get them so intoxicated that they will be unable to appear at dinner." The secretary does his best, but the Texans appear carrying the secretary, whose valor proves better than his discretion. Warmed with wine the "investigating committee" proceed to fire several joyous shots into the air. Bullets penetrate into the room above where Colonel Pepper, a hotel guest, has a narrow escape. Bossy writes Captain Bright a letter apologizing for her treatment. Captain Bright, delighted and happy, reports at the Branders' apartments. He overhears Colonel Pepper order out a platoon of police. Together with Brander, he aids the "investigating committee" to escape the hotel by means of the fire escape and with the police hot upon their track, the Texans catch a train for home.

THE CLUE (Lasky-Five Parts July 5).—Count Boris Rabourdin and his brother, Alexis, Russian adventurers desperate to make money, have secured a map of the permanent mines and coast defenses of Japan. They are on their way to London, where secret agents of the German government are to meet them and pay a large sum for the map. Passing through the United States they have met Eve Bertram, a very wealthy woman, and are visiting her at her country home. The younger brother, Alexis, determines to secure Eve's fortune by marrying her; but Eve's brother, Guy, a wealthy amateur who is working for his degree in chemistry and experimenting with high explosives, sees through the Russian's matrimonial plans and is angry with his sister for permitting Alexis's attentions. Guy is himself very much in love with his neighbor, Christine Lesley, to whom the older Russian, Boris, devotes himself.

Guy's valet, Nogi, is an agent of the Japanese secret service and by spying, discovers that Alexis has the map. The Russians are to leave that night and Boris, feeling that his own matchmaking scheme moves too slowly advises Alexis to press his suit even if it means missing his steamer; and that he, Boris, will go to London and negotiate with the agents. Alexis reluctantly gives Boris the map. Guy and Christine quarrel about Boris's attentions to her. Boris gives Christine an old Russian coin as a keepsake, which Christine, to show that she doesn't care for it, fastens to Guy's watch fob. Boris leaves early, while Alexis, against the wishes of Guy, remains with Eve, saying he has plenty of time. Alexis is that night murdered in the sunken gardens of the Bertram estate.

The next morning Christine discovers the body and tells Guy. Nogi hears the news and also the telegram Christine sends Boris telling him to return. The country police and villagers trample the grounds, obliterating any marks that might be helpful. There are no finger prints on the body and his jewelry is intact, including his watch, which stopped at 11.05. Eve Bertram, frantic with grief, telegraphs for the best detectives and offers a reward of $10,000. Detective Williams arrives and reads THE CLUE, a Russian coin, and also proves that Alexis has been strangled. Christine is about to acknowledge the coin as the one Boris gave her when Guy stops her with the statement that he killed Alexis. He says that when they met on the stairs the previous night he struck Alexis and threw him down. Christine insists that it was an accident but Guy points out that nobody will believe him and that it will kill her sister. Both Christine and Guy deny knowledge of the coin and Boris also denies that he has ever seen it.

Afterwards Boris tells Christine that he knows Guy killed his brother, and says that the price of silence is that she shall marry him, to which she consents. Boris then blackmails Guy, saying that he knows who killed Alexis. The price for silence in this case is first Guy's money and then his life, which he must take himself. Williams now learns from Nogi, who is anxious to keep Boris around until he can get the map that the coin belongs to Boris. Williams finds clues leading both to Boris and Nogi and guesses Boris just as Christine announces her engagement to him. Guy starts to kill himself but is prevented by Christine, who declares that she loves him and who concurs in his decision to tell Williams everything. Meantime, Williams has left Nogi and Boris together and is listening through the window, hearing enough to convince him that Nogi is the murderer. Nogi offers Boris his freedom for the map. Boris refuses and they fight. Boris is getting the upper hand when Nogi throws a lighted cigarette into the powder in the laboratory. The explosion kills the Russian outright and injures Nogi so badly that he dies. Christine finds the map and destroys it for Nogi. Christine and Guy, the murder no longer between them, are united.

THE ALIEN (Eight Parts).—In order to fittingly celebrate an expected inheritance from his late father, Phil Griswold, a worthless young roue, persuades his friend, Robbins, to steal from his employer, a fashionable florist, the funds necessary to make the revelry even greater. To his chagrin, Phil learns the next day that he has been cut off with one dollar, and thus the two young men are placed in a position from which they realize it will be difficult to extricate themselves.

On a visit to the home of his brother, William Griswold, Phil notices his niece's fear of an Italian ditch-digger, who has come bringing a Christmas tree. He determines to kidnap Dorothy, and manages to direct suspicion toward Pietro. Searching the Italian quarter for the alien in his automobile, William runs over Pietro's little daughter, Rosina, and kills her. Pietro wanders to the flower-shop at which Robbins is employed, and entering to buy a rose for the little girl's grave he is seized by detectives, who think him the writer of the mysterious note which told their client to know the kidnapper by the "Sign of the Rose." A thrilling climax is reached when Pietro threatens to kill the brutal detective in order to return to his tenement home where Rosina's body lies. The suspense is broken when William Griswold rushes in with word that Dorothy has been found. Thus Pietro is allowed to go on his way.

ALWAYS IN THE WAY (Dyreda—Five Parts—June 21). Winfred North, a rich lawyer, through stress of business, neglects his five-year-old daughter. The daughter, since the death of its mother, has complained of neglect and continually asks for its mother. With no children playmates, no one to caress her, she provokes her father into marrying a widow with two children. This widow discovers that the lawyer has left all his money to his own child. The step-mother contrives to dispose of her step-child and succeeds. A missionary couple, about to leave for Africa, adopt the child. She grows up in Africa.

At the age of fifteen she is a little missionary who spreads kind words among the savage natives until the natives kill her foster-parents, after which she makes her way back to New York. The young prospector, who has fallen in love with her and whose affection is reciprocated, follows her to New York. Through his kindness to a former friend of her step-mother, he learns of her true parentage and forthwith seeks her father and acquaints him with the step-mother's crime. In the meantime, the girl is an employee of a flower store and has met her father several times without having been aware of it. After many tribulations, her sweetheart finds her and takes her to her father's house. The father denounces the step-mother and all ends well.

GREAT NORTHERN.

PRO PATRIA; OR IN DEFENCE OF THE NATION (Five Parts).—Eileen Wells is receiving a call from her fiance, Lieutenant Masters, when her father, General Wells, and her brother, Gordon, who is a Lieutenant, arrive bringing the startling news that war has been declared against their country by the Government of Lieutenant Masters, who is the military attache to the embassy of the hostile country. General Wells dismisses him from his house as he is now an enemy. Upon departing for his country Lieutenant Masters returns to bid farewell to Eileen, and she gives him a carrier pigeon so that he may communicate with her. Before leaving for the scene of action, the General and Gordon acquiesce to Eileen's desire to serve as a red-cross nurse. An orderly brings to General Wells's headquarters the announcement that the Prince will, at two o'clock the next day, present the colors to the 5th Battery. This Battery is under command of Lieutenant Powell, who, acting as a tool for the enemy, steals over to the opposing forces to acquaint their commander with the presentation of the colors, and advise a surprise attack at that hour. The traitor quickly returns to his camp. In his own tent, he constructs a bomb, and places the deadly missile in a huge long-range cannon, timing the explosion for the hour of the Prince's presence.

Perceiving that there is a traitor in General Well's army, and realizing the grave danger that threatens his sweetheart's father, after a few moments deliberation, his love for Eileen prevails over his duty to his country. Lieutenant Masters dispatches a note with the pigeon, advising her that a traitor has given information of the color presentation, and that a sudden attack will take place at that hour. Eileen frantically speeds to the front in a motor car, and miraculously eluding the fusillade of the picket, she reaches her brother's camp, and imparts to him the plot. Like a flash he mounts his horse, and rides to the General's headquarters, arriving in the nick of time to save the Prince, his father and staff from the deadly explosion of the bomb. Forthwith a terrible battle ensues, the enemy manifesting splendid heroism, unheeding the multitude of shrieking, bursting shells which mow down many of their number, fairly covering the battle field with dead and wounded. Gradually all the trenches fall into the hands of the advancing army, save the last one, which, under the command of Lieutenant Masters, offers a most obstinate resistance. The battalion of Lieutenant Wells soon overpowers it; a violent bayonet charge follows, during which Lieutenant Wells witnesses Lieutenant Masters' fall. The enemy is repulsed from its position by Lieutenant Wells' forces, and completely routed.

During the interim, Eileen is nobly caring for the wounded soldiers in a field hospital, where her brother finds her, and tells her how he saw Lieutenant Masters fall, firmly clasping his country's flag. Eileen, anxious to learn her sweetheart's fate, induces Gordon to accompany her to the battle field. After searching for some time, they finally come across Lieutenant Masters lying amongst the dead, seriously wounded. They have him placed upon a stretcher, and send him to their home, which had been converted into an emergency hospital. Determined to drive the enemy from their last stronghold, Lieutenant Wells volunteers to blow up this fortress. Up and down snow covered mountains, through the intricacies of barbed-wire entanglements, and overcoming numerous obstacles, he at last reaches the fortress. The sentries guarding the entrance are killed by a bursting shell, whereupon the Lieutenant, entering the court, comes face to face with Powell, who offers his sword to Wells that he may kill him. The latter rejecting the sword, ignites a bomb, the explosion of which shatters the powder magazine, killing and burying under the debris the traitor. Accompanied by strains of martial music, the victorious army marches into the fortress, and receives the surrender of the holding forces, thus consummating a complete victory. Soon after, General Wells has returned to his home, the Prince comes to confer decorations upon him and his son for their heroism. Lieutenant Masters, now convalescing, under the care of Eileen, obtains the consent of her father to their marriage, and receives the praises of the Prince for his services to the country.

THE HEART OF LADY ALAINE (Four Parts).—Ernest Des Tressailles, a young Bourbon officer, arrives with some companions at the castle of Trionville to marry Alaine de l'Etoile. While they are at the wedding feast, Republican troops arrive, but Ernest escapes only to be captured later. He is sentenced to be shot the following morning. He is paralyzed with fear and Alaine, though surprised and disappointed by his cowardice, determines to save her husband at any cost. She entreats Marc Arron, the stern Republican, to save Ernest. At last Marc Arron, influenced by her beauty and his love for her, accedes to her entreaties, and exchanges clothing with the condemned man. In the garments of the latter he sits down to await the hour when he must atone with his own life. Alaine is captivated by his courage.

Marc Arron informs Montaloup, a member of the committee of public welfare, that he has permitted Ernest to escape. Montaloup pities him for his blunder, but Marc Arron rejects all sympathy. When Ernest later on returns voluntarily, Marc Arron refuses to accept the pardon offered, as he wishes to set an example for all true patriots. In the white and gold uniform of the White Hussars he strides to the window and commands the soldiers to fire, while he shouts: "Long live Alaine! Long live the Republic."

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE SPENDTHRIFT (Six Parts). Who has reared the perfect child? Who has successfully combatted the destiny-shaping factors of heredity and environment with a theoretical code of child-raising warranted never to fail? Mrs. Gretchen Jans, mistress of millions, failed. Her two pretty nieces, Frances and Clarice were taught to sew and mend, economize and retrench, not alone in clothes and money but in thought and emotion as well. "Plug up the fountain of youth," was the harsh, Puritanical code of Gretchen Jans, and Frances paid the penalty with her heart-aches.

Hence, when Richard Ward fell in love with Frances and Mrs. Jans refused the parental blessing, the young couple did what most young couples do—set off post-haste for the nearest parsonage. And then into the life of Frances came the great change. A comfortable allowance didn't reach. Money ran like rays of sunshine in a golden stream through the fingers of both hands. Richard couldn't keep up the gait. Bills payable increased with a monotonous regularity only equalled by the decrease of his bills receivable. Credit weakened, the specter of poverty grinned through the office door and the riotous waste of the girl who had been denied continued unabated.

And then came the second man with his offer of money and the trail of suffering and self-abasement that followed in its wake. It seemed all very innocent to Frances but it was tragedy to Richard.

WORMWOOD.—This picture deals with the fates of Gaston Beauvais, an aristocratic young banker of Paris, and Pauline de Chauvilles, his fiancee. Beauvais discovers that Sylvion, his best friend, has long carried on a clandestine love affair with Pauline. An artist acquaintance urges Gaston to comfort himself with absinthe. Gaston in his despair yields. From that moment the wreck of his career begins.

Maddened by absinthe, he denounces Pauline at the marriage-altar on his wedding day, as Sylvion's cast-off mistress. Still driven by absinthe, he murders Sylvion and ultimately his brutalities drives Pauline, now a pitiful outcast of the streets, for she fled her home in shame after Gaston cast her off, to end her pathetic existence in the dark waters of the Seine.

THE PLUNDERER.—Bill Matthews is part owner of the Croix D'Or gold mine. He is beset on every side by enemies who try in every way to stop Bill and his partner from working the Croix D'Or. Chief among these is Bully Presby, who is secretly tapping a low level of the Croix D'Or. Presby's efforts to ruin Bill Matthews and his partner take murderous channels. He imprisons them in the mine by having a henchman roll an immense rock down on the mouth of the shaft. Escaping from that trap, the partners face a strike of their men. Their old engineer is murdered, but his death is avenged by Bill Matthews.

Undismayed, the partners struggle on till by acident they learn of Presby's plundering on the lower levels. This brings matters to a climax. Presby, The Plunderer, confesses. Bill's partner finds happiness with "The Bully's" daughter, while Bill, with a stout heart in his breast, sets out on a lonesome trail to find "The Lily," who has disappeared from the mining camp of Goldpan. "God is good and I shall find her," are his brave words as he sets out on his solitary quest.

THE KREUTZER SONATA.—Miriam and Celia, two foster sisters, become involved, through Celia's passion for Miriam's husband, in a skein of fate which has a tragic unravelling. The play reveals a woman's great soul and at the same time shows that self-sacrifice and noble immolation of a life's desire may not necessarily lead to happiness.

CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO.—Old Reb Shemuel, clinging in the midst of modern conditions to the God of His Fathers, bears blow after blow with unflinching resignation. His son is killed in a cabaret brawl; his daughter contracts a marriage that estranges her from him. His beloved wife dies. But in the end his gray hairs are comforted by the return of his daughter, and his simple and unwavering faith is rewarded in the sunset of his days.

A GILDED FOOL.—Chauncey Short is left an orphan. He becomes clerk in a village grocery. One day a letter arrives. His uncle, who had refused to aid the lad's dying mother, has himself died and left Chauncey $5,000,000. Chauncey hits the high places and spends money like water. But one day he meets a girl—a banker's daughter—who becomes his good influence. Chauncey, by dint of his natural good sense, helps the banker in a financial crisis that threatens to blast the lives of the banker's family. "The Gilded Fool" saves the day, exposes a rascal, and marries the girl.

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME.—This offering deals with life at a lonely army post beset by hostile Black Feet. A craven is discovered at the critical moment when the savage Black Feet have surrounded the post. A volunteer is wanted to ride for aid. It is "one chance in a hundred." Lieutenant Hawksworth takes it. He succeeds in his mission after thrilling adventures and also wins the girl he loves.

THE THIEF.—The story tells of a woman who to hold her husband's love becomes a thief. Marie, the erring wife, pressed by debts, begins thievery in a small way at first. She grows bolder and bolder and carries on her peculations even under the noses of her husband's detectives. A young fool who loves her allows suspicion to fall upon him. But at last the truth is wrung from her.

THE NIGGER.—Philip Morrow grows to manhood in the belief that the blood in his veins is the most aristocratic in the South. "Clif" Noyes, a distiller of whiskey of the fiery brand manufactured for negro consumption, persuades Morrow to run for Governor. Upon his election to the Governorship he decides to sign a Prohibition Bill which means the ruin of Noyes' business. Noyes visits Morrow. He has found papers proving that Morrow has negro blood in him. Morrow, undaunted, makes the Prohibition Bill a law, and resigns his office and sacrifices his love to devote his life to the uplift of the Negro.

THE CLEMENCEAU CASE.—Iza's sinister beauty and its effect on the lives of two men form the main plot of "The Clemenceau Case." Pierre, her husband, she casts off. Constantin Ritz leaves with his career as a talented sculptor blasted. In turn she toys with Ritz, but Pierre saves Ritz against himself. He allows himself, apparently, to fall once more under Iza's spell. As she presses her false lips to Pierre's he stabs her to the heart, just as Ritz enters. "I have saved you for your wife," says Pierre calmly as he telephones for the police.

PRINCESS ROMANOFF.—Princess Romanoff, after a chase across two continents to find the man who killed her lover in Russia, discovers the murderer, only to fall in love with him. But unwittingly she has already betrayed him to the hired assassins of the White Czar. How she saves him, and in so doing narrowly escapes ending her own life by her own hand, makes a thrilling screen drama.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter XI "The Plaything of the Papoose"—Two Parts—July 12).—Blair Stanley, still infatuated with the unscrupulous Vivian Marston, persisted, despite his mother's views to the contrary, that he would marry no one else. Mrs. Stanley decided Blair must marry Esther Stanley, whom she knew to be rightfully entitled, not only to the estate of her father, the late Colonel Arthur Stanley, but the diamond from the sky. "Blair, you must marry Esther," she pleaded, as she prepared for the reception of the guests coming to attend the garden party to be given that afternoon in honor of her son's return from a "business" trip to the coast. "I demand that you listen to me in this instance. Forget the past. Esther loves you. She has told me so." Blair, always willing to please his mother—when he was to gain personally—consented. Unsuccessful in his efforts to sell the Stanley secret to those he deemed financially interested enough to pay his price, Luke Lovell decided to hunt up Arthur. Penniless, he stole aboard a west-bound freight leaving Richmond; but a brakeman ordered him off before he had ridden very far.

Semi-delirious, the gypsy stumbled along the tracks and on across the sand, falling unconscious amid a growth of prairie grass. How long he lay there Lovell did not know. As he woke, he found himself staring at a coiled snake preparing to strike. Beside it was a shining something—the diamond from the sky. As he reached for it the reptile struck. Lovell groaned and sank in a heap. Arthur, returning to the ranch, found him there that night. His crude western treatment successfully held off the spread of the poison from the bite. For hours, Arthur remained at the stricken man's side, ministering to his wants, and when about to depart—Lovell having fully recovered—Arthur placed in his hand a roll of bills, securing from Lovell his promise that he would keep his whereabouts to himself. An Indian and his squaw, the latter with her papoose, slowly making their way across the prairie, stopped to pitch their camp for the night near the skeleton of the horse. And there it was she found a golden chain at one end of which gleamed a great white stone. Its value meant nothing to these children of the plains, excepting that it afforded the laughing papoose a new plaything.

Arthur realizing that the oil wells of California represented an excellent investment decided to desert the ranch. On his way across the continent, Arthur penned a guarded letter to Esther, addressing it to Mrs. Stanley's colored maid. It was a sultry day and Esther, her head afire, sought the solitude of her room. There it was the maid found her and delivered Arthur's letter. Esther read and re-read it. Insulted and pestered by the unwelcome attention of Blair and the spying of his mother, she determined to seek out Arthur and tell him all. That night, by means of a pre-arranged signal, Quabba, ever faithful servant, waited as she clambered down the vines, stretching from her window. Supported by her loyal servant, she hurried across the lawn, stepped into a waiting cab and, with Quabba, hurried to the station, the first move in search of the one she loved.
